PAVLOWA

IN the City of Chicago where PAVLOWA The Incomparable was shown in "The Dumb Girl of Portici" in the Moving Picture Theatres the Exhibitors COULD NOT EVEN BEGIN TO HANDLE THE CROWDS. They Stormed the doors in mobs. At two prominent theatres Police were necessary to keep the clamoring crowds in order. NEVER was such a colossal reception ever accorded a Moving Picture as that given PAVLOWA in "The Dumb Girl of Portici" in Chicago. And there's a reason—yes, dozens of reasons. This production is, without question, the most lavish, most spectacular and most sensational production in the history of pictures. Over 500 people. More than 900 enthralling scenes staged at a cost exceeding a quarter of a million dollars. Produced by Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley. By arrangement with Max Rabinoff.

STATE RIGHTS NOW SELLING

The Soul of the Photoplay

You know the old saw about brevity being the soul of wit. Just as surely it is the soul of the photoplay.

Essanay's one, two and three reel comedies and dramas are condensed to pure essence—no dilution—nothing superfluous.

Essanay picks its short subjects with the same care as it does its features, each for a fitting length.

The action is quick, sharp, clear, concise.

A Policy Which Decreases Expense and Increases Returns

The value of long runs is in direct ratio to the drawing power of a picture.

V-L-S-E from its very inception has espoused runs of two or more days. It has done this in the firm conviction that its product merited, to an unusual degree, such extended showings.

That this conviction has been fully justified is proven in the following letter from the Majestic Theatre Company of Detroit. The experiences related in this letter are typical of those of many other exhibitors.

Detroit, Mich.,

Gentlemen:—

The following letter bearing on the policy of this theatre wherein we changed from running four features a week to our present policy of running one feature an entire week, and the attendant successful results from a box office stand point for six months, may be of interest to you.

The Majestic Theatre seats approximately 2,100 people and was opened April 1, 1915. On account of its being located two miles from the downtown section, some of the Directors favored a daily change in our program while some of us believed in three changes per week. The matter was finally compromised with a change of four bills per week. This policy lasted thirty days when we went to three bills a week.

At that time one of your representatives arrived in Detroit and told him of our plans, asking him if he thought we were making a mistake. He told us that we were but the mistake was in not running the feature an entire week, and he proceeded to give us arguments in support of this. The radical change suggested by him sort of took our breath away, but the apparent sincerity of his statement convinced us and we resolved to give it a 30 days' trial.

At the end of August, considered not a good show month, we found that our receipts had increased $2,700 over our banner month which was in April. September showed an increase of $900 over August; October $400 over September; November $700 over October; December fell off slightly; January $800 over November; and February, according to present indications, will run from $400 to $500 more than January.

We believe that two things have helped make this increase in our business. First, running a feature an entire week; second, our policy since doing this has been to only book features that we have seen first, we figuring that we know the wants of our patrons better than some manufacturer in New York or California. Further, in a nice way we have given our patrons to understand that we have taken great pains in selecting for them only the best of features and we believe that this has strengthened their confidence in us.

We are writing you this letter as this policy was suggested by one of your district managers and we feel more than grateful to you.

Yours truly,

FAW/WS

F. A. Wesbrook.

A policy which is so valuable to many, should be of equal value to you.

What Big Four Features Mean to a Discriminating Exhibitor and His Patrons

PALACE THEATRE

Ardmore, Penna.

V. L. S. E., Inc.,
New York.

Gentlemen:—

The management and Palace Theatre Patrons are delighted with the special features produced by the V. L. S. E., Inc.

Moving pictures have become a most interesting and entertaining feature to the general public. They have developed a taste for clean, enjoyable amusement, which has been our aim since opening the Palace Theatre.

It has always been our desire to find features of pleasing and drawing value. Recently it was our pleasure to sign a contract with your exchange for Wednesday and Friday nights.

In presenting these specials to our patrons, we find that they, like ourselves, more than appreciate the endeavors of your exchange to please and entertain. It also shows a substantial increase in our receipts, in fact, the receipts have doubled and gone far beyond our expectations.

We trust your good work will continue and we feel certain, in expressing to you our good will and appreciation, that our house is only one of the many that has increased its patronage since enjoying this service.

Very truly yours,

FROM GEORGE KLEINE'S "THE MISHAPS OF MUSTY SUFFER"

"I'm Going to Play Them All Over Again—!"

Says George W. Thompson of the Colonial Theatre, Stamford, Conn.

Which is our Notion of the Highest Compliment an exhibitor can pay any picture!
And it's hypnotic. G. W. Thompson expresses a widespread sentiment when he thus refers to

GEORGE KLEINE'S INIMITABLE COMEDIES

The Mishaps of Musty Suffer

Featuring HARRY WATSON, Jr.

No other series of comedies ever received such unqualified praise from exhibitors and critics alike. MUSTY SUFFER is sweeping the country with unprecedented enthusiasm. Every big circuit from Marcus Loew, New York, to the Orpheum of 'Frisco and every really representative theatre in the Union has already played or is now running THESE TEN WONDERFUL ONE-REEL COMEDIES.

AND THERE'S A SPLENDID REASON. A magnificent cast, including the internationally known vaudeville team of Crimmins and Gore—H. H. McCullom—Maxfield Moree—and that dainty, winsome screen beauty—Della Connor! Unrivaled "Sets" plus months of preparation—these are the real reasons that underlie the amazing success of "MUSTY SUFFER."

IF YOU HAVE STILL TO PLAY THEM, WRITE TODAY to the nearest KLEINE office. We can give no better guarantee of their extraordinary box-office merit than the names of theatres now playing them—a roster of the BEST and MOST REPRESENTATIVE THEATRES IN THE NATION!

Facts and Comments

THE MOVING PICTUTE WORLD is old-fashioned in its ideas of reporting the news. The news is printed as it happens. We have no special policies which require the suppression or the coloring of news events.

WE HOPE that every exhibitor in the state of New York will immediately file his protest against the signing of the Cristman-Wheeler censorship bill, which has passed both houses and is now in the hands of the Governor. There was considerable opposition to the bill both in the assembly and in the senate. The measure had a hard road to travel. Governor Whitman will no doubt give the film interests an opportunity to be heard before he signs the bill. It is to be hoped that our representation will be impressive in numbers and in quality.

A STRONG sentiment in favor of censorship seems to have developed in certain Catholic fraternal and religious associations. A good deal of it no doubt has been inspired by professional reformers located at Washington and wholly unconnected with the Church. One of the most convincing and eloquent arguments against censorship was made by Dr. Thomas Edward Shields, Professor of Education at the University at Washington. We believe that a campaign of education on motion pictures might have been conducted within the Catholic Church. We know of many priests who are great friends of the screen and who would have been glad to give the film men a fair and full hearing. A little was done along these lines by one or two men in the industry. To achieve any great result organized and concerted action was necessary and it was not forthcoming.

AT THE exposition of the Board of Trade a special day will be given to projection. No single factor in the industry has contributed more to the progress of good projection than the projection department of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, so ably conducted by F. H. Richardson. May 9th will be "Projection Day." On that day Mr. Richardson will address the producers, exchange men, theater managers and exhibitors on the very important topic of "Practical Projection."

THE highest court in Pennsylvania has overruled the decisions against the Censor Board. Stripped of all legal verbiage, it means that the censors can do exactly as they like. They may make spectacles of themselves before God and men and no power on earth can restrain them. Watch out now for some rare gems of wit and wisdom. Can you imagine the power this decision places in the hands of the censors? It means nothing short of arbitrary power with all the evils and temptations incident thereto.

CENSORSHIP in Maryland is said to be due to the resentment of a certain showman against a certain producer. The showman is an old Marylander, powerful in politics. He wanted something from the producer which the producer refused to give him. Thereupon the local showman registered a vow to the effect that he would put censors in Maryland and that these censors would put the manufacturer out of business—at least as far as the Terrapin State was concerned. It is now whispered in the lobbies at Annapolis that the aforesaid showman is going to be one of the censors. Sounds like that of a knife in process of being sharpened are heard in the showshop. There will be some cutting of films.

THE Smith-Hughes censorship bill seeking to invest Uncle Sam with all kinds of inquisitorial and dictatorial power has been amended but not improved. It contains the principle of previous restraint and is therefore just as objectionable as any other form of censorship bill. We are often asked what are the prospects of its passage in the House. Good, we are sorry to say. The whole censorship agitation has gained through the advocacy of Federal censorship by some of the film interests. This offer of submission to censorship is tantamount to a recognition of the necessity of legalized censorship. That's why we are everlastingly opposed to it.

High Salaries

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

CONSIDER the credit which is derived from favorable public opinion as the equivalent of what is stamped officially in England on gold and silver in evidence of genuineness, a "hall-mark," and we almost immediately get at the secret of large sums paid to certain salaried factors in motion picture production. Designate the general character of work done by certain exceptional directors and actors as their "hall-mark," for such it becomes to producers who are constantly in search of what is dependable in quality, and the whole question of exceptional remuneration can be better understood.

Scientific work in nearly all first-class studios is advanced to such a stage that poor photography is the exception with them instead, as in years gone by, the rule. Improvements are being constantly made, and scientific development may be expected as long as human ingenuity is given a chance, but it has already attained a status more advanced than any department of pure artistry. Pre-eminence is now sought in one of three divisions, that of creative talent, that of artistic treatment, or that of exceptional interpretation as manifested in popularity of certain interpreters.

Very few directors have acquired a "hall-mark" because most of them have been urged to produce in a hurry and to change base metal into gold. It is true that most of them have been very well paid, and it is equally true that most of them have done their best with the materials they were compelled to use, but those who have a "hall-mark" can be counted on the fingers of one hand. Even they, so great are their activities, deeply appreciate the growing necessity of better working material.

In the absence of gold to work with, under the necessity of giving some sort of an imitation lustre to metal that can be had in abundance at low figures, directors deserve all they get. If any one of them has ability enough to faintly approximate at this stupid stage of motion picture development the brilliancy and beauty it is to eventually acquire, the force and charm and influence it is bound to exert when all three artistic departments are brought into a harmony of relation—more than a salary, he deserves a half interest in the business.

Yet it is the new art itself that wins, not its examples. More direct than literature, more natural than the stage, within the reach of all, appealing to those who are slow about grasping the full significance of language, reaching out helpfully to immature minds, opening up an almost limitless field of entertainment for those who watch growth and foresee its consequences with intellectual pleasure, who have imagination as well as critical taste, the new art fascinates all classes. In its strong hold upon millions of people in all parts of the world lies the secret of present great profit irrespective of slow progress in working true veins of gold.

Talented directors may one day be skilled goldsmiths, each with a "hall-mark" on his product. Just now talented directors are asked to be alchemists. They are expected to possess a magical and mysterious power, and they are not to be blamed for keeping up a pretense of having it while they do some remarkably fine gilding, or while they cleverly alloy some compounds containing a percentage of pure genius. But directors have recently been outclassed in the matter of high salaries by some of the types they have helped bring into prominence.

Stupid as most of us were a few years ago about the future of moving pictures, are we not just as stupid to imagine that the present status represents anything more than an imperfect period of growth? As those old releases become present objects of derision, so will our present "masterpieces" be laughed to scorn in a few years. While this realization may be jarring to our present richly-compensated egotism it may, like intelligent criticism, be a tonic stimulant to immediate improvement. We are accumulating a lot of dangerous liabilities in the way of story-directors and story-interpreters without much consideration of what is to be directed and interpreted in the future.

The "hall-mark" has been put upon some popular favorites, and not without reason. They are at least temporarily the real thing. Their stamp on a product makes it sell as long as the public can be counted upon to approve. Most of them are unusual types. They represent something that pleases for the time being. They know of their value and profit accordingly, and most of them have been patient and willing workers as well as survivors of a general type elimination. Through the purely theatrical idea of "starring" an interesting personality, they at present represent the most dependable factor for steady profits, hence, if you please, the high salaries they are paid.

It must become apparent to any one who has the big future of moving pictures very near at heart that we have been working through scientific attainment, and through artistry in the directing and interpreting forces toward an end that is bound to tap some rich veins of true genius in the near future. Our present efforts seem to be those of preparation for something finer to come, a more harmonious relation of artistic departments.

The present scarcity of authors who know anything about the craft renders it improbable that the near future will witness any "hall-mark" of authorship attracting public attention, but it is quite possible for any producer to acquire a reputation for superlative quality, so that the appearance of his name on the screen will be a signal for the entire audience to sit up and take notice. There are now some producers on the way to a pronounced superiority of brand, but that cannot be reached until play, player and play-director are of uniform high quality.

This means taking time in the matter of selection and treatment, and it means a more even distribution of expenditure on all three departments of artistry instead of, as now, excess of outlay on one or another department to the detriment of the composite whole effect. The popular demand will be less and less satisfied with the exhibition of fine interpreters who have nothing of exceptional interest to interpret. This whole business is built upon popularity of a new and delightful medium of expressing something, hence marked success can never be attained without due consideration of that something to express.

Cleverness of style in the printed story, attractive personality in the visualized story, are very important factors in the success of a story, but a lack of intrinsic merit in the story itself, such as vitality of theme, means a limited sale and a lack of that distinguishing "hall-mark" which establishes in the mind of the public, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that the product offered is gold straight through, a guarantee of quality on future, similar products.

Peace with Honor

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE differences heretofore existing between the organized exhibitors and The Motion Picture Board of Trade have been composed in a manner eminently satisfactory to both parties and highly gratifying to the entire industry.

The controversy has developed one fact of supreme importance. The exhibitor is a factor to be recognized. The exhibitor has been an essential link in the chain during the entire history of our industry. The artificial conditions surrounding us at the beginning of our industry have been distinctly unfavorable to his obtaining his proper rights. He was in spite of himself a hewer of wood and a drawer of water or, to use more modern language, a "janitor." This condition did not last long. It was soon found that in every movement affecting the industry as a whole the support of the exhibitor was indispensable. The breaking up of monopolistic conditions, the increasing importance of the multiple reel feature, the tremendous competition among producers and exchanges all tended to emphasize the importance of the man on the firing line. Then came a striking improvement in the personnel of the exhibitor. He became conscious both of his power and of his responsibility. He realized the need of organization. Unfortunately, the cause of organization was shipwrecked when it seemed most promising and it has taken some time, a lot of patience and no little leadership to bring the organization out of the wilderness and desolation.

Happily, the thought of organization had taken root too deeply to perish entirely. Men were found in every state who were impressed with the need of concerted action and today the cause of organization is stronger than it ever was before and it bids fair to keep on growing.

The conflict between the forces arrayed behind the Board of Trade and the Exhibitors' League has not been an unmixed evil. The contending parties learned more of each other than they knew before. They began to respect each other more. Opinions were revised on both sides of the fence. We all realize now that in this vast industry there is ample room for two organizations, one representing the manufacturers and the other representing the exhibitors. The capital invested by the manufacturing interests is gigantic, but it is no greater than the money invested in the fifteen thousand motion picture theaters in the United States.

The Moving Picture World has from the publication of its first issue up to the present moment contended for a proper place for the exhibitor in the councils of the industry. This publication is guided by principles based on convictions. We are not with one branch of the industry on Monday and with another on Tuesday. We do not shift with every wind. We represent the entire industry and we have grown in circulation and in the confidence of our readers because of that fact.

We earnestly hope that the two organizations will always present a serried phalanx against the common enemy. There are many battles to be fought, there is a great deal of constructive and progressive work to be done in the near future. Nothing can be accomplished without intelligent co-operation between the manufacturer and the exhibitor. The manufacturers have realized this some time ago. The exhibitors have received intelligent advice and co-operation in the conduct of their business as well as in battles against the common foe. The exhibitors, on the other hand, have as a general thing been only too willing to come to the aid of the producer in all fights against censorship and hostile legislation.

We hope the exhibitors throughout the country will derive this one great lesson from the recent past: Organization pays dividends of recognition. Whatever achievements the exhibitor has to his credit, whatever concessions he has obtained, whatever recognition has come to him are wholly due to his power as represented by organization.

"Lip-Advertising"

By W. Stephen Bush.

AMONG motion picture exhibitors there is the firm belief that "lip-advertising" is the most effective form of all advertising. I have in mind an exhibitor who owns three big houses and who does remarkably little advertising in the newspapers. He concentrates on his house program, which is one of the most attractive little publications I have ever seen. Aside from that he trusts in "lip-advertising." He takes infinite pains in selecting the best for his program and then he confidently expects the public to do the rest.

"The public then," he said the other day, "never fails me. It warms the cockles of my heart to hear them 'boost the show' on Sunday night. I can then guess the week's business to within fifty dollars."

It's a good tip then to concentrate on your power of selection. There is enough quality in the market today to supply you with weekly or even semi-weekly programs of a high type. Select well and reject well and your audience will be your best press agent. It may cost a little more, but you will save something on the advertising.

Do not yield to the impression that "lip-advertising" is effective only in small communities. I know whereof I speak when I tell you that it is just as effective right here on Broadway and all "its tributary streams." The whispered word in the lobby, the confidential talk at the family breakfast table. the chat in the club makes or mars the play. For it is well-known among showmen that unfavorable lip-advertising acts like bichloride of mercury on any amusement, and especially on film plays of feature length. I have known of extraordinary efforts and of extraordinary amounts of money all spent for the purpose of keeping a play alive beyond its proper deserts. Efforts and money thus spent have always resulted in failure. The best that can be said for them is that they produce artificial respiration. It's like advertising oxygen to a man in extremis. The final demise may be delayed for a few hours, but the principle of life cannot be created by artificial means.

I advise exhibitors and producers as well to get away from the idea that "puffing" is capable of producing genuine values. The judgment of the audience is never influenced by "puffing" no matter how cleverly done. There is no appeal from the verdict of the men and women who compose your patronage. No amount of advertising will set aside that verdict. Get the kind of pictures that will insure the right verdict and "you should worry about the advertising." The quiet little comments of the groups of patrons leaving the theaters are louder than the giant bellows of the "most mastodonic" press agent.

WARNING AGAINST ALLEGED FORGER.

A. G. Shear, manager of the Consolidated Film & Supply Company, New Orleans, La., writes that Max Sokolow, employed by him as a film salesman, forged a check for $25 on a New Orleans amusement company and passed the same on a hotel clerk at Mobile, Ala. Mr. Shear's information regarding Sokolow is to the effect that he was employed at one time by the Universal Exchange in Los Angeles and had worked at Universal City, also that he has a wife and children living in New York City.

Board and League in Harmony

There Will Be Two Expositions, But the Profits Will Be Divided Equally and Devoted to Fighting the Common Enemy—A Brief Record of the Controversy.

THE Motion Picture Board of Trade and the National Exhibitors' League, the New York State League and the New York Local, have come to a satisfactory understanding in regard to the two expositions which are to be held one from May 1 to May 6 in the Grand Central Palace, the other from May 6 to 14 in the Madison Square Garden. Summed briefly, the two expositions will divide profits on a basis of "fifty-fifty," and whatever funds will be collected are to be used in fighting the common foe.

The history of the fight which has now ended in peace with honor to both sides, goes back to last December, when the National Executive Committee of the Exhibitors' League was offended by letters written to the League by the executive secretary of the Board of Trade. From that hour dissension grew rife. An effort was made by the chairman of the executive committee of the Board of Trade to heal the first wound and conferences were entered into between the Board and the League looking toward compromise and one exposition held under the auspices of both organizations. There seemed to be a fair prospect of success until the exhibitors began to feel that the Board of Trade was treating them unfairly. The idea of the Grand Central Palace Exposition had practically been abandoned because the exhibitors had cause to believe that the Board of Trade would come around to their demands in accordance with a promise made. The Board of Trade on the other hand claimed that no such promise had been made. A last effort at harmony came directly from the President of the Board of Trade, who addressed the following letter to the president of the state and local league:

April 19, 1916.

Gentlemen: We respectfully decline the proposition of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, presented to us yesterday in a letter dated April 18, and signed Lee A. Ochs, President of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, State Branch No. 11, representing the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

The following is a copy of the resolution adopted by the Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Board of Trade at its meeting on April 18:

1. It is proposed that the Board of Trade give its support to the exposition to be held at the Grand Central Palace in New York City from May 1-6, and that the board recommend that its members take space in that exposition.

2. It is proposed that both expositions are to be run under the joint names of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, Inc., and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

3. It is proposed that the Motion Picture Board of Trade shall bear the expenses incident to the holding of the exposition at Madison Square Garden from May 6 to 14 inclusive, and that the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America bear the expenses incident to the maintenance of the exposition at Grand Central Palace at the time and place stated.

4. It is proposed that the net profits derived by each of the said organizations from the respective expositions shall be divided equally between both of said organizations.

5. It is proposed that both of said expositions be run by a joint committee appointed from both of said organizations.

Thereupon, it was resolved that the foregoing proposition be accepted subject to the ability of the Board of Trade to enter into the arrangement proposed without impairing the obligation of its contracts with Madison square garden and with persons to whom they have leased space in Madison Square Garden, this matter to be determined after taking legal advice on the subject and after conference with the representatives of the Madison Square Garden.

The Board is now advised by counsel and by the National Exposition Company, with which it is contracting for the holding of this expositon at Madison Square Garden, and by counsel for the National Exposition Company that the Board of Trade cannot without violating its contract with that company and with the persons who have rented space in the Madison Square Garden Exposition carry out the resolution adopted at yesterday's meeting.

The Board of Trade would welcome the co-operation, support and approval of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America in holding the Board of Trade's exposition at Madison Square Garden May 6-14 inclusive. We know of no reason why such approval may not be properly given, notwithstanding the approval which we understand the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America has already given to the exposition to be held by State Branch No. 11, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, at the Grand Central Palace in New York City.

We feel that the Board of Trade, representing, as it does, every branch of the motion picture industry, is entitled to the support of every branch of the industry, and particularly the support of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America in this connection. We also take this occasion to officially declare our approval and support of the Exposition and Exhibitors' Convention to be held in the City of Chicago in July, 1916, under the auspices of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

As evidence of its sincerity and its purpose to promote the interests of the exhibitors throughout the country, as well as every other branch of the industry, the board proposes to share one-half of the net profits finally derived by it from its exposition at Madison Square Garden with the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. Due to conditions over which we have no control, our counsel advises us that this proposal should be made subject to our right to revoke it, but we, nevertheless, assure you of its sincerity and that we have no reason to suppose that it will be withdrawn. Very truly yours,

J. STUART BLACKTON, President.

The last paragraph of this offer seemed bad to the state president. The matter was taken up at a big meeting of Brooklyn exhibitors. Although Commodore Blackton appeared in person before the meeting and explained that the last paragraph meant nothing and had been inserted by advice of counsel as a technical precaution and although the Brooklyn exhibitors had always been favorable to the Board of Trade the meeting refused to rescind its former resolution condemning the attitude of the Board of Trade. Louis Blumenthal, treasurer of the New York local, had the meeting with him when he pointed to the last paragraph as an insurmountable obstacle to harmony. On Friday, April 21, efforts were made to renew negotiations and the objectionable paragraph was abandoned. Thereupon the exhibitors decided to accept the proposition of the Board of Trade, as will be seen by the following letter sent to the Board of Trade by Lee A. Ochs, state president of the League:

Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, Inc., 18 East Forty-first Street, New York City, J. Stuart Blackton, President.

Dear Sir: We have your communications of the 19th and 21st inst., and after due deliberation we are satisfied that it is the intention of your body to co-operate with the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, and therefore we accept your proposition with thanks and we will forthwith recommend that the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America give its hearty approval and support to the Exposition held by the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, Inc., at the Madison Square Garden, May 6 to 14 inclusive.

With the acceptance of your offer we feel that all misunderstandings are swept away and that henceforth it will be the duty of both of our bodies to co-operate in every possible manner for the best interests of the entire industry. Yours very truly, LEE A. OCHS,

President of State Branch No. 11, acting as representative for the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

In the meantime National President Fred J. Herrington had been notified of the action of the state organization and he immediately sent out the following letter:

To the Exhibitors and Trade in General:

We wish to say that unity and harmony of the motion picture interests is not now only a possibility but a fact, and, as president and secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, we give our unqualified support and indorsement to the Motion Picture Board of Trade Exposition at Madison Square Garden May 6-14, inclusive. We are only sorry that this was made possible at this date, but it is better late than never. We appeal on behalf of the National Executive Committee to all of the state and local organizations to do their part in making the Board of Trade Exposition the success it should and ought to be.

FRED. J. HERRINGTON, President.
JAMES DELVES, Secretary.

Mr. Herrington also sent this telegram to President Blackton:

April 22, 1916.

J. Stuart, President Motion Picture Board of Trade of America.

Communications received. Your offer in same accepted. Thanks. Madison Square Trade Show indorsed. FRED J. HERRINGTON.

Commenting on the amicable adjustment of the controversy, Commodore Blackton said:

"I am sincerely gratified at the outcome of the controversy between the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and the Board of Trade. It never should have existed. There was no occasion for it. A little frank discussion between the parties to it would, in my judgment, have avoided it. Now that it is over, I am sincerely pleased.

"It means this: That the motion picture industry has reached such proportions and the interest in it is so tremendously keen, that in order to give the public the proper conception of its magnitude, standing and artistic possibilities, it will be necessary to secure the two biggest showing places in the United States to hold the expositions which will bring these two factors home to the public. Therefore, instead of one exposition in Madison Square Garden, there will be two, one in Grand Central Palace. Instead of one week of motion picture festivities and instruction there will be two weeks. The public will for the first time be given an opportunity to meet and talk with thousands of motion picture stars.

"The combined problems of the two weeks' exposition will thoroughly cover all branches and activities of the motion picture industry. Instead of there being an exposition with only one, or at least two, of the main branches of the industry represented, there can now be no doubt but that all branches, including especially that tremendously important branch, the exhibitors', will be represented in this exposition. In like manner, too, the profits accruing from the great show will be distributed equitably and fairly among all branches of the industry.

"It means more than this, however. It means that the Chicago show in July in the big Auditorium in that city will be a real trade exposition equal in kind and character and size to the New York show if it had been held in either the Garden or the Palace instead of in both. These are the material advantages resulting from the common sense, sane outcome of the misunderstanding. The more important results are the elimination of the suspicion that one branch of the industry is antagonistic to any other.

"It will mean, too, the knitting together of all the factors which have been responsible for the tremendous advances made by the motion picture industry into one homogeneous effective fighting unit, equipped as never before for repelling the enemy from without and for solving its internal problems which are bound to arise from time to time in an industry of the magnitude and importance as has the motion picture of today. This is my firm belief. To do this is the primary purpose for which the Motion Picture Board of Trade was organized.

"This purpose has animated the splendid work done by the Board of Trade to date. It will continue to animate our plans and purposes in the future, and it is a source of sincere gratification to know that all the misunderstandings have been cleared away, that we shall in the future have fighting with us, shoulder to shoulder, the great army of exhibitors throughout the country, and with united front we will move against the common enemy—whether that enemy be censorship or any other hostile and unjust legislation—we are bound to win.

"The final decision and settlement was influenced by the fact that the profits from the joint exposition here and in Chicago, whether earned by the Board of Trade or the Exhibitors' League, will be used for an identical purpose—to fight political pre-publicity censorship of motion pictures."

"I heartily concur," said J. W. Binder, Executive Secretary of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, "in what Commodore Blackton has said. I have during the past three years been a sincere and constant fighter against censorship legislation. In battles to defeat bills of this character, in which I have been engaged from the Atlantic to the Pacific, I have always had the enthusiastic co-operation and support of the exhibitors. If this has been true in the past I am sure that it will be true to an ever greater extent in the future.

"Therefore with Commodore Blackton and every other officer and member of the Board of Trade, I am delighted that the misunderstanding which has existed between the Motion Picture Board of Trade and the Exhibitors' organization has been finally and forever cleared away."

R. PRIEUR IN TOWN.

R. Prieur of the Lux Company came over from Paris for a few weeks' stay in New York. He arrived on Easter Sunday on the American liner St. Louis. He reports that Paul Herneau, formerly New York representative for Lux, was now on the firing line somewhere in France.

Psychologist Selects Screen Star

THE requirements of realism in present-day motion picture production are so exacting that even scientific men are being called upon to select the star best fitted for certain productions. An interesting announcement of this nature has been made by the producers of the spirit feature series, "The Mysteries of Myra." The motif throughout is such that much depends upon methods of intuitive expression. The star must be capable of portraying the emotions of one subject to the compelling influences of a superior will. She must have grace, poise and a personality which will actually reach out from the screen, take possession of the people and make them instinctively, irresistibly, respond to each impulse and thrill with every emotion which the star experiences.

This requires more than screen technique, more than acting; it requires real mental expression.

Few people possess this subtle power, but the selection is indeed a question for the scientist and psychologist to decide. Consequently, Hereward Carrington, the man who wrote the original story, in collaboration with Chas. W. Goddard, was called upon. Mr. Carrington's position in this field is well defined. He has written extensively on the subject of psychology and psychics. As an investigator he won fame by his exposure of Palladino. He is without doubt the most popular accredited man in his field.

Jean Sothern.

Mr. Carrington used various psychological tests upon the various candidates and finally selected Miss Jean Sothern.

In addition to her extraordinary mental powers, Miss Sothern's past work proved her qualifications to assume this task. She will be remembered as the little blind girl in the screen version of "The Two Orphans." In this picture her work rivaled that of her co-star, the now famous Theda Bara. Miss Sothern gave up her stage career, where she was beginning to make a distinct impression, realizing the greater opportunities which lay before her in motion pictures.

Alleged Film Pirates Arrested

Two Former Employees of the Kalem Company Charged With Stealing Film.

ARRESTS made last week after an investigation conducted by officials of the Kalem Company are believed to have cleared up one of the most daring cases of film piracy uncovered in many months. George Hardy and Harry Bode, former employees of the Kalem Company, but in recent months engaged in the exchange business, were the parties arrested, charged with the theft of Kalem's five-reel feature "From the Manger to the Cross."

Magistrate Frothergram, sitting in the Jefferson Market Court, at the request of the defendants' attorney, set the hearing of the case for Tuesday of this week, and released the men under bonds of a thousand dollars each.

Hardy and Bode, who were employed in the shipping department of the Kalem Company, left that film company abruptly in February and since that time have been connected with the Quality Film Service, Inc., with offices in Rooms 601-602 Godfried Building, at the corner of 49th street and Seventh avenue, New York City. Hardy is an official of the Quality firm and Bode an employee.

At the time of the arrests, which were made by Detective DeVanney and McGann, of the Second District Branch, about thirty reels of other pictures belonging to the Kalem Company were found in the Quality Company's offices. The list included some of Kalem's most valuable features and comedies, none of which had ever been sold.

It is declared that the Kalem Company has been robbed of films frequently during the past several years, but up to the present time has never prosecuted any of these thefts. However, the losses have been so great that the officials believe it necessary to give warning to future offenders by prosecuting those responsible for the present thefts.

It is believed that the Kalem Company will refuse to show such leniency to the present offenders as they have done in the past. The company's executives are especially aroused over the loss of the famous "From the Manger to the Cross." Since Kalem produced this picture conditions in the Holy Land, due to the invasion of tourists and construction of railroad facilities, have made it an impossibility to reproduce the production. Thus the value is enhanced beyond estimate, in addition to the fact that the production was made at an expenditure reaching thousands of dollars, necessitating as it did the sending of a company practically around the globe and maintaining the organization in the Holy Land for over half a year.

WORLD FILM AT GRAND CENTRAL PALACE.

The World Film Corporation this week decided that the stars and noted players on its roster, including Robert Warwick, Alice Brady, Gail Kane, Holbrook Blinn, House Peters, Carlyle Blackwell, Kitty Gordon, Muriel Ostriche, Jane Grey, June Elvidge, Frances Nelson, Mollie King, Gerda Holmes, Edna Wallace Hopper, Julius Steger, Clara Whipple, Frank Sheridan, Doris Kenyon, Chester Barnett, Johnny Hines, Arthur Ashley and Zena Keefe, and the other well-known artists whose names would attract attention, will be at the call of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League for their annual trade show at the Grand Central Palace during the entire week, from May 1 to 6, and that they would not participate in any counter attraction, either during the same week or later.

GLADYS HANSON MARRIES.

Gladys Hanson, daughter of Pepton Harrison Snook, and well known to theater and picture goers, was married at Atlanta, Ga., on April 12 to Charles Emerson Cook. Mr. and Mrs. Cook will reside in New York City.

Rialto Theater Formally Opened.

Representative Audience Enthusiastic in Praise of New York's Beautiful Motion Picture Showhouse—Manager Rothapfel Given Ovation.

THE cheers that greeted the momentary appearance of Managing Director S. L. Rothapfel at the dedication of the Rialto theater on the evening of Friday, April 21, were the outward manifestation of the enthusiastic approbation of the great audience gathered at the invitation of the premier showman whose motto is "Go git 'em." Every seat of the magnificent structure—the Temple of the Motion Picture, as it is aptly described—was filled when the notes of a bugle announced the opening of the performance. It was a representative New York audience. Present were not only many of the prominent film men and exhibitors in the East, but leaders in business and in the professions. It was an appreciative house, too, quick to recognize the rare beauty of the lighting effects and quick to respond to the many splendid efforts of the artists, those present in the flesh and those on the screen. There was a wide variety of entertainment. Among the factors were the grand organ, under the magic touch of Dr. A. L. Robyn; the orchestra of thirty-five pieces; singers, solos, quartets and chorus of male voices; violin solo and motion pictures, every last one a gem. There were selections from several of the weeklies, a most appropriate subject, "Scenes on the Rialto, Venice," Beacon; Douglas Fairbanks in a Fine Arts, "The Good Bad-Man," and Roscoe Arbuckle in "The Other Man," a Keystone, produced with the especial view of presentation at the Rialto opening.

S. L. Rothapfel.

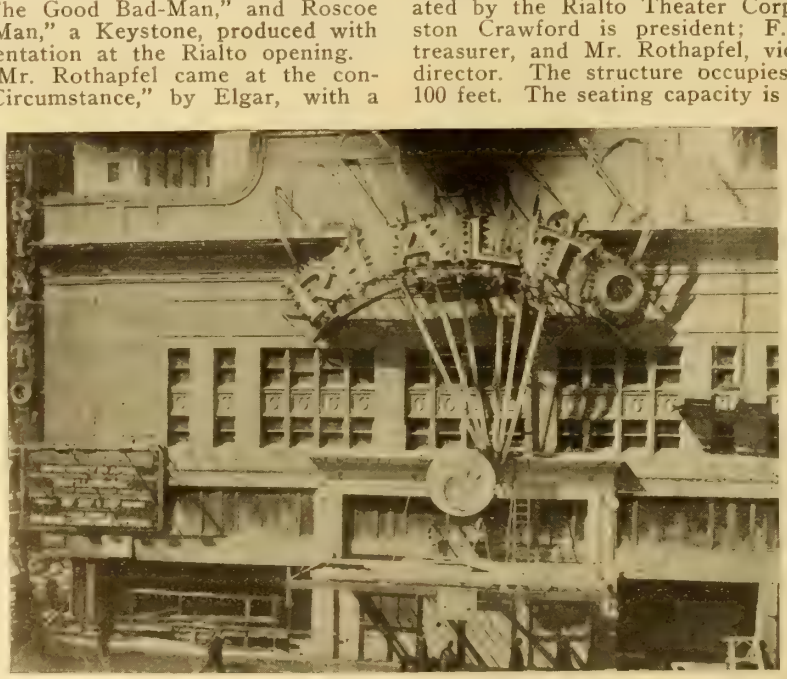
The demonstration to Mr. Rothapfel came at the conclusion of "Pomp and Circumstance," by Elgar, with a counterpoint against it of the national anthem arranged by Mr. Rothapfel and Hugo Reisenfeld. Into the interpretation of it went all that the Rialto contained—the organ, the orchestra, the soloists, the quartet and the boy singers. Three cornetists in military uniform were stationed in front and on each side of the platform. The harmonious whole stirred the vast house as would have the strongest scene in a great drama. At the conclusion Concert Master Fidelman stepped to the curtain at the right of the stage and dragged forth Mr. Rothapfel. The director made no speech. It was not necessary. His work had spoken for itself.

One of the pleasant events of the evening occurred during the showing of the scenes taken at the Actors' Fund Home on Staten Island. There was hearty applause for Daniel Frohman, who was shown fraternizing with the residents of the home. Mr. Frohman, from his chair in the balcony, had the unique experience of listening to the handclapping that greeted the appearance of his figure on the screen. Roscoe Arbuckle, too, present with Mrs. Arbuckle, sat in on the applause that followed his entrance in "The Other Man."

Among those noted in the throng were Colonel and Mrs. E. M. House, David Belasco, Joe Brandt, George W. Broadhurst, J. E. Brulatour, Abraham Carlos, Irvin Cobb, Mr. and Mrs. Roy McCardell, E. A. McManus, William Brandt, Will Smith, R. H. Cochrane, E. B. Dunn, Charles Edison, A. L. Erlanger, William Fox, Morris Gest, J. H. Hallberg, Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland Dodge, Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Blackton, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Binder, Carl Anderson, Crawford Livingston, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin M. Thanhouser, Mr. and Mrs. B. P. Schulberg, Lawrence L. Weber, Francis Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Zukor, William M. Seabury, Archibald Selwin, William L. Sherry, Edwin S. Porter, J. J. Shubert, Lee Shubert, F. W. Singhi, Jules S. Bache, Samuel Spedon, Adam Kessel, Charles Kessel, C. O. Baumann, J. V. Ritchey, O. C. Oes, W. Seligsberg, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Emerson Cook, Charles Abrams, Emile Chautard, Siegmund Lubin, Mitchell H. Mark, L. W. McChesney, L. C. McChesney, Hy. Myer, Charles Pathe, Fred Hawley, Walter W. Irwin, George E. Kann, Marc Klaw, Phil Lang, Sol Lesser, Claude Patin, Nicholas Power, F. F. Proctor, W. E. Raynor, J. C. Graham, W. W. Hodkinson, Raymond Pawley, Richard A. Rowland, F. F. Proctor, Jr., Arthur Voegtlin, Florenz Ziegfeld, and E. J. Lynch.

The entertainment lasted until after 11 o'clock, longer than the two hours to which the regular performance will be limited. This was owing to the special features designed for the entertainment of the guests. Mr. Rothapfel was congratulated at the close of the show on his manner of putting it on and on his wonderful house. In the discipline of the employes there was nothing to indicate that it was a first performance. True, the house had been thrown open on Thursday evening to the men and women who had for the past year been engaged in building it. It was a remarkable evening, that of Friday, by reason of the beautiful house given to the photoplay public, the distinguished audience that attended and the quality of the entertainment.

The Rialto theater stands at the corner of Forty-second street and Seventh avenue, on the site formerly occupied by Hammerstein's Theater of Varieties. It is perhaps the most valuable piece of land devoted to theatrical purposes in the world. It is in the center of New York's amusement district, a veritable hub of the metropolis. It will be operated by the Rialto Theater Corporation, of which Livingston Crawford is president; F. S. Kahn, secretary and treasurer, and Mr. Rothapfel, vice-president and managing director. The structure occupies a plot of ground 135 by 100 feet. The seating capacity is 2,000, of which 1,100 chairs are in the balcony. Every seat carries an unobstructed view of the screen. The property is valued at $1,250,000.



Front View, Rialto Theater, a Few Days Before Opening.

The plain exterior of the Rialto conveys no hint of its impressive interior. The dominating color of the furnishings is red, in the carpets and in the curtains that drape the screen, and the great niches flanking it on each side. These latter provide balconies for singers. Behind these are paintings of land and sea, artistic, picturesque. The walls are in old gold tapestry. Of stage, properly speaking, there is none. The eighteen-foot screen is practically against the wall of the house. In front of it there is a platform but a few feet in depth. The musicians' "pit" is on the level of the orchestra floor. On the balcony floor are the executive offices, the checking rooms and the women's retiring room. Imposed on the rail overlooking the foyer and the rear of the orchestra are flower boxes in profusion.

Back of the "stage" is the giant switchboard which controls the elaborate indirect lighting system—one of the marvels of the house. Here are eighty-five switches which give flexible control over the lamps at the front of the orchestra and throughout the theater. Provision has been made for four colors on the stage and three in the house. There are sixty-six dimmer handles and a master drive wheel, which make possible any combination of colors desired. Of cove lighting there is much. The great feature, however, is the giant chandelier in the center of the dome, with its background of old gold. This is surrounded by sixteen smaller pendant lamps. The marvelous beauty of this decorative factor is seen to best advantage from the balcony seats; to those on the orchestra floor it is hidden by the projecting balcony from all but the lower third. Another chandelier with its reflectorlike background is situated just over the rear of the orchestra, illuminating the foyer, the stairways and back of the orchestra.

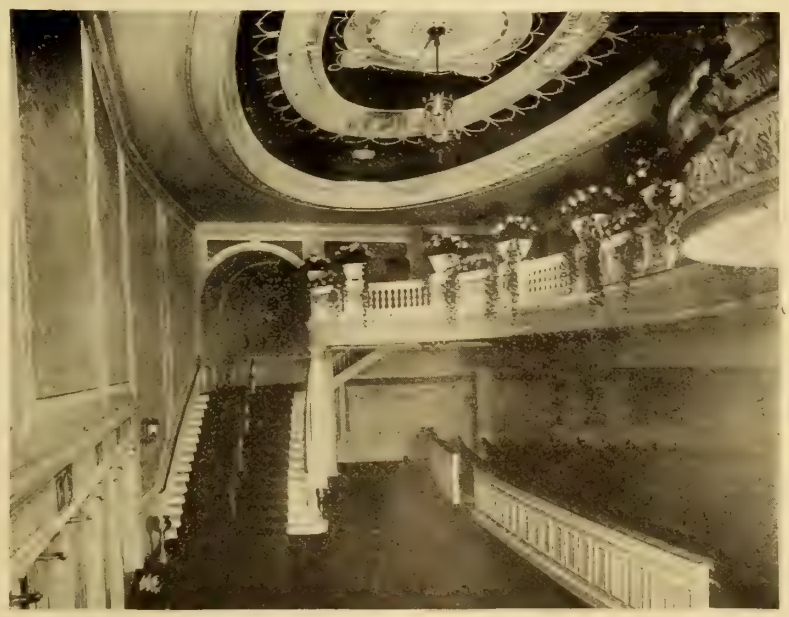
Rialto Colonnade, a Permanent Decoration Employed in Lieu of the Customary Stage.

The projection room is equipped with two Edison Super Kinetoscopes, an enormous Baird spotlight built on designs of Mr. Rothapfel, and a Power dissolver. Two Hallberg generators, the largest in the world devoted to theater purposes, have each 150 ampere capacity and can be developed up to 300. By reason of special control panels the operator may without changing his position at the observation port alter the light at will while a picture is on the screen. It is expected to use in projection from 85 to 100 amperes. There is an elaborate system of fuselink control for fireshutters and doors.

The Rialto will boast the biggest organ ever installed in a theater. Primarily the only portion visible to the public will be the console, or keyboard, the massive mechanism, pipes, etc., being concealed about the theater, and more particularly the proscenium colonnade and the sounding board in the dome above. Here 4,500 pipes, each representing a different tone shade, are hidden. These pipes range from massive tubes 32 feet long and of a diameter that will accommodate a fat man sent in to make repairs, down to the size of an ordinary lead pencil. To operate these two thousand silver electric contacts are employed.

Silver is used by the organ builder because it is the most sensitive metal known from an electrical standpoint. The organist sitting at his console fixes his stops and presses a key. A combination of silver wires is brought into touch and the contact is established through twenty miles of wire connections. The pure silver used for wire tips alone represents an outlay of $750.



Rear of Orchestra Floor, Showing Approach to Mezzanine and Balcony.

The four galleries of pipes into which they release air are governed by the organist through 130 distinct stops, combination pistons and contrivances for control. These are so delicately poised and efficient that the keys are capable of repeating much faster than the finest grand piano. The latter in the hands of a virtuoso has been known to record 28 distinct notes per second. The Rialto organ is capable of 66 in the hands of an expert.

The instrument weighs over ten tons. It was built by the Austin Organ Company at Hartford, Conn. It was assembled at the Hartford factory to prevent any possible oversight and then taken apart and shipped to New York, requiring three freight cars in transit. A superintendent and eight men labored five weeks to set it up. The instrument is a metallurgical museum in a sense, and a permanent lumber exposition as well. It contains five tons of metal, including platinum, silver, brass, copper, lead, tin, zinc, iron, steel, bronze and aluminum. Upward of 15,000 feet of lumber were used, including ebony, walnut, oak, birch, maple, pine, cherry and poplar. Among the peculiar individual characteristics of the organ may be mentioned a section with stops representing strings which gives the effect of scores of violins, gambas, cellos and double basses. This has only one duplicate, the organ of the Mormon Tabernacle of Salt Lake City. Another is the presence of a chime of unequalled proportions, although the principle has been applied on a smaller scale to a number of church organs. It is a tube of five-eighth-inch bell metal sixteen feet long, and weighing 800 pounds. A 24-pound hammer of rawhide fibre is used as a striker.

The noble instrument at the Rialto will be presided over by virtuosi in that field. Dr. Alfred G. Robyn and Edwin Johnson. The former was brought to New York to succeed Clarence Eddy as organist of the largest Congregational church in America, the Tompkins Avenue Congregational, of Brooklyn, and is widely known to music lovers as a prolific composer of light operas and musical comedies. Mr. Johnson is known as an organist of equal attainments, who has specialized on adapting that beautiful instrument to the requirements of motion picture presentation.

The executive staff of the Rialto is composed of Alfred De Manby, personal assistant to Mr. Rothapfel; Ben H. Atwell, director of publicity, who as a part of his activities will each week issue the Rialto, a booklet containing the program of the house, a record of its personnel and interesting matter; Edwin Moscary, treasurer; Charles G. Stewart, manager; Hugo Reisenfeld, musical director; Dr. A. L. Robyn and Edwin Johnson, organists; S. Fidelman, concert master; Lester Bowen, chief operator; George Larbig, chief electrician; Ira B. Scribner, master of properties; Joseph La Rosie, master of effects; Herman F. Innecken, head usher.

The Rialto is a monument to the showmanship of Mr. Rothapfel, a tribute to his constructive talent and to his confidence in his business judgment. That this beautiful home of the photoplay, this last word in picture theater construction, will be a Mecca for followers of the screen there can be no question.

RIALTO DRAWING BIG CROWDS.

The public is thronging to the Rialto. Manager Rothapfel, when asked as to what business he was doing, said it was of record-breaking proportions, so far as he knew there having been but one record of admissions exceeding it, that of the "Carmen" week at the Strand.

Actors' Fund Names Committee

Prominent Men All Over Country Aiding Picture Interests in Raising Half-Million Fund by May 15.

THE effort of the heads of the motion picture industry to raise $500,000 in fifteen weeks for the million-dollar endowment of the Actors' Fund of America is being vigorously promoted North, South, East and West. Energetic branch committees of the National Executive Committee, of which Samuel Goldfish is chairman, are everywhere meeting hearty response in the sympathies of the public. A friendly rivalry among cities has arisen to see which shall stand highest on the roll of honor on National Motion Picture Tribute Day, May 15, on which a portion of the receipts of every theater in the land where films are shown will be donated to the campaign.

The mayor of every city of importance in the country is either a member of the honorary board of the National Executive Committee or the honorary chairman of the branch committee whose district centers in the city of which he is the official head. This board is composed of Mayor Mitchel of New York, Mayor Thompson of Chicago, Mayor Rolph of San Francisco, Mayor Sebastian of Los Angeles and Thomas A. Edison. The branch committees, covering every section of the country are composed as follows:

Chicago.—William Hale Thompson, Aaron J. Jones, James R. Quirk, George Spoor, L. K. VanRonkie, F. M. Brockel, Nat Ascher, Alf. Hamburger, F. W. Schaefer, Mark Heiman, Watterson Rothacker, Wm. K. Hollander, Ed J. Mock.
Pittsburgh.—Al. W. Cross, William Moore Patch, Peter Antonopolis, John McAleer, A. H. McClelland, M. Feitler.
Philadelphia.—Mayor Smith, Siegmund Lubin, William E. Smith, Stanley Mastabaum, Harry Day, H. Schwalbe, J. L. Covington, John S. Clark, S. H. Burbank, H. H. Buxbaum. Advertising Committee, John Spurgeon, James Elverson, E. A. Van Valkenburgh. Press Committee, J. C. Covington, Harry Knapp, Herman Dieck, J. O. Duffy, H. Bonte, Wm. Perrine, Abe L. Einstein, D. Ferris, Q. Quicksall.
Washington, D. C.—Gardiner Mack, J. H. Walraven, J. L. Yates, Fred Haskins.
Boston.—Mayor James M. Curley, Moe Mark, George Balsdon.
Minneapolis.—Wallace F. Nye, S. B. Sampson, Thomas Hanlon.
Milwaukee—Mayor Gerhard A. Bading, Thomas Saxe.
Buffalo.—H. Edel, B. J. Brandon, John M. Sitterly, J. Mulhauser, C. A. Taylor, D. J. Savage, F. V. Hopkins, James K. Morgan, Harry Marsey, Albert Becker.
Los Angeles.—C. E. Sebastian, Jesse L. Lasky.
San Francisco.—James Rolph, Jr., Herman Wobber, Irving Ackerman, Louis Levy, Mark M. Leichter.
Bridgeport, Conn.—Mayor Clifford B. Wilson.
Deroit.—Mayor Oscar B. Marx, John Kunsky, Howard C. Pierce, A. L. Gilligham, theaters; Leo Dennison, exchanges; Mrs. Wm. Martz, benevolent societies; C. M. Orth, exhibitors; I. C. Ritter, drama; Mrs. J. A. Hurst, social.
Worcester, Mass.—Mayor Geo. M. Wright.
Schenectady, N. Y.—Mayor George R. Lunn.
Jacksonville, Fla.—Mayor J. E. T. Bowden, W. J. Johnston.
Poughkeepsie, N. Y.—Mayor Daniel W. Wilbur.
Columbus, Ohio.—Mayor Geo. S. Karb, Max Stearn, Roy Cox.
Seattle, Wash.—F. S. Fountain.
Omaha, Neb.—J. E. Kirk, Secretary.
New Orleans, La.—D. C. Nicholson.
Cleveland.—A. I. Mandelbaum.

Motion Picture of the Home and Its People to be Shown in Aid of the Campaign.

THE thirty-six retired actors and actresses now residing at the Actors' Fund Home on Staten Island have "come back" for the last time—before a battery of cameras. The old folks enjoyed the experience thoroughly, as the patrons of the moving picture theaters of the country will see when the films are exhibited in the various news weeklies.

The pictures were taken in connection with the Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors' Fund of America. Daniel Frohman, president of the Fund, personally directed the taking of the pictures and appears in them. He gave his consent for this public view of the Home in order that the films might be shown in motion picture theaters to awaken the interest of the public in National Motion Picture Tribute Day, May 15, when a portion of the receipts of every motion picture theater in the country will be donated to the Fund.

There was William Gilbert—seventeen years with Augustin Daly—and Ada Morton, the black-eyed, mischievous soubrette of the late seventies, a handsome, sprightly, white-haired old lady now; Fred DuBois, erect and happy for all his snowy hair and seventy years; Richard Fulton Russell, matinee idol of thirty years ago; George Morton, Ada's husband and sweetheart still; E. A. Locke, Lotta's inimitable comedy lead for years; and Nannie Egberts, as she was known on the stage before she married Frank Cotter, the manager.

Milton Nobles, veteran actor and now a writer and a trustee of the Fund, assisted by Mr. Frohman in staging the pictures. He and Mr. Locke had a lot of sport over the proceedings. They went on the stage together under the management of Thomas Davey, Mrs. Fiske's father. John Vincent, manager of Niblo's Garden in its halcyon days, was also in the pictures.

The Home chickens and pigs must not be forgotten, nor Jack, Virginia Buchannan's old dog, who was very busy in the foreground, nor Grumpy, the fat, sleek, old horse which Cyril Maud gave to the Home. It was a great day for the players at the Home and the picture should bring a hearty awakening of the sympathies of the public with the great Motion Picture Campaign.

CHICAGO WILL MAKE THAT $100,000.

Dispatches from Aaron J. Jones, chairman for the Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors' Fund, Chicago, Illinois, to-day announced to National Chairman Goldfish that Chicago has already signed up 150 theatres that will give 10 per cent. of the gross receipts on Motion Picture Tribute Day, May 15th. In this number are the biggest and most prosperous houses in the windy city. "We are sending you these now, but we expect to have 400 on the list before May 15th," said Mr. Jones. Marcus Loew is preparing a unique program for his theatres in New York City and vicinity for Motion Picture Tribute Day that will pack the houses to the very sidewalk. With the striking example of these two energetic theatre owners and exhibitors, is the pleasing fact that nearly 1,200 theatres in the United States have already heartily signified their intention of making Tribute Day a success and gathering the $500,000 for the Motion Picture industry contribution to the Million dollar endowment of the Actors' Fund of America and the Actors' Home on Staten Island.

Lubin May Releases

A Quartet of Lubin Subjects on the General Film Program.

"THE BUCKSHOT FEUD" is a one-act comedy, written and directed for the Lubin Company by Edwin McKim, and released May 1 through the General Film Company. Davy Don is given the perilous distinction of the feature role in a chapter of extraordinary activities in which a mob of maddened feudists seek to use him for a target.

"The Candle," a two-act drama by Maude Thomas and Julian Lamothe, and directed by Leon D. Kent, is released by the Lubin Company May 2, through the General Film Company. It is a tabloid tragedy, with ample material for a multiple-reel feature. An unusual cast in short length photoplay production includes L. C. Shumway, Melvin Mayo, George Routh, Robert Gray, J. J. Colby, Jay Borley, Julian Lamothe, Helen Eddy and Grace Eddy.

"None So Blind," as written by C. A. Framberg and directed by Melvin Mayo, under the personal supervision of Captain Wilbert Melville, is a condensation of thrills into three acts. It is released by the Lubin Company May 4 through the General Film Company. It is the story of a submarine, with exciting work for the photoplayers, including Princess Nona Darkfeather, Evelyn Page, Adelaide Bronti, Ruth Saville, Walter Spencer and Cecil Van Auker.

"Father's Night Off," written by A. R. Lloyd, and directed by Clay M. Greene, is released through the General Film Company by the Lubin Company May 6. One fast act of shouting situations, enlivened by accomplished funmakers, including June Daye, Eleanor Blanchard, James Cassady, Francis Joyner, Hollins Antrim and Kempton Greene, is this picture.

STRONG CAST IN LUBIN TWO-REEL.

A tabloid feature, in other words two reels of compressed drama, portrayed by a cast of the multiple-reel standard, is exemplified in "The Candle," written by Maude Thomas and Julian Lamothe, and directed for the Lubin Company by Leon D. Kent. The valuation set upon the two-reel drama by the Lubin Company is indicated by the fact that the cast of "The Candle" includes Helen Eddy, Grace Eddy, L. C. Shumway, Melvin Mayo, George Routh, Robert Gray, J. J. Colby, Jay Morley and one of the authors, Julian Louis Lamothe.

Vitagraphs for Early May

Two Dramas and Three Comedies in the Fourteen Thousand Foot Program.

FOR the week of May 1, Vitagraph is offering a program consisting of fourteen thousand feet of comedy and drama. In it are found a list of photoplays of unusual excellence. "God's Country and the Woman," a powerful drama of the Northwest, heads the list, and such pictures as "Mr. Jack Hires a Stenographer," "Jane's Husband," "Some Chicken," and the Broadway Star Feature, "The Resurrection of Hollis," lend able support in making this a gala week.

Scene from "God's Country and the Woman" (Vitagraph).

"God's Country and the Woman" is from the gifted pen of James Oliver Curwood, and was filmed in California under the supervision of Rollin S. Sturgeon. This picture to be presented to photoplay lovers on May 1, tells of the strict standard of morality in the north. Beautiful views of the snowy expanses of woodlands, with dog teams rushing to and fro, help to make this one of Vitagraph's masterpieces. William Duncan as Philip Weyman, Nell Shipman as Josephine, and George Holt as Arnold Lang, enact their parts creditably.

In "Mr. Jack Hires a Stenographer," another of "The Escapades of Mr. Jack," Frank Daniels shows up to excellent advantage. Mr. Jack engages a "pippin" of a stenographer, and then gets himself into and out of a lot of trouble. Alice Washburn and Betty Howe render valuable assistance to Mr. Daniels in the enactment of this picture.

"Jane's Husband," another one-reel comedy, released on the General Film program, depicts the troubles of a homely spinster in securing a husband. She finally succeeds in cornering a helpless tramp, only to find him already married.

Scene from "Mr. Jack Hires a Stenographer" (Vitagraph).

Edith Storey is the principal funmaker, under the direction of Geo. D. Baker.

"Some Chicken," another single-part comedy listed for Friday, was enacted by the Western division of Vitagraphers, under the supervision of Dave Smith. Mary Anderson and Webster Campbell play the leading parts and are supported by Anne Schaefer and Otto Lederer.

"The Resurrection of Hollis" is the title of the Broadway Star Feature for the week, which is scheduled for release on May 6. This is a three-part picture, written by George Strayer Maxwell and produced by Harry Davenport. The cast includes Walter McGrail, Belle Bruce and Arthur Cozine.

Iva Shepard in Gaumont Stock

AS SOON as it was decided that the Gaumont Company would increase its photodrama activities on the Mutual program, steps were immediately taken to strengthen the forces at Jacksonville, Fla. One of the first engagements was that of Miss Iva Shepard for emotional and heavy leads. She is well and favorably known for the feature work she has done since deserting the stage for motion pictures.

Iva Shepard.

Miss Shepard was born in Cincinnati, but received her education in Chicago. Her first ambition was to be a school teacher, but at the age of twelve her parents, in a thoughtless moment, allowed her to go to the theater, and thereafter her one ambition was to be an actress. It took little Iva six years to convince her parents that she was in earnest, making her debut in Portland, Ore.

The first picture work done by Miss Shepard was for Selig, in California. Since then she has returned to the stage only twice, these engagements being for four months each. With Selig she worked a great deal with Hobart Bosworth and Tom Santschi, among the pictures in which she appeared being "The Wife of Marcus," "Her Adopted Father," "The Hunchback," "The Coquette." After two years with Selig and a short return to the stage, she went with the Universal Company, first under Otis Turner, and then playing opposite Edwin August in the company he directed.

Since coming to New York Miss Shepard has been filmed in the following features: "The Straight Road" and "The Conspiracy" for the Famous Players, "Northern Lights" and "Captain Swift" for the Life Photo Company, "The Thief" for Fox, "The Suburban" for Universal, "Bondwomen" and "The Crimson Path" for Kleine, and "The Salamander" for the Moss Feature Film Company.

For Guamont at Jacksonville she has been appearing in Mutual Masterpictures. "The Haunted Manor" gave her a star role which she handled with great power. She has a prominent part in "The Isle of Love" which will be released May 15. In "The Drifter" she had the important role of the Vampire.

With "The Jockey of Death" about to be released on the state rights plan, it is being told in the trade by those interested in the handling of the picture that all of the thrills involved in the big feature melodrama were not saved for the audiences who were to sit out in front.

The stellar performers in the picture are a particularly capable pair of European acrobats who use their daring in pulling off stunts which are close to astounding. During the performance of one of the thrills the pair slid down a long wire cable stretched from the summit to the base of a mountain. In everyday life the cable was used for hauling fagots of wood and it was on one of these bundles of fagots that the slide was attempted. When the couple reached the bottom of the mountain they struck with such force that the young girl was hurled a score of feet and injured her knee. She gamely continued the action, despite her injury, but when the picture was finished she was compelled to leave the employ of the company for fullly three weeks.

"The Jockey" is being handled by Signet Films, a newly organized company, of which J. L. Kempner is the head.

Tips on Mutual Program

Week of May 1 Has Some Good Offerings and Several Novel Releases.

TOPPING Mutual releases for the week of May 1 are two Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition, the first of which, "The Quality of Faith," from the Gaumont studios, will be released on May 1, and "Lying Lips," an American production, which goes to the public on May 5. In addition to these Masterpictures, De Luxe, the releases for the week includes four short length features in which popular Mutual players are the featured stars.

Alexander Gaden and Gertrude Robinson, Gaumont stars, who have built up a big reputation and a wide following through their appearance in Mutual releases, are the featured stars of "The Quality of Faith," which goes to the public May 1. In this production Mr. Gaden essays the role of a clergyman, a part which he has been featured in two of the three Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition, in which he has appeared. Playing opposite him is Miss Robinson as a girl of the streets, whose reformation is brought about by the good influence of the young pastor. They are supported by an exceptional company of Gaumont-Mutual players, including Henry W. Pemberton, Lucille Taft, John Reinhard and several others.

"Lying Lips," the American production, released as a Masterpicture, De Luxe, on May 4, serves to introduce Miss Winnifred Greenwood as a featured star of these productions. No better vehicle could possibly have been obtained than "Lying Lips," for Miss Greenwood's initial appearance in these five reel feature productions. She plays the role of "Emily Arden," a Broadway stage favorite, a role that offers her every opportunity to display her many dramatic qualities. Frankin Ritchie, long fixture on the speaking stage and in motion picture feature releases, appears in support of Miss Greenwood, while the cast is comprised of Eugenie Forde, Clarence Burton, Roy Stewart, George Webb and several others of equal note.

Departing from the custom in vogue for the past several months but one three-reel feature will be released by the Mutual during the week of May 1. It is a Thanhouser production entitled "The Spirit of '61," and will be released on May 4. It is a novel human interest drama teaching the meaning of true patriotism. The principal roles in this production have been assigned to Grace De Carlton, George Marlo and J. H. Gilmour. They are supported by a strong cast of Thanhouser-Mutual players.

Four two-reel subjects will be released during the week. First to be released is "Pierre Brissac, the Brazen," an American production starring Edward Coxen and Lizette Throne. It will go to the public on May 1. "The Weakling," the two-part Thanhouser release of the same week, is a powerful drama in which Harris Gordon, Barbara Gilroy and Louise Emerald Bates have the chief roles. "The Weakling" will be released on May 2.

"With a Life at Stake" the Mustang two-part release of May 5, is an amusing comic-drama with a Western setting, which depicts the tribulations of the cowpunchers in a border town when the prohibition wave hits it. Art Acord appears in the role of "Blinkey," leader of the cowboys. Others in the cast are Nita D. Davis and Larry Payton.

May 6 marks the first release of the new Centaur two-reel subject from the Horsley studios, of which Miss Margaret Gibson, who starred in several important Mutual Masterpictures, De Luxe, is the featured player. "Avenged by Lions" is the title of the first production, in which the famous collection of Bostock animals participate in some of the most thrilling scenes yet attempted before the eye of the camera. The story is a stirring one of the jungles.

Mutual laugh provokers for the same week include the Falstaff comedies, "The Skillful Sleigher's Strategy," with Frank E. McNish and Gladys Leslie, to be released May 6, and "The Dashing Druggist's Dilemma," with Jay C. Yorke and Frances Keyes, released May 1, the Beauty releases, "Billy Van Duesen's Ancestries" for release May 3, and "All for Nuttin'," featuring Oral Humphrey, scheduled for release on May 7.

"Bungling Bill's Dream," for release May 7, and "Out for the Count," to be released May 2, are the Vogue offerings to the list of Mutual comedies for the same week. Billy Armstrong is the star of "M. T. Dome's Awful Night," the Cub release for May 5. "See America First," and Mutual Weekly No. 35 comprise the remainder of the week's releases.

On May 7 the first release of the new feature single reel subject under the title of "Reel Life," goes to the public.

Pearl White in Press Stunt

Famous Pathe Star Does a High and Lofty Scaffold Act for Broadway Consumption.

WHILE Broadway stared and thrilled, the Pathe star, Pearl White, on the morning of Saturday, April 15, dangled several hundred feet in the air from the roof of the Gregory Building on Seventh avenue, New York, and painted her initials in four-foot letters on the brick wall. By her daring act Miss White became enrolled in Broadway's Hall of Fame and got lengthy front page stories in most of the New York papers.

To the observer in Times Square the feat looked dangerous enough, but to the man on the roof looking down on her the stunt was appalling. The Gregory Building is the only lofty one in the block, and is flanked on either side by old buildings only two stories high. In consequence, beneath the flimsy scaffolding was a sheer drop of several hundred feet and a vast expanse of blank brick wall with no window to give a sense of security.

Pearl White.

The roof of the building was crowded with reporters and cameramen, as were those of neighboring buildings. On her arrival, Miss White was greeted by a representative of the Sign Painters, Paper Hangers and Decorators' Union, who presented her with a card certifying her election to the union. As she was about to step off into space, Edward Jose, the Pathe producer, who is her director in "The Iron Claw," rushed out upon the parapet and begged her to desist, calling her attention to the risk she was running and stating that the success of the unfinished "Iron Claw" depended upon her. The heroine of a thousand perils and exploits pretended not to hear, and swung herself out upon the electric sign which constituted the only method of approach to the scaffolding, thirty feet below. The wind was in a boisterous mood, and as the sign swayed and sagged, everyone gasped. When she reached the scaffolding in safety, the crowd on buildings and in the streets set up a hearty cheer. A few minutes later she was swinging the paint brush energetically, while on all sides cameras clicked and whirred.

A suffragette flavor was added to the proceedings by the "Votes for Women" scarf over Miss White's shoulders and the ribbon similarly adorned in her jockey cap.

As a press agent stunt it was a big success. Five New York newspapers made front page stories of it, and practically all of the rest carried the story in their news columns in a prominent place. P. A. Parsons, the Pathe publicity man, worked the scheme in conjunction with T. M. Alexander, of the Motion Picture Board of Trade. Mr. Alexander is having a huge sign painted on the Gregory Building advertising the exposition to be held at the Madison Square Garden from May 6 to 13. This sign furnished the idea for the stunt.

Miss White is truly entitled to the name given her of being Pathe's "Peerless Fearless Girl."

GOVERNOR TO GIVE HEARING ON CRISTMAN CENSORSHIP BILL.

The Cristman-Wheeler Censorship Bill which has passed both houses of the legislature and is now in the hands of Governor Whitman will be the subject of a public hearing in the executive chamber within the next few days, the exact date to be announced later. Protests against the bill are being received daily by the thousands at the executive mansion in Albany.

As the bill was passed within the last week of the adjournment of the legislature it comes under the head of the so-called "thirty day" bills, which require the signature of the Governor to make them laws. Failing to obtain the Governor's signature the bill dies automatically.

Harry Myers in New "Vim" Series

Co-Star With Rosemary Theby Directing Comedies at Jacksonville Studio.

HARRY C. MYERS and Rosemary Theby reached the Vim comedy studios in Jacksonville, Fla., recently, and started work on the first of a weekly series of refined comedies to be released under the Vim brand. Mr. Myers, who has an enviable reputation as producer, is directing.

The famous comedy team has signed a two-year contract with Mark Dintenfass, of the Vim organization, under whose management they worked during their long career as Universal stars. Both parties to the contract expressed great pleasure at the reunion. Speaking of his plans, Mr. Dintenfass said:

Harry Myers.

"I believe this is an ideal arrangement which will meet with enthusiastic approval of the exhibitors. We have always been proud of the Vim program, and the weekly release of a refined comedy, featuring two such popular artists as Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby, is a matter for congratulation. Both Mr. Burstein and I consider that we have secured the biggest drawing card in the comedy field, and the biggest bargain, too. This team has achieved a deserved popularity during several years of co-starring, and Mr. Myers is a remarkable director, an artist in every way. Although their contract calls for salaries of four figures, we consider them cheap at the price."

Rosemary Theby.

Mr. Myers came into pictures seven years ago, after a successful career on the stage. He joined the Lubin Company and was quickly recognized as a screen comedian of the first water, although he was at first cast for drama. During his long association with the Lubin forces he began playing with Rosemary Theby, and the co-partnership—one of the most extraordinary in screen annals—has lasted for four years.

On their arrival in Jacksonville, the co-stars were met by a delegation from the Vim studios, headed by Louis Burstein, in personal charge of direction; "Babe" Hardy and Billy Ruge, of "Plump and Runt"; Elsie MacLeod, Bob Burns and Walter Stull, of "Pokes and Jabbs." It was a real welcome, for the majority of the Vim players are old stage companions of Mr. Myers and Miss Theby, having played with them in stock before coming into picture work.

For his first release, shortly to be announced, Mr. Myers has chosen a story which offers opportunity for some elaborate effects as well as sparkling comedy. He practically owned the outdoor stage last week, and this gives some idea of the scope of the work; for the stage comprises 35,000 square feet under cloth diffusers.

No date has yet been set for the first release, but advance bookings have already been received from all parts of the country, especially from the far west, where Mr. Myers and Miss Theby rank second to none in the esteem of the picture fans.

Chaplin Seeks to Enjoin "Carmen"

In Action Begun in New York Supreme Court Comedian Alleges "Burlesque on Carmen" is Padded.

CHARLES CHAPLIN has brought suit against the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, his former employer, and the V-L-S-E, Inc., for permanent injunction against the distribution of "Charlie Chaplin's Burlesque on Carmen." The actor charges that the picture as originally made by him was in two reels of one thousand feet each and that it is being released in four "padded" reels of such quality as seriously to injure his fame.

An "order to show cause" directed against Essanay and the V-L-S-E has been signed by Justice Nathan Bijur in the Supreme Court of New York. The comedian is represented by Nathan Burkan, attorney. The application for injunction is accompanied by a long affidavit signed by Sidney Chaplin, brother and agent of Charles Chaplin, setting forth the facts relating to the making of the burlesque on "Carmen," and citing the adverse criticisms of the production which appeared in newspapers, dramatic and motion picture publications.

Chaplin charges that the release of the picture in four reels is unlawful and a violation of his contract with the Essanay company. This contract is made an exhibit in the action.

Chaplin avers that his rights both as an actor, a producer and an author are violated by the four-reel "Carmen." The suit is unique in the history of motion picture litigation in the issues raised.

Under the terms of his contract Chaplin alleges that the Essanay company agreed that no pictures bearing his name should be released without his approval and final O. K. He says that he made a two-reel "Carmen" and directly charges that the Essanay company, after he had completed the picture and left the employ of the company, employed one Ben Turpin and other actors to make additional pictures, with which "Carmen" was padded.

The application for injunction cites the fact that the distributing concern, the V-L-S-E, has circulated advertising matter all over the country with the film, calculated to convey the impression to the public and falsely to lead the public to believe that the said film exhibited by the defendants is the film based on a scenario created by the plaintiff and that said photoplay was produced, directed and made under the supervision of the plaintiff.

Service was accepted by an officer of the V-L-S-E.

CHAPLIN CASE HAS HEARING.

A motion to dismiss the application filed by Charles Chaplin against the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company and the V-L-S-E. to restrain those corporations from distributing the Chaplin burlesque on "Carmen" was made before Supreme Court Justice Delehanty in Part I, Supreme Court, on Monday, April 24. Decision in the case was withheld until the court could decide some of the intricate legal questions involved.

Nathan Burkan appeared for Chaplin. William Seabury represented the Essanay Company, arguing that the case was one for the federal courts, as the defendant company was an Illinois corporation. Walter W. Irwin appeared for the V-L-S-E. Decision was reserved.

ESSANAY SUES CHAPLIN.

A counter suit has been commenced in the Supreme Court of New York against Charles Chaplin, alleging breach of contract and asking damages to the amount of $500,000. The papers in the case were filed Monday, April 24.

LAS VEGAS, TEXAS, WANTS M. P. OUTFIT.

Since the city of Las Vegas, Texas, obtained such good results from its former advertising campaign in the Moving Picture World, it has decided to try again. This time it wants a motion picture outfit to attend the famous Cowboy's Reunion which will be held in that city on July 4, 5, 6 and 7. This event rivals similar round-ups at Pendleton and Cheyenne and ought to produce a lot of good wild west stuff.

AUSTRALIAN NOTES

IN AN interview Alfred Rolfe, head producer for Australasian Films, Ltd., stated his opinion about picture production in this country. He said the greatest difficulty in the path of Australian producers is that they are unable to market their films in America or England. "If this could be remedied," said Mr. Rolfe, "as many as fifty copies of any picture would be required and the production would then show a 'worth-while' profit."

But under the present state of affairs, only four copies can be disposed of, which does not make much of an inducement to intending manufacturers.

Any company with a good connection in America and England, by making uniformly good photoplays equal in standard to the imported brands, should be an immediate success.

Mr. Rolfe has had much experience as a picture producer, having, perhaps, produced more pictures than any other Australian director.

The Triangle Plays made their debut to Sydney picture-goers at the remodeled Triangle Playhouse on Saturday evening last, the 18th inst. The house, which seats 1,700 persons, was crowded long before the advertised time of screening. The interior of the house has been tastefully decorated, the walls having been repainted a gray color, which is very restful to the eyes. The lights have shades of a Triangle pattern, and a large curtain has been installed with a border decorated with the trademark.

The initial program consisted of 'Crooked to the End," a two-part Keystone comedy, and "The Coward," six-part Ince-Kay-Bee feature. Both pictures were loudly applauded, the fine war scenes in the latter bringing forth many exclamations of admiration.

The prices of admission are from 6d to 2/6 (10 cents to 60 cents). For the first three weeks the programs will be screened the whole week, but after that will be changed twice weekly.

The production of the George Willoughby Photoplay, "Emilienne Moreau," has been held up for a few days owing to the illness of the star, Jean King, and the juvenile lead, Clive Farnham. The former collapsed after the filming of a scene which necessitated very strenuous acting, while the latter sustained injuries which confined him to bed for several days when the motorcycle he was riding for another scene in the picture, skidded and threw him over a bridge.

"The Birth of a Nation," the twelve-part Griffith production, arrived by the "Ventura" from San Francisco yesterday. The big film has been secured by J. C. Williamson, Ltd., and will be presented in Sydney at one of their theaters about Easter at the usual theatrical rates of admission (25 cents to $2).

Waddington's Ltd., controlling four big theaters in well-situated positions in this city, have decided to show second-run Fox features. They have been showing first-run World productions for some time, but owing to the declining quality of many of the last released here, will not screen any more. The management will, however, continue to show Paramount features at one of their houses as heretofore.

"The Film Visit to the Vatican and the Pope" has been showing at the Palace theater here this week. It is being largely attended, and seems to be continuing its popularity. On the same program is the three-reel picture "Ireland a Nation," which was directed by Walter Macnamara, of "Traffic in Souls" fame.

Pathe's Gold Rooster Play, "At Bay," is having a run of tremendous success in Sydney and suburbs at present. This is accounted for in the fact that Charles Waldron, who plays the hero, had appeared in many stage productions in Australia a few years ago, including "The Squaw Man" and "The Virginian."

Features shown here this week include:

"Sunshine Molly," an old but very good Bosworth production. The scenes taken at the oil wells are very interesting to Australian audiences.

"The Vampire," a Metro feature. Olga Petrova is very popular in Sydney, and this picture has drawn big crowds.

"Should a Mother Tell?" featuring Betty Nansen. This Fox photoplay is only of moderate interest.

"The Devil's Daughter." At its opening performance, at which I was present, the audience broke into derisive laughter at many of the incidents in the last reel.

"The Wild Goose Chase," a Lasky feature. The story contains nothing original, but is an acceptable light offering.

Caracas, Venezuela

Enormous Crowds See the Big Thanhouser Serial Projected in Several Theaters.

By John H. Clapham.

Caracas, Venezuela, March 31.—The success of the Thanhouser serial, "The Million Dollar Mystery," will undoubtedly bring more films of the type to this country. The film was sent here from Havana by M. Román, and the managers here are Edward Braasch, Alexander L. Mondolfi, August Guinand, Jr., Edward Eraso and Buenaventura Sola Reig, forming the Sociedad de Cines y Espectáculos, Compañía Anónima, with a capital of 400,000 bolivars. The company controls theaters in this city as follows:

	Seating.
Cine Candelaria (open air)	3,000
Circo Metropolitano (open air)	6,000
Municipal theater	2,000
Caracas theater	1,600
National theater	1,200

Besides the above, the company controls the Baralt theater in Maracaibo, and the Municipal and Circo theaters in Valencia. The firm has every reason to be pleased with the success gained by the Thanhouser feature. It was started at the Circo Metropolitano to not less than 4,000 people nightly. The crowds increased as the fame of the film was spread by those who had seen the first performances. Before the end of the run it was started in the National theater. In a few days it was running again at the Circo Metropolitano, and still later it was started at the Cine Candelaria.

The Circo Metropolitano is used through the week for films, and on Sunday the operator's booth, located in the center of the round pavilion, is removed, the wires are disconnected, and the unlovely bull gives battle to his tormentors after the most approved Spanish fashion. It is pleasant to write that the film has drawn much greater crowds than the toros. The people are very one-sided about the bull-fighting. If the animals do not show the true fighting spirit, there is a big shout from the audience demanding that the bull be replaced with a more gamey one. It is the voice of the people and is not denied.

The question of American films coming here has occupied the attention of the promoters, but there is always the matter of price to be considered when one talks about the quality of the American product when compared to the foreign output. American producers should know that this country is the only one in South America which does not impose almost prohibitive duties on films. I am informed that the duties are reasonable in Venezuela. The promoters here want such films as "The Million Dollar Mystery," because they are sure of crowds. Maintenance cost here is much less than in the United States, even if the cost of electricity is outrageous. Wiring expense is low, since only a common installation is needed. Wires run along wood or anything to reach their connections. If films come here from any of the West India islands, the duties are higher. Porto Rico is a West Indian island, not an American possession, in the view of the customs collectors here.

"The Million Dollar Mystery" has drawn bigger crowds than any other film in Caracas. The people have sustained an interest not understood in the United States. They actually get up, jump, shout, beat the seats with their canes, throw hats, when an exciting scene is being shown. They even whistle to warn the hero that the villain approaches. Jimmy Cruze got many a hand that he never heard, while Miss La Badie won everyone's sympathy. The butler was second, while Mr. Braine was cordially hissed. It was difficult to believe that a film was on, and not a regular stage performance, with real people playing the parts.

Motion Picture Educator

Conducted by REV. W. H. JACKSON and PROF. HARDIN LUCAS.

A USEFUL EXHIBITION.

THE Bureau of Commercial Economics of Washington, D. C., is arranging a series of exhibitions of greatest possible interest to the public generally and of educationally interested persons especially:

A novel celebration is being arranged for Decoration Day, May 30. The ceremony will take place at the base of the Washington Monument, and the base will be used as a motion picture screen. At the base will be hung a laurel wreath, 30 feet in diameter, and into this wreath will be projected motion pictures of the Grand Canyon, Yellowstone, Yosemite, Crater Lake, Rocky Mountains, Mesa Verde, Mount Ranier, Sequoia and General Grant National Parks. The final reel will show the germination of the seed of the golden rod, following its growth until its blossoms fill the wreath. This will fade away and blend into a picture of the Washington Monument by moonlight.

An Interesting and Widespread Series.

This introduces a series of display of motion pictures of the National Parks in all the public parks of the larger eastern cities, to continue nightly throughout the summer months, free to the public. Some of the foreign films to be displayed will be Canadian National Park, Canadian Rockies, Forests of British Columbia, Evangeline Country, Land of Hiawatha, Famous Jarrah Forests in Australia; Through the Blue Mountains of New South Wales; Lake Titicaca, in Bolivia; Temple of the Sun in Bolivia; Climbing the Andes; Andean Temple of the Incas; Over the Middle Way of Bermuda; Mitchell's Pass, South Africa; Valsch River, Kroonstad; Trip to Durban; Scenes at Cogman's Kloof, South Africa; scenes along the Nile in Egypt, and in the heart of India.

Unique Method of Outdoor Exhibiting.

The projection apparatus is contained in a motor truck especially constructed for the purpose, and a large silk screen will be used which will enable the public to see the pictures on either side. The work is purely philanthropic and is carried on by the Bureau of Commercial Economics, which is composed of all of the larger universities of the United States, in extension work, to enable those who can ill afford to travel to see, enjoy and become familiar with the pleasure spots which nature has provided. When the films are projected in a foreign community, the titles and sub-titles will be in the native tongue of the audience. The first display will be before official Washington, including the Diplomatic Corps.

The bureau will provide several of these trucks at an early date, and they will be directed by and be under the auspices of the various universities assigned.

A New Series of Valuable Films on Many Subjects.

A very large consignment of motion picture films has been received from Melbourne, Australia, to be shown throughout the United States and the Dominion of Canada. They are sent by the Departments of Agriculture and State, and are for the purpose of comparison with methods obtaining here and in Canada, and are intended to promote efficiency in farming and in other agricultural pursuits, including stock raising. They are all of an educational nature, in the various industries illustrated.

The pictures are to be shown free to the public in university extension work and community forums which are being established throughout the country in high school auditoriums to adults at night, and before the various grange organizations and rural communities. They will also be displayed in the public parks of the country, in the summer season. The collection includes the pictures of the Pleasure Side of Australia; the Australian Cattle Station; Frozen Meat Industry; Irrigation; the famous Jarrah Forests; an Australian Dairy Farm; Harvesting Wheat; Life Saving; Carnival Swan River, Perth; Seaside Resorts; Through the Blue Mountains of New South Wales; In and About Melbourne; Cup Racing Carnival; Irrigation in New South Wales; Burrinjuck Dam; Breaking of Horses for Army Remounts; Irrigated Lands; Mildura; Prosperous Irrigation; Sheep Shearing; Royal Agricultural Show; Dairying; Sugar Cane Growing; Bacon Curing; Playgrounds; Surf Bathing at Sydney; Scenes in and About Australia; and the Land of Fruits.

The films are donated to the Bureau of Commercial Economics which is a university composed of most of the leading universities and colleges of the United States and the Dominion of Canada, and is the accredited representative of the Commonwealth of Australia in the Department of Motographic Publicity in the Americas.

Growing Interest in Young People.

The call of the children and young people is too loud and emphatic to be ignored.

The Educator has always presented their claims and is pleased whenever an advance is anywhere made tending to meet the legitimate requirements of the young and which also serves as a means of enlarging the scope of this ever-growing work.

We are in receipt of a communication from Abe H. Kaufman, of the United Film Service of Louisiana, Inc., Memphis, Tenn., in which he states that the Imperial theater, Memphis, Tenn., the Dixie theater, Ripley, Tenn., the Princess theater, Mayfield, Ky., and the Majestic Amusement Co., Memphis, Tenn., have recently adopted the children's matinee idea. The Majestic Amusement Co., at its third matinee, reports capacity business. Mr. Kaufman also reports an inquiry from the Theato theater, Florence, Ala., regarding the special Fairy Tale series which the United Film Service has been offering.

This record from these Southern theaters is praiseworthy and we shall be glad to receive reports from any quarter along similar lines.

Films Among the Doctors.

Spreading its educational value for the better health of the people, the educational film is doing good work among the medical fraternity. In New York City, the College of Physicians and Surgeons has recently held an exhibition among themselves for the purpose of demonstrating the helpfulness of the moving picture in all kinds of surgical work. Recently this college has held an exhibition to illustrate the methods employed in various operations. The pictures were shown to about 200 undergraduates and doctors especially invited, the laity being carefully excluded. Five reels were shown and the objects were magnified many times to permit the bringing out of the most minute details in positive clearness. An especial advantage of this method of instruction was that the reels could be stopped at any time to permit a full explanation of processes, or the machine could be run slowly so as to afford opportunity for following minutely the intricacies of the operation—a thing impossible before when the speed required in the actual operation would not permit of delays; this is going to be one of the most helpful features of this work. The dean of the college declared the plan a success and regretted that such a method of instruction had not been developed in such a practical way much sooner. In all probability the use of such films will come into regular use at the college, as it is also quite sure that ere long their use will be general in all such colleges and institutions. The medical profession has made remarkable advances during the last quarter of a century; it is now, however, welcoming the power of the magnified picture to enable it to make still greater progress in the immediate future, and desires to go on record as a strong supporter of the educational powers of kinematography.

MILLARDE DIRECTS TEARE COMEDIES.

Harry Millarde has arrived at the Kalem California studios and taken over the reins of the Ethel Teare comedy company. The former Kalem eastern producer and leading man brought with him a number of specially selected Ethel Teare stories gathered by the scenario department and on which work will begin at once. In addition to Ethel Teare the company under Director Millarde's supervision includes Victor Rottman, Jack MacDermott, Gus Leonard, and Myrta Sterling.

Among the Picture Theaters

News and Views of Photoplay Houses Everywhere

STRAND THEATER, PITTSBURGH, PA.

Rowland & Clark Opens Another Beautiful Picture House. Has Big Auditorium with High Ceiling. Issues a Sixteen-Page Program Weekly. A. J. Simon Is Resident Manager.

THE magnificent Strand theater was recently completed and opened to the public of Oakland, an exclusive section of Pittsburgh, Pa., by the Rowland & Clark theaters. It is the newest link in that firm's chain of modern photoplay houses. Embodying the high standards of construction and decoration which have been set in the other Rowland & Clark theaters, the Strand is a credit to its locality.

The large structure is practically fireproof, being built of concrete and steel, and is of a beautiful type architecturally. The roominess of the theater makes for both comfort and attractiveness of arrangement. The exterior is impressive with its wide marquise extending to the edge of the sidewalk. A large clock surmounts the electric sign, announcing "The Strand Photoplays," and can be seen at considerable distance when approaching the theater from either direction.

The entrance-way and spacious lobby is floored with tile of pleasing design. A wainscot of marble extends around the lobby and is carried out through the entire house. The center of the entrance lobby is occupied by a circular ticket office, with marble base and glass top. It is equipped with an automatic ticket selling machine. To the rear of the entrance lobby is a handsomely furnished passageway extending the width of the building. The style of decoration of the interior is the Adams, chosen because of its simplicity and neatness. The walls are in pink and gray, with Adams style candle brackets with blue shades. The floors throughout are carpeted in rich mulberry color, with carpet made especially for the Strand. The hangings are in mulberry to harmonize, and each portier is decorated with a gold "S." Keeping to the right on entering the main lobby, one passes first the manager's lobby, then an exit lobby, next the women's retiring room, then turns to the left and enters the auditorium proper.

The height of ceiling and the spaciousness of the auditorium gives an air of massiveness and at the same time lends itself to the luxurious furnishing and convenient arrangement of the whole. Especial attention was paid to the seats, those made by the American Seating Co. being chosen, and they are of a most comfortable type. There are aisles on both sides of the house and one down the center, with a cross aisle about half way down front. The slope of the floor is gradual, yet sufficient to permit everyone to see unobstructedly. The exceptionally wide aisles at both sides give ample room for rush occasions. The proscenium, framing the large screen, is in the front of the house, so that the audience faces Forbes street. Upwards of eight hundred are seated comfortably.

A fine Moeler organ has been installed. Ralph Petty, an accomplished musician who was formerly associate organist at the Regent theater, officiates at the instrument. The total indirect method of lighting is used, with side-wall brackets, giving a subdued glow that is at the same time sufficiently brilliant to make the finding of seats remarkably easy. The ventilation of the theater has also been given careful thought. The direct method has been adopted, with two large fans, one on each side of the auditorium. There are eight exits opening directly from the auditorium and three additional exits from the entrance lobby.

In keeping with the fireproof construction of the building, the projection room is built entirely of concrete. It is equipped with appliances of the latest and most efficient type. Three projection machines, all motor driven, are used. A rotary converter is employed to break the alternating current to direct current. An extra ventilating fan keeps the projection room cool at all times.

Previous to the opening of the Strand, the facilities in the Oakland district for moving picture entertainment in the afternoons were meager. The gratifying attendance at the matinees proves the need of such high-class entertainment, and augurs great success for the house. A complete change of program is made daily. The shows are continuous, from 2 p. m. until 10.30 p. m. The Strand and its attractions are advertised effectively in the local newspaper in that section and in all the Pittsburgh dailies. The house issues the Strand Film Forecast, a weekly, sixteen-page, six by nine inch booklet, one of the five published by Rowland & Clark. Three thousand programs are printed each week, of which one thousand is mailed to a list of patrons who have made personal requests for them. A. J. Simon is resident manager.

The Strand is owned by J. B. Clark and operated by the Rowland & Clark theaters, which comprise the Regent, the Strand, the Arsenal, the Bellevue, the Belmar and the Oakland. Each of these, with the exception of the last named, seats over 600 and embodies the last word in theater construction. Mr. Clark is directing head of the concern, J. P. Donovan, general manager, and M. J. C. Kornblum, advertising manager.

VITAGRAPH MAKES CHANGE IN RELEASE DATE.

The Vitagraph Company has decided to release on Monday, April 24, "God's Country and the Woman," the eight-part dramatic feature, from the book of James Oliver Curwood. This photoplay has scored a remarkable success at the Fulton theater, New York City, and was originally scheduled for release on May 1.

"The Law Decides," another Blue Ribbon feature, written by Marguerite Bertsch, was announced for release on this date. It has been definitely decided, however, to reverse the order. Photoplay patrons the country over have been patiently awaiting the coming of the story dealing with life in the Canadian Northwest. Rollin S. Sturgeon with a cast of Western Vitagraphers produced "God's Country and the Woman" in the mountains of California.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

BROOKLYN EXHIBITORS GETTING STRONGER.

A Splendid Meeting Held in the Triangle Theater and Addressed by Commodore Blackton.

A VERY large and thoroughly representative meeting of Brooklyn exhibitors was held on the night of Thursday, April 20, at the Triangle theater, Flatbush avenue extension. Mr. Manheimer presided. Numerous applications for membership were presented and accepted. After some routine business had been transacted, Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, of the Vitagraph Company, who had been invited to attend, was asked to address the meeting. Mr. Blackton addressed himself to the question of a more friendly relationship between the Exhibitors' League and the Board of Trade. He said mistakes had been made on both sides and recommended that the two organizations meet in a spirit of mutual tolerance and forgiveness. He was ably seconded by Samuel Spedon, the veteran Vitagraph publicity director. Both Mr. Blackton and Mr. Spedon were listened to with great attention and interest and there was hearty applause at the end of their speeches.

Louis Blumenthal, the treasurer of the Exhibitors' League of the Borough of Manhattan, disclaimed any hostility on the part of the exhibitor toward the Board of Trade. He said that in his opinion the exhibitor had not received a fair deal. He added that he believed there was room for a manufacturers' organization, like the Board of Trade, but that it was best for the exhibitor to maintain his own organization. He believed in co-operation whenever co-operation was needed to fight the common foe, but often, he said, the interests of producer and exhibitors were divergent, if not conflicting—hence the need of separate organizations. Mr. Blumenthal's remarks were applauded to the echo.

The last speaker was W. Stephen Bush, of the Moving Picture World. Mr. Bush congratulated the Brooklyn exhibitors on their strong organization. "Be sure," he continued, "that whatever achievements the exhibitor has now to his credit, whatever concessions he has obtained and whatever recognition has been given him is due entirely to the fact that he is organized and therefore in a position to demand respect. It will not do to depend on the philanthropic impulses of other branches in the industry. The spirit of organization is spreading throughout the country. From all parts of the Union, endorsements of the exhibitors' stand have come to New York, but none has pleased me better than the strong and unqualified position of the North Carolina exhibitors, who in a finely worded dispatch have made clear their stand in favor of organized fellow exhibitors."

After the meeting adjourned, the management of the Triangle theater entertained the exhibitors as their guests with liquid and solid refreshments which were thoroughly enjoyed by everybody, including Commodore Blackton, to whom was given a rising vote of thanks for his speech.

HERRINGTON VISITS WASHINGTON.

Talks Organization to District of Columbia Exhibitors—Little Interest Shown.

PRESIDENT HERRINGTON of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America addressed a gathering of exhibitors last week at Crandall's theater, Ninth and E streets, Northwest, Washington, D. C. Interest in the local league has largely lapsed during the last year or so and it has been extremely difficult to get the former members out to attend a meeting. Screen club blow-outs and other entertainments have attracted a large attendance, but when it comes down to business for the exhibitor alone, to be conducted and carried out by him, that is the point where all interest ceases.

Mr. Herrington urged upon the theater men to come themselves and bring others to a realization of the great need for organization and co-operation at this time, and the need, he said, is going to increase as the time passes on. The unorganized exhibitors of the several cities which do not now possess charters will find themselves at a disadvantage upon the advent in the city, state and federal legislatures of adverse legislation, and for that reason, if for no other, they should get together and become as strong in their organization as possible.

He talked at some length upon the all-absorbing subject of motion picture censorship, and he also referred in detail to the misunderstanding at present existing between the exhibitors and the Board of Trade. Following his remarks upon the latter, the exhibitors adopted a resolution endorsing the move of the exhibitors backing their own convention in New York, and recommending that it be liberally patronized by members all over the country.

No definite action was taken at this meeting looking to a reorganization of the league, although it has since been stated that an effort may be made to again get the exhibitors together for that purpose. Harry M. Crandall is the president of the remnants of the old organization, for remnants only are they. He has issued a number of calls for meetings but responses were but few and the organization just simply passed away. President Herrington asked the exhibitors present to take out a new charter and immediately get busy. Action on this latter also was deferred.

KENTUCKY EXHIBITORS' CONVENTION CALLED.

Kentucky Branch No. 7, Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of America, will meet in annual session on May 12, in Louisville, for one or two or more days, according to the way matters develope. The call for the meeting was announced by L. J. Dittmar, president of the organization, who said that nothing had been decided on other than the date of meeting. The executive committee of the organization, of which Mr. Dittmar, as president, is chairman, is now engaged in working out a program for the convention and it is expected that there will be a large attendance. One thing which will help to insure a general gathering of the clan is the fact that May 13 is Derby Day at Churchill Downs, a date when most of those who can get to Louisville from out in the state do so. Nobody ever works on the afternoon of Derby Day, and it is a certainty that if the Kentucky branch holds a meeting on that afternoon it will take place out at the race track. Plans are being made this year, incidentally, as heretofore, to film the horses as they run this, the most famous of all the Kentucky racing events.

PROJECTION DAY, 9TH OF MAY.

At the Madison Square Exposition, on May 9, Frank H. Richardson, the projection expert, will deliver a special and exhaustive lecture illustrated by large drawings and photos. The subject will be "Practical Projection." The lecture will last about an hour and a half, and will cover the subject in its every aspect. This "Projection Day" is the first big effort to make the responsible men in the industry realize in equal degree the paramount importance of the operator and of the quality of the operator's work. It is expected that the largest and most representative gathering of film men that ever listened to a lecture on projection will be found ready and eager to listen to Mr. Richardson's practical talk.

TRIANGLE IN TWELVE BROADWAY HOUSES.

With the opening of the new Rialto theater by S. L. Rothapfel, the Triangle Film Corporation now points to twelve theaters along Broadway which use Griffith-Ince-Sennett pictureplays either exclusively or on their big feature nights. Proctor and Marcus Loew have recently increased the number of houses on their circuits using Triangle to include the Fifth Avenue, New York and Circle theaters. The Knickerbocker, Eighty-first Street, Schuyler, Riverside, Broadway Photoplay, Nemo, Claremont and Audubon have been showing this service for several months.

Chicago News Letter

By JAS. S. McQUADE.

FUNKHOUSER NO LONGER CENSOR CZAR.

Chief of Police Healey Goes Over His Head in Granting a Permit to "The Little Girl Next Door."

IN MY letter in the issue of April 8 there appeared an article on the Illinois vice film, "The Little Girl Next Door," which visualizes vice conditions in the state as described in the report of the Illinois Senate Vice Commission, made about three years ago. This subject was seen privately, about a month ago, by a select gathering, including pastors of churches, and the consensus of opinion declared that the pictures were good, if viewed by adults only.

Second Deputy Funkhouser at that time notified those concerned that he must pass on the film before a permit would be granted for its exhibition in Chicago. Later on the deputy ruled that the film was not a proper one for the public to see, and that he would not allow it under any circumstances.

Application was then made to Mayor Thompson for an unprejudiced censorship of the film, the attorney in charge of the case claiming that the Second Deputy had prejudged the photoplay and that he had decided even before he saw the film that it was not a proper picture for exhibition.

The Mayor then asked Corporation Counsel Ettelson to submit an opinion as to the final authority on the censorship of films in Chicago, and this opinion holds that Chief of Police Chas. C. Healey and not Second Deputy Superintendent of Police Funkhouser has the full authority to pass on moving pictures under the prevailing city ordinances.

Chief Healey then appointed Corporation Counsel Ettelson chief censor to pass on the picture, with the result that after ordering several modifications and cut-outs, which do not affect the educational value of the picture, it was recommended that a permit be issued, and Chief Healey has declared that he will issue it.

Mayor Thompson also saw the film, as did City Controller and Mrs. Eugene R. Pike, and they pronounced it fit and proper and a great educational exhibition.

There was much rejoicing in film circles in Chicago over the decision; but it was pointed out by a city official that the new order of censorship does not mean that the bars are to be wholly removed, or that any immoral photoplay may be shown. The new censorship, however, does mean that wiser discrimination in the matter of cut-outs will be shown and that trivial incidents will not be ordered out as has been the case in the past.

Morbid censorship has called forth the following recent editorial from the Chicago Tribune, which is especially fitting in connection with this article:

Censorship of any kind seems to have a core of incurable stupidity which neither reason nor ridicule can dissolve. But moving picture cut-outs illustrate a degree of unreason which will stagger any mind that attempts to account for them.

The hero of a romance of "The Prisoner of Zenda" type is seen departing for a ride with the princess. The next scene shows him lying on the ground apparently hurt. How did he get there, and why? Ask, not the playwright, but the censor. The villain ambushed the pleasure party and wounded the hero. But acts of violence are anathema to the censor, and the scenes necessary to make the sequence understood were cut out.

In another play the villain is corrupting the hero by inducing the drug habit. In one scene he is shown taking out his hypodermic case, preparing the needle, while the hero, with bared forearm, waits for the injection. The next scene shows the hero turning down his sleeve and the villain putting away his case.

In this case the sequence is hardly broken and is easily followed. But why cut out the act of puncture?

As a matter of fact, neither cutout has any basis in common sense or normal psychology. They are based, it seems to us, on morbid supersensitiveness, a semi-fanatic moral squeamishness which ought not to be allowed to interfere with the healthy amusements of healthy people. The assumption of this sort of censorship seems to be that the whole moving picture art of the country should be edited for the benefit of mental and moral defectives. If we are a race of morons, let us, by all means, be censored. But, if morons are exceptional and the rest of us are not victims of criminal suggestibility, pathologically susceptible to examples of vice and violence, let us have our censorship censored by common sense.

Concerning Mayor Thompson's recent move, the Tribune, in the issue of April 22, made the following editorial statement under the heading, "Common Sense Censorship":

If Mayor Thompson has really determined to give Chicago a common-sense censorship of the "movies" we are prepared to forgive him many things. But, if his acquiescence in Chief Healey's interference in the function of censorship is merely an attempt to make trouble for Major Funkhouser and to save Barratt O'Hara's white slave film, it is scarcely worth while.

We need a common-sense censorship. We have not had one. The duty of determining what we shall be permitted to see in the motion picture theaters and what we shall not see has reposed apparently in a body of people enormously sensitive to shock, in people who dislike seeing unpleasant things.

A generation or so ago public authorities, religious teachers, school teachers, and the whole pack of people who were attempting to guide us in the right direction put their faith in the horrible example. All the hair-raising details were included. The moral had to be made and it had to be made as obvious as possible. They demonstrated, not only the results of being a horrible example, but precisely how a victim came to be such.

The modern censorship does not permit this method. We still prove daily, both in the Adult Only and the Everybody Welcome theaters, that the wages of sin is death and that the income of virtue is prosperity, a good husband, and eternal happiness. But we no longer show sin. The idea seems to be that the audience will be more interested in the process of becoming a horrible example than in the unpleasant results of having become one; that anyone seeing a woman put poison in her husband's coffee, even though she suffer excruciatingly for the deed, may go and do likewise.

The reason for such a change of attitude is not hard to find. The theory of suggestibility became popular ten or fifteen years ago, and now it is public property. If you do anything someone will imitate you. Put a bee in anyone's bonnet and it will eventually sting him.

We are all, in the eyes of the motion picture censors, on the edge of committing some dastardly deed without regard to consequences the moment the method of perpetrating it is shown us. There is some medical support for their opinion of us. It is a strange man whom some physician cannot prove to be mentally subnormal these days.

But in spite of the opinions of the alienists we have not completely adopted their point of view. Somehow most men, and most women also, feel that they are not completely out of their heads, nor devoid of all restraint. They resent the evident assumption of the censors that they are all morons. If Chief Healey's interference will insure our treatment as normal people it is an advance.

Illinois Mothers Want Clean Programs for Their Children.

At the recent convention of the Illinois Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teacher Associations, held at Cairo, Ill., the reform of moving pictures was one of the themes on which great interest was centered, and at the closing session the mothers put themselves on record as favoring volunteer film censorship boards in every city for the children's benefit.

In her report, Mrs. Frederic Michael, chairwoman of the social service committee, said that the committee had sent out a letter to exhibitors asking for better moving pictures for children.

"Up to this time, twenty-two theaters in Chicago are giving children's performances and in almost every instance these performances are chaperoned by four or five members of the Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teacher Associations," the report read. "Fifteen cities in Illinois have theaters giving children's performances. The above figures are made up from actual reports.

"The organizations working along this line have found the moving picture theater managers ready to co-operate in almost every instance. One theater manager in Chicago has opened seven of his theaters for Saturday morning performances.

"On January 22 a letter was sent to the Mayor of Chicago by the social service committee asking that it be made possible to permit schools to use moving pictures safely. The ordinance was passed.

"That the campaign for better moving pictures has awakened great interest is shown by the many letters received from non-affiliated clubs (even from other states); from the desire on the part of moving picture producers to have this organization endorse their lists of films for children, and from the fact that the chairman of the social service committee is constantly being called upon to confer with other organizations to discuss this vital subject."

Speaking of Charlie Chaplin, Mrs. Michael said that he would be a good actor if he wanted to, but he didn't want to, so she would censor him.

Nathan Ascher, of the Ascher Bros.' Theater Enterprises, Chicago, said the other day about children's programs:

"In all of our theaters we are giving children's matinees, and we work in conjunction with the mothers' congress and the teachers as much as we can. Many times they help us choose our programs. We know that it is not only a matter of sentiment but that it pays the exhibitor to furnish not only the children but the grown-ups with clean pictures. Ninety-nine per cent. of the exhibitors, I believe, would prefer to show good pictures. I know that we would go so far as to help any other exhibitor that we could to supply good children's pictures for his matinees, because it would all help to remove the prejudice that is felt by many mothers against moving pictures."

It cannot be winked at that this need for clean programs for children is serious and should be met squarely by producers and exhibitors alike. There can be no denial of the fact that young and tender minds are ultra-susceptible to impressions both good and bad. To make children good men and women, other considerations being waived, the impressions created by moving pictures that they see should be good—that is, morally healthy. An impure or a violent scene flashed on the retina of a child's eye may have woeful possibilities for itself and others.

The fact that the mothers of Illinois are supervising the pictures that their children see is a wise safeguard. The home should exercise this influence wisely and carefully, and producers and exhibitors should render all the aid in their power.

The Chicago Examiner refers editorially to the Mothers' Congress as follows:

The Ilinois Congress of Mothers, in session at Cairo, the other day entered a strong plea for strong, substantial lunches for school pupils in both city and country.

The twin banes of school pupils, according to the Mothers' Congress, are the insanitary lunch pail and the cheaper class of "movie" films.

The first can be corrected by schoolroom lunches at nominal cost and the latter by voluntary boards of film censorship in every city or hamlet.

When the mothers speak it behooves officialdom to take notice.

Food and films must be both above reproach.

Chicago Film Brevities.

At the meeting of the managers of Chicago film exchanges, in the Movie Inn, Tuesday afternoon, April 18, every exchange in the city, with a few exceptions, was represented. The temporary committee referred to in my last letter submitted a name for the club, which was unanimously accepted. This name is the F. I. L. M. Club, which stands for the Film Industries Local Managers' Club. The next meeting will be held on Saturday, May 6, when an automobile trip will be taken into the country, and dinner will be served and entertainment furnished at some country roadhouse. The party will gather at the Metro office in the Mallers Building, at one o'clock, that date. During the trip through the various towns the members of the club will stop off in a body and call on exhibitors. This club is the first that has been formed by a body of exchange managers for social purposes.

Ray Branch, owner and manager of the Enterprise Theater Equipment Company, of Detroit, Mich., was in the city Monday, April 17. When seen, he reported very good business. Mr. Branch was formerly branch manager in Detroit for Universal, and only recently engaged in his new venture.

Through the courtesy of Warden Zimmer of the Joliet Penitentiary, Captain H. J. Lewis showed his five-reel feature, "San Francisco's Chinatown and the Barbary Coast," to the prisoners on Sunday, April 16. Two presentations were given and the prisoners were highly pleased with the entertainment.

John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, gave invitation exhibitions of the first three chapters of "The Secret of the Submarine," at the Chicago offices of that company on Wednesday and Thursday, April 19 and 20, from one to five o'clock p. m. The presentations were largely attended by exhibitors.

Wm. A. Brady, now active head of the World Film Corporation, was in the city last week, and during his stay made arrangements with Jones, Linick & Schaeffer for the presentation of World features at the Colonial theater, beginning Sunday, April 23. The run of the World product will be for an indefinite period.

Frank McCoy, now playing an important role with Ethel Barrymore in "Our Mrs. McChesney," at Powers theater, this city, is devoting his days to playing the heavy character in Essanay's forthcoming production, "The Jesters," under the direction of Joseph Byron Totten. This is not the first appearance of Mr. McCoy before the camera, as it will be remembered he played opposite Pearl White in "The Iron Claw," the leading juvenile in "Monte Cristo," etc.

Moving pictures showing sections of the Lincoln Highway from coast to coast were shown Tuesday morning, April 18, at the Studebaker theater, under the auspices of the General Federation of Women's Clubs and of the Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs. They were afterwards shown in the evening at the Art Institute for the special benefit of children, and will subsequently be shown in several theaters throughout the city. The object of these presentations is to raise a fund for the general beautification of the Lincoln Highway throughout Illinois.

Safe blowers broke into the Avon theater, 3325 Fullerton avenue, on Sunday night, April 16, and robbed it of $400. The theater is owned by Max Hyman and Samuel Katz, and it was partly wrecked by the violence of the explosion. It is believed by the police that a new gang of professional cracksmen are responsible for the burglary.

The Strand Theater Company will appropriately observe its first anniversary during the week of April 30. This date, last year, was the opening of the company's run of pictures at Orchestra Hall. The management, it is said, will secure the services of a celebrated Metropolitan opera singer for her appearance on the Strand stage for that week, in addition to the Triangle program.

The following bills have been announced at the prominent "Loop" theaters in Chicago for the week beginning Sunday, April 23:

Studebaker—The second week of Charlie Chaplin in "Carmen" and John Barrymore and Florence Zabelle in "The Red Widow" (Famous Players). The Chaplin "Carmen" drew heavily all through the first week at the Studebaker, La Salle and Bijou Dream.

Fine Arts—"The Ne'er-Do-Well" enters its third week. The attendance for the first two weeks has beaten all records at this theater.

Colonial—"The Feast of Life" (World), featuring Clara Kimball Young; Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in a Metro comedy; a Paramount pictograph, and a Burton Holmes travelogue.

Ziegfeld—Alfred Hamburger will start a new policy the week beginning Sunday, April 23. He has decided to select his feature subject from the open market, and will choose the photoplay which in his judgment is the best for the week of all programs not contracted for a downtown showing. This leaves him to select from V-L-S-E, Metro, World, Equitable, Bluebird, Red Feather, Fox, etc. Supporting his feature he will aim at securing an ideal collection of shorter subjects, including a comedy, topical picture, scenic and a Mutt and Jeff cartoon. The bill for the ensuing week will be "Playing With Fire" (Metro), featuring Olga Petrova, who is supported by Arthur Hoops, Catherine Calhoun and other clever people, and one of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew's comedies.

Strand—Dorothy Gish in "Susan Rocks the Boat" (Fine Arts); George Kleine's travelogue on Switzerland, and the Strand topical review.

La Salle—The second week of Charlie Chaplin in "Carmen," and other pictures.

Richard C. Travers, Essanay's popular star, made his first appearance in vaudeville at the Palace theater Monday evening, April 17. The Chicago daily press treated him kindly. All week the theater was filled nightly by a large following of moving picture fans, with whom Mr. Travers is in high favor. On the opening night about 60 Reel Fellows, accompanied by their wives and friends, were present and gave Mr. Travers an ovation. At the end of his monologue he was presented with a monster horseshoe wreath of flowers by the Reel Fellows present, and the large audience acclaimed him again and again. "Dick's" monologue is an interesting story of his experiences in the making of moving pictures, and it is supplemented by an animated cartoon about 500 feet in length, by Wallace R. Carleson. This cartoon shows Mr. Travers leaving the Essanay plant in his auto, saying goodbye to all the Essanay players and office staff and also showing the star's plight in case he ever attempted to sing or dance. It brought down the house.

Director Frank Beal of the Selig Polyscope Company, accompanied by a number of prominent actors, has gone to Indiana, where scenes in "Historic Indiana" will be taken. Mr. Beal has planned the building of a frontier settlement and stockade at Lafayette, Ind., where several historic incidents of Indiana history will be pictured. James Whitcomb Riley is coming on from his winter home in Florida to cooperate in the production of this historical film.

LOS ANGELES EXHIBIT IN NEW YORK.

Chamber of Commerce Arranges for Special Display at First Exposition of Motion Picture Board of Trade.

NEXT month, when the first national exposition of the Motion Picture Board of Trade opens at Madison Square Garden, New York, the capital city of the film world will be in the forefront of exhibitors.

Since the Chamber of Commerce announced its intention of being among the exhibitors, preparations have been made for an exhibit which will demonstrate the sterling climate, scenery and other advantages which the sunny Southland has to offer film producers. The larger producing companies are co-operating and it is expected that a complete panorama of Los Angeles will be housed in one of the booths.

Though not generally known, the Chamber has been working for some years to centralize the film industry here. Gradually laboratories are being added to the leading plants and some pictures are being released from here, but New York is still the great distributing center. It is hoped to add manufacturers of the raw film and distribute from here, so that the entire industry, from the making of the film to its release, will be a Los Angeles enterprise.

The display in New York, which incidentally is the first one Los Angeles has made there, will be largely pictorial. Motion pictures of the larger plants will be shown, while charts will be used to demonstrate the large amount of sunshine here, and the almost total absence of static electricity. Special literature regarding the city will also be distributed.

One day of the exposition will be known as Los Angeles Day, when special reels of Los Angeles-made pictures will be run. Features of the city's exhibit will be a big electric sign, with the legend, "Los Angeles, Where Nature Helps Industry Most," and a picture of June Brentinger, a Los Angeles girl, in a poster pose symbolic of the Southland.

Industrial Commissioner Kinney of the chamber, who will direct the exhibit, is arranging to meet manufacturers of all sorts while in New York. While the exposition is designed primarily for the film makers, the commissioner will confer with manufacturers in many lines not now adequately represented in this section.

CHOOSING FILM COMMISSIONER.

On May first there will be no Board of Censors, but a single film Commissioner. He will be subject to civil service regulations, according to City Attorney Stephens, who sent a written opinion on the question to Mayor Sebastian. Some doubt as to the application of civil service provisions arose because of the charter provision which says that members of the various commissions are not included among those required to be appointed after competitive examination.

Mayor Sebastian has received two hundred or more applications for the position, which pays $175 a month, and a dozen or more of the applicants assure the Mayor that they have the indorsement of either the whole Council or a majority of its members.

INTERNATIONAL EXCHANGE OPENS.

George H. Atwood Opens Hearst Film Service Station on Film Row.

Los Angeles has another film exchange. It is the International Film Service, Inc., which, under the management of George H. Atwood, has opened an office at 912 South Olive street.

Mr. Atwood, whose theatrical experience has been extensive, comes to Los Angeles from the Philadelphia offices of the Pathe Company. Before going to Philadelphia he was associated with the General Film Company and managed branches in Boston, Albany, Phoenix, Oklahoma City and Dallas. In all of these places his success was marked.

"The Mysteries of Myra," a new serial in fifteen episodes, is to be among the first releases by the new exchange. For a week preceding the release of the first episode on May 1 according to Mr. Atwood, the story will be run in the Examiner of this city. In collaboration with Charles Goddard, author of "The Perils of Pauline," "The Exploits of Elaine," "The Goddess," and other striking film successes, Hereward Carrington wrote the story about which the drama has been built. The Wharton Brothers of "Elaine" fame personally produced the play and directed Miss Jean Sothern, "Myra," and Howard Estabrook, who acts the part of "Dr. Alden."

The first of a series of cartoon comedies by artists whose names are known to all readers of the Hearst papers will also be released on May 1. Among the contributors to this series will be Tom Powers, "Tad," George McManus ("Bringing Up Father"), Hal Coffman, Opper, Herschfield, Herriman, Cliff Sterrett, Tom McNamara ("Us Boys"), Windsor MacKay, Leon Searl and A. Moser.

The new office is a fine addition to the screen street where the motion picture activities are being centered.

"RAMONA" SETS RECORD.

Clune Production Closes With Tenth Week—Clergyman Sees Picture as Many Times.

Several records have been hung up by pictures shown at W. H. Clune's Auditorium theater, but here's one that beats all.

This one made by the Rev. R. Fuhr is for some reasons the most interesting and exceptional. Father Fuhr on the closing day of "Ramona's" tenth week paid his tenth visit to the photodrama. Last Saturday Father Fuhr crossed a desert two hundred and twenty-one miles to make his weekly visit. He is now so familiar with the seating arrangements of the theater that he does not ask the ushers to conduct him to his seat. The Auditorium management received from him the following letter:

Bishop, Cal., April 10, 1916.

Box Office, Clune's Auditorium Theater, Los Angeles.

Gentlemen: Kindly reserve for me two tickets for Saturday, April 15, matinee. I will be very thankful if you will kindly reserve my seats in row twenty and twenty-one, seats either 14 and 16 or 13 and 15.

The writer of this letter is the clergyman to whom you have sold tickets to Ramona repeatedly. This will be the tenth time that I will have seen this wonderful production. Will call for tickets upon my return to the city, next Saturday morning about 9.30 o'clock.

Thanking you for your kindness, I am,

Yours respectfully,

(REV.) R. FUHR.

And, according to the box office heads, there have been many parties who ordered tickets for "Ramona" again and again.

FRANK EDMONSON TO FLY WITH CAMERA.

A cross country balloon flight which may last three days, a parachute jump of fifteen thousand feet, and a complete record of the trip in motion pictures, as well as the testing of a new type of statoscope will be the features of a trip which will be made from Monrovia, by Police Detective Kittle, Balloon Pilot Jack M. O'Connell and Frank Edmonson, camera man.

According to Mr. Kittle, who was formerly a well-known aeronaut, the trip may establish a number of new records in the balloon world.

The statoscope, he says, will show to a fraction of a foot the rise and fall of the balloon as it strikes warm and cold air lanes. The old type of statoscope never has been considered a complete success and will register true height of a balloon only within from one hundred to three hundred feet.

Not the least feature of the trip will be, according to Mr. O'Donnell, the parachute jump to be made by Mr. Kittle. Weather conditions permitting, he will leap from the balloon after it has reached an altitude of fifteen thousand feet. If he succeeds the jump will be a world's record, and will be fully shown on the film which will be made on the voyage.

A VISIT TO THE E. & R. JUNGLE STUDIOS.

The other day we drove down to the E. & R. Jungle Film Company's studios. Clem Pope, formerly of the Morning Telegraph, now director of publicity and scenarios, took the World man over the place.

The Jungle of the E. & R. contains a surprising number of very fine jungle beasts. The cat family was well represented by several magnificent lions and a litter of three cubs about seven weeks old. We were introduced to the leading stars of the E. & R. Jungle Film Company, the famous vaudeville villains, Nap and Sally. "Meet the World man, Nap," said Clem, and the big chimpanzee trotted up to the bars of his large cage and shook hands and bowed like a regular little gentleman.

"So many things seen in motion pictures are merely taken for granted," said Friend Pope, "that few people stop to consider the patience, effort and time expended in getting scenes for pictures. Perhaps animal pictures are the hardest and the most nerve racking sort to make. Napoleon and Sally are so wonderful on the screen, so like humans, that people hardly ever consider that everything they do means months of training.

"Of course, directing them in a scene is a great deal like directing people, for they are shown what they must do, and how it must be done. Generally they do it, at least Sally does, but Napoleon always puts in a few flourishes never dreamed of by the director. But the other side, the training side, is a matter of course. To train a chimpanzee means the breaking of almost every primeval instinct and changing its whole method of existence. It required seven months of training to get Napoleon on an elephant. Two hours a day and seven days in the week for seven months is no joke. Years had put that natural fear of the elephant into him, and the fact that he went through his stunts is nothing short of marvelous.

"To see an ape ride a bicycle is nothing wonderful, but Napoleon is the only chimpanzee in the world that has ever ridden one backwards. That, too, was a matter of months. Yet it is passed by with a glance and taken as merely one of the things in an age of wonders.

"The skating, too, required over a year. Not the mere skating, for nearly all the chimpanzees in vaudeville do that trick, but all of them work one foot, and the other is used to guide. Napoleon is the only one who skates, as a human does, striking out with both feet. He skates backward and forward like an expert. He does the tricks of the other apes, but he generally goes them a half dozen better. There never has been known a case where a chimpanzee would jump as high as he does, while wearing roller skates. Not another that would leap over a chair, while skating, not another that would walk upstairs on stilts, not another that would skate down a runway, do a ten foot leap, and catch a trapeze bar."

The E. & R. Jungle Film Company is now working on another "Nap and Sally" feature with Lillian Brown Leighton, to be called "Who's It." The scenario was written by Clem Pope and is being produced by J. J. Franz.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

Lasky's new general manager, Milton E. Hoffman, has found a home in Hollywood and is now casting about for a perfectly good automobile in which to inspect the surrounding country in his spare moments.

Our old friend and booster, William Duncan, featured in "God's Country and the Woman," has had a long career in "legit" and pictures as a leading man, but the big part for which he is cast in Rollin Sturgeon's present production of the Cleveland Moffett novel of mystery and scientific crime deduction, is one of the greatest studies in character building he has ever had an opportunity to enact. It has been predicted that he will double the vast number of friends who have already been won to him by the means of his work in "The Chalice of Courage," and "God's Country and the Woman." George Holt will also have a fine chance for more of his heavy work in this great picture.

A merry picnic was enjoyed this week in the head of Beechwood Canyon, Hollywood, where "Julius Caesar" will be staged in a huge amphitheater on the night of May 19 for the benefit of the Actors' Fund of America. Those participating in the jollification were actors and high school students of Los Angeles, the latter being the force from which the thousands of extra people for the great production will be obtained. The Hollywood Board of Trade provided free grape juice for the occasion. There were several hundred actors and students present. Tickets for the great production have been put on sale already.

Last week Herbert Rawlinson, leading man of the Worthington Universal Company, Director William Worthington and Jack Wells, the company's stage manager, were the guests of a number of the leading Chinese of the city at a lavish banquet in Chinatown. The Hop Sing Tong were the hosts. There were sixteen courses included in the dinner. Those sixteen courses of Chinese food will never be forgotten, says each of the guests.

This week an event creating no little interest in picture circles is of the marriage of Dick Rosson, of the American, and Miss Vera Sisson, of the Vitagraph. Miss Sisson was formerly leading woman in the Jack Kerrigan company at Universal City, later going to the Vitagraph. The young couple's romance began when they were both engaged at Universal City. The wedding took place a few days ago, Mr. Rosson quietly slipping down and returning just as quietly with his bride. Dick Rosson is the brother of Helene and Queenie Rosson, both of the American.

There was a great time on Saturday night last at the Los Angeles Press Club when a "Bright Night" program was enjoyed by the actors, paper boys and friends. De Wolf Hopper opened his own big league season with "Gunga Din," Douglas Fairbanks favored the gang with some comedy and a number of other moving picture men gave of their talents.

Jane Bernoudy, of Universal City, is original. She owns a little car which she calls Evangeline, and said Evangeline being one year old the actress is planning a birthday party to which all the automobiles of her friends will be invited. Garages will be served for about two dozen cars, and the menu will consist of everything from lubricating oil to gasoline. We have a secret idea that the party for little Evangeline is one to announce the engagement of the dainty little car to Hector, a handsome big machine.

Manager Bryson of the local Universal distributing offices reports that John A. Kraker, known as "Go Get 'Em, Jack," among his friends in Western Canada, where he was for several years connected with the Canadian Film Exchange, traveling out of the Calgary office, before the Universal came into the field, has joined his selling force at the California Film Exchange.

Seena Owen, the Fine Arts actress, has been granted a two weeks' vacation, which she will spend in the hills of Colorado. Miss Owen has been working steadily at the studio for two consecutive years, and having some slight trouble with her eyes, she asked for this rest, which was immediately granted.

The Rolin Phunphilm players have had a great trip to San Diego and Mexico this week. They enjoyed the little journey immensely, and well they might, for the sights that they saw were new and novel. Everyone got to see the 1916 Exposition as well as the army and navy headquarters, both on land and sea. The players went to Tia Juana, Mexico, to take scenes in the gambling houses and on the race track, and between scenes they played the games of chance, and some cleaned up while others lost. This picture is a scream and has been a sort of vacation picture for the makers of it, including the intrepid Hal Roach, who directs them.

Fay Tincher, the Fine Arts star, is in receipt of an official announcement from "The Mirror," considered the foremost of Australian picture magazines, advising her that she had been awarded second prize in their contest. The first prize was given to Mary Pickford. In their communication, the editors of "The Mirror" paid the comedienne a high tribute and assured her that Australians are real boosters for Fay Tincher pictures.

Edward Sloman of the American, and a camera man, went to the borders of Mexico with the idea of taking some "atmosphere" scenes for his five-reeler "Reclamation." Sloman struck a snag, for the Governor asked a lot of money for the privilege of crossing the border and braving bullets. After wasting two days in vain efforts Mr. Sloman traveled twenty miles down the border and crossed "on his own," getting the scenes he wanted. He had to hurry back into United States territory for the party were chased by Mexicans. "There are Mexicans and Mexicans," says Sloman; "this lot were dirty in every particular. Honestly, I felt like leaving a cake of soap when I crossed the border but I did not take the time to extract it from my bag. You see, we were in somewhat of a hurry!"

Three masked and armed bandits raided this week the office of the General Film Company at 822 South Broadway, and after binding the night shipping clerk, H. C. Drake, to a chair, relieved him of some small change, and then searched the office. Failing to find any more money they gagged their victim with his own handkerchief and fled. An hour after the bandits had left the building Drake managed to work the cord from his hands and at once notified the police. Detectives failed to discover any traces of the robbers.

Phillips Smalley this week received a cablegram that his father, George W. Smalley, the well known journalist, had died at his home in London. Mr. Smalley was in advanced years and was one of the last of the famous war correspondents and journalists of the civil war days. Mr. Smalley was during the civil war associated with Horace Greeley, editor of the New York Tribune, and it was he who wrote the account of the Battle of Antietam, of which he was an eye witness.

There is another baby born at Universal City, the third since the film city was opened a year ago. It's a bouncing baby boy of Mr. and Mrs. William Stith. Mr. Stith is connected with the technical department at Universal City. The new baby is to be named Wallace in honor of the boss of the big Universal ranch, who is a brother of J. Warren Kerrigan. The other two children, who were born at Universal City, are the son of C. F. Oelze, assistant to Wallace Kerrigan, and Virginia Richdale Kerrigan, the superintendent's daughter. Each of these infants is frequently used in the pictures.

The Burbank theater, which was leased by the Triangle Exhibition Company a few months ago, will return to stock and Oliver Morosco will open on May 1st with a revival of "The Lion and the Mouse."

Charlie Murray and a number of other photoplayers will present an original farce comedy at the Eagles' picnic at Selig Zoo, April 30. Among the many stars now employed by the film companies in Los Angeles are scores who are members of the Fraternal Order of Eagles. All of them, the regular duties permitting, will attend the picnic and have some part in the entertainment features. The trained animal stunts which also are to have a prominent place on the day's program are in the course of careful preparation, and a number of acts original in every way are promised. The Los Angeles Railway Company will provide additional car service to and from the picnic grounds. Steam and electric interurban will run excursions from the outside towns within the Los Angeles district from as far as Santa Barbara, San Bernardino, Riverside, Santa Anna and all of the beach cities.

B. P. Reynolds, Los Angeles Times-Universal Animated Weekly cameraman, is thanking his lucky stars that he is blessed with more avoirdupois than the usual allotment to man. Reynolds one day this week was hurrying in his automobile to cover an important news event for the Weekly, when he was spilled from the machine. An autoist of the fair sex ran him down. Reynolds weighs in the neighborhood of 225 pounds, and he landed in some soft dirt, escaping without more than a severe shaking up. After hitting Reynold's car the woman driver climbed to the curb, and her car stopped only when it came in contact with a fence. Strange to say neither of the machines suffered much damage, but Reynolds, after picking himself up, quickly took the name and address of the reckless woman autoist and then jumped into his car and started away to cover his assignment.

The Signal Film Corporation are laying plans for the enlargement of the company's studio on Pasedena avenue to accommodate increased activities of this studio. According to plans the office and the laboratory buildings will be moved forward to the street and their place occupied by additional stages. Director J. P. McGowan this week received a consignment of special lights for use in the making of night scenes in their current production "Whispering Smith." Many of these have been reconstructed into street lights placed along the curbings of the Medicine Bend street set at the studio for night scenes to be filmed in the set. According to the scenario many of the important scenes in the production take place in this street at night. It is to get good night effects that the company erected these powerful street lights.

The Lasky Company is putting on a feature production with Sessue Hayakawa and his wife, Tsura Aoki, the noted Japanese actors, in the leading roles. They will play the parts of Americanized Japanese who own a fashionable curio store.

George D. Taylor, the Pallas producer, has finished the George Beban picture, "Pasquale," and from all accounts it is one of the best he has turned out so far. Myrtle Stedman played the opposite lead.

The "Flying A" companies at Santa Barbara have received orders to return to production of only one and two reel pictures with the exception of William F. Russell's company, which will continue to make four and five reelers.

The concluding scenes of "Highest Bidder" were taken last week by William F. Russell and his company of players on the highest point of the Sierra Madre mountains. The company stayed up in the snow for a week and returned to Santa Barbara with a bunch of excellent out-door scenes.

De Wolf Hopper and Douglas Fairbanks, the eminent Fine Arts stars, have been greatly honored by the Lambs Club, which has named two rooms after them. The De Wolf Hopper Room and the Douglas Fairbanks Room are for the public use of the members of the club. When notified of their names being selected by the committee to adorn the doors of rooms in the Lambs Club, De Wolf Hopper and Douglas Fairbanks expressed great appreciation of the tribute paid them. They are both very anxious to return to the East and personally inspect the rooms. At the expiration of their contracts the stars are planning a flying trip to New York, where the Lambs Club is located.

Douglas Fairbanks has now completed his sixth Fine Arts play, "The Bouncer," and it is very likely that he will continue under the direction of William Christie Cabanne, who directed him in his screen debut, "The Lamb," "Double Trouble," and his present play. "The Bouncer," which is the working title of this picture, contains many excellent comedy situations and Jos Singleton in the character of the valet has a number of very good scenes with his master, Douglas Fairbanks, as well as William Lowery, who plays the leader of the gangsters. Bessie Love appears as the girl with which our hero is in love.

Edward Dillon, who directed De Wolf Hopper in his first three Fine Arts plays, is making arrangements to stage a photoplay in which Fay Tincher, Tully Marshall and Seena Owen will play leading roles. The supporting cast will include Chester Withey, Max Davidson and F. J. Butler. The story is by Roy Summerville and Chester Withey. The latter wrote "Sunshine Dad" and "The Philanthropist." Fay Tincher takes the part of an artist's model, who is the victim of drugs. The play is laid in a modern atmosphere and deals prominently with an artist, which part is taken by Tully Marshall.

Frank Good, the Fine Arts photographer who is filming the Norma Talmadge play, will take part in the 150 mile gasoline derby scheduled as a concluding event of the California Ascot Speedway season.

Cameraman Good was once a racing driver of note and has been fighting off his desire to desert the crank for the steering wheel, but finally he had to give in when Cliff Durant requested Good to drive his "Durant Special" at the Ascot races. Co-producers of the C. M. & S. A. Franklin, for whom Good turns the camera, plan to dismiss the company for the day on which the race will be held in order that the players can root for their photographer.

Lasky May Releases

Geraldine Farrar, Sessue Hayakawa and Blanche Sweet in Productions for the Paramount Program.

WITH Geraldine Farrar, Sessue Hayakawa and Blanche Sweet as the stars, Jesse L. Lasky Feature Plays Company announces three important releases on the Paramount program for the month of May. Probably the chief interest of exhibitors and public will center upon the third Geraldine Farrar photoplay for the Lasky company entitled "Maria Rosa," which will be released on May 8 in first-run Paramount houses.

The other two productions are Sessue Hayakawa, the noted Japanese actor who created such a sensation in the Lasky production, "The Clue" and "The Cheat," in a photoplay entitled "Alien Souls," in which he will have the support of Tsuru Aoki, May 11, and Blanche Sweet in "The Thousand Dollar Husband," a James Young production released May 22.

These three productions offer striking examples of the Lasky output as they include three stars of varied and different temperament and style, in three productions, each entirely distinct and different from the other in story and character.

"Maria Rosa" is a screened version of the play of the same name by Wallace Gillpatrick and Guido Marburg, which was presented in dramatic form on the New York stage two years ago with Lou-Tellegen as the star. It is a coincidence that Geraldine Farrar appears in a screened version of the drama in which Lou-Tellegen, now her husband, made his debut as an American actor.

The story is one laid in a Spanish province in which Miss Geraldine Farrar appears as Maria Rosa, a young peasant girl for whose hand two friends are ardent suitors. Jealousy prompts one to shift the evidence of crime against the other, who, in turn, is put in prison, Maria Rosa, believing him dead through forged evidence, marries the villainous suitor. On the wedding day the convict returns, in which situation Maria Rosa kills her new husband after he confesses his treachery, and the play ends with the promise of happiness. The cast includes in support of Miss Farrar, Wallace Reid, Pedro de Cordoba, Horace B. Carpenter and Anita King.

"Alien Souls" is a photoplay by Hector Turnbull, who also wrote "The Cheat." The American screen has few delineators of characterizations so well known as the young Japanese actor, Sessue Hayakawa. After a series of successes in Ince productions, Hayakawa appeared for the Lasky company in "The Clue," "The Secret Sin" and "The Cheat," and in response to the hundreds of requests from exhibitors of Paramount exchanges all over the country he now becomes a full-fledged star.

The story of "Alien Souls" is based on the impossibility of the peoples of two races so diverse as the Japanese and the Anglo-Saxon to successfully merge in a social way. The cast includes Tsuru Aoki, Earle Foxe and Grace Benham.

Blanche Sweet, who has shown her extraordinary powers as an emotional screen artist in a number of productions, will be seen in "The Thousand Dollar Husband" in a part of lightness and sunshine. This will be James Young's second production for the Lasky company as he has already completed "Sweet Kitty Bellairs," with Mae Murray in the title role, which will be released through Paramount at an early date. Theodore Roberts, James Neill, Tom Forman, Horace B. Carpenter and Isabelle Malone will appear in principal support of Miss Sweet in this photoplay.

Mr. C. Ridderhof

Advertising Manager Appointed by the Coles Picture Machine Corporation.

H. B. COLES announces that C. Ridderhof has been engaged as advertising manager for the Coles Picture Machine Corporation. A variety of experiences has fitted Mr. Ridderhof particularly for discharging the duties of this position. He served several years as machinist; was a foreman and superintendent of machine shops, and has designed a number of different kinds of machinery.

C. Ridderhof.

As assistant manager of the Western Gas Engine Corporation, manager of the Wilmarth & Morman Company and manager of the Zono Manufacturing Company, all concerns engaged in the manufacture of machinery, he had charge of the advertising. Later he was in the employ of the Hotpoint Electric Heating Company, the largest exclusive manufacturers of electrically-heated appliances in the world. During his connection with this company, in the capacity of manager of the advertising department, Mr. Ridderhof wrote a course of instruction in electricity, showing that he is well posted on matters electrical.

Last year he was the advertising manager for that great association of electrical interests, the Society for Electrical Development, in its campaign for Electrical Prosperity Week. Millions of pieces of advertising matter were distributed during this campaign, and it proved to be the biggest sales-building event in the history of the electrical industry.

The modern motion picture projector is a combination of mechanical, electrical and optical features, and that Mr. Ridderhof is not a stranger to any of these is indicated by the above and also by the fact that he was awarded the degree of Doctor of Optics by the South Bend College of Optometry.

His versality will stand him in good stead in the work of promoting the use of the Coles Picture Machine Corporation's projector: "The machine without the intermittent sprocket."

Work on the new catalog has been started, and requests for the book will be filled as soon as it is off the press.

In the Eighty-first Street theater, New York, recently, Anita Stewart, the Vitagraph star, was the principal attraction at a benefit being conducted for the benefit of the Actor's Fund and disposed of her photographs at fabulous prices. Originally it was intended to sell the pictures for a nominal sum, but when the demand threatened to overreach the supply, prices went up by degrees and a price of $5 per photo was the prevailing rate for the closing sales. Miss Stewart was exceedingly popular with the audience and was tendered a fine ovation.

YOUNGEST LEADING LADY.

Little Pauline Curley, now playing one of the leading roles in "Where Love Leads," a coming Fox release, is the youngest actress in motion pictures holding that important position. Miss Curley, who is only twelve, is playing a society girl of eighteen, but she has been on the stage since a babe in arms.

New Stars for Morosco

Mlle. Jolivet Now En Route to Los Angeles Studios—Miss Goodrich Already at Work on Morosco Subject, "The Tangle."

CLOSELY following the announcement of the acquisition of Vivian Martin, it was learned at the New York offices of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company that this concern has added two new stars of prominence to its roster in the persons of Mlle. Rita Jolivet and Edna Goodrich. By strange coincidence both of these well known favorites of the screen and stage have appeared on the Paramount program in the past under the Lasky trademark. Mlle. Jolivet in "The Unafraid" and Miss Goodrich in "Armstrong's Wife."

Rita Jolivet.

Mlle. Jolivet made her American stage debut with Otis Skinner in "Kismet" some four years ago, which proved an instantaneous success. Following a long run of this play at the Knickerbocker theater, New York, she appeared here in "When Ignorance Is Bliss" at the Lyceum, "What It Means to a Woman" at the Longacre, "A Thousand Years Ago" at the Shubert and other Broadway attractions. In London she enjoys a particularly large following, as a result of her appearance at the Haymarket, Playhouse, Royalty, Comedy and other internationally-known theatrical institutions. A number of Italian photoplay successes produced by such organizations as Ambrosio and Gloria Films also present her in the chief role. Although the subject is not known at this time, it is understood that it will be one of George Broadhurst's recent stage successes.

Edna Goodrich.

Edna Goodrich, whose greatest characterization on the stage was in the starring role of "The Genius," as Nell, although scarcely past her twenties, has spent eight years behind the footlights during which time she has scored many personal triumphs. Among her successes are "When We Were Twenty-one," "The Gilded Fool," "In Missouri," "The Master Hand," "The Easterner," by George Broadhurst, "His Neighbor's Wife" and, as a headliner in big time vaudeville, in "The Awakening of Minerva." In Longfellows' "Evangeline," dramatized by Arthur Hopkins, she also became widely prominent. Miss Goodrich is already at work on her initial Morosco photoplay, "The Tangle." This production is an adaptation from the play "The Making of Magdalena," in which Mary Emerson originally starred, resulting in a record-breaking tour.

The Goodrich photoplay will be released on the Paramount program early in June and will be followed by the Jolivet production.

LASKY'S BIG OPEN-AIR STAGE.

Constructed with a view to efficient preparation for the busy summer months when many stars of the dramatic stage in addition to the long roster of popular favorites already at the studios, will appear for the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, a new open-air stage built under the personal direction of Cecil B. De Mille is nearing completion at the studios of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company at Hollywood, California.

With the coming of the summer season in Southern California the motion picture colony can look forward to week on week of beautiful clear sunshine unhampered by winter's rain. Although the Lasky studios have a large glass inclosed stage of sufficient size for six companies to work simultaneously, the new open-air stage will give working space for as many more. An elaborate system of sun-breaks or awnings will be installed, and it is believed that first work on the new stage will be done before several present productions in course of making are finished. These include Blanche Sweet in "The Thousand Dollar Husband," directed by James Young; Fannie Ward in "The Gutter Magdalene," directed by George Melford, and new Marie Doro and Victor Moore photoplays.

Lasky Open Air Stage.

Since the Lasky Company, a little more than two years ago, took possession of the block at Vine and Selma avenues, Hollywood, California, the studio has constantly undergone a process of elaboration and extension. The new stage, which is placed on a concrete foundation, will be completed about the same time that the new laboratory, costing $125,000, is put in operation.

EDWARD JOSE MAKES REMARKABLE RECORD.

Edward José, who personally directs the successful Pathe serial, "The Iron Claw," on May 1 will celebrate the completion of his first year as an independent producer. During the twelve months he has made "The Beloved Vagabond," six reels; "Simon, the Jester," five reels; "The Closing Net," five reels; "Nedra," five reels; "The Light That Failed," five reels, and fourteen episodes of "The Iron Claw," twenty-eight reels, a total of fifty-four reels, or over a reel a week. This record is remarkable, all the more so as the pictures have been uniformly of a high quality.

Among the artists who have been under Mr. José's direction during the year, are such sterling performers as Pearl White, Edwin Arden, Kathryn Browne-Decker, Irene Warfield, George Probert, Fania Marinoff, Howard Estabrook, Bliss Milford, Madeline Traverse, Margaret Greene, Robert Edeson, Jose Collins, Creighton Hale, John Dunn and Sheldon Lewis. Very few directors can point to a list like that.

BIG STAGE SETTING FOR STRAND.

New York's Strand theater has just completed arrangements for the installation of a new stage setting which will be one of the most elaborate and most expensive ever made for a moving picture theater. The cost of material, painting and installation will bring the total to $10,000. This is due partly to the fact that the flat pieces of the scene will be painted on velvet. The spirit of the setting will follow the trend of the new school in stage art, employing vivid colors and unconventional designs. It is hoped to place the new setting in the Strand by May 7, the week in which Geraldine Farrar will appear in her third photoplay, "Maria Rosa."

Universal Releases

Program for the Week of May 1 Is Strong and Well Balanced.

THE Universal program for the week of May 1 is an unusually strong one. It leads off, on Monday, May 1, with Hobart Bosworth in "Dr. Neighbor," a five-reel Red Feather drama in which Mr. Bosworth is supported by Dorothy Davenport. The Nestor comedians, Lee Moran and Billie Rhodes, fill out the day's program with "Her Hero Maid."

Stella Razeto, Juan de La Cruz and Gladys Brockwell are featured in the Gold Seal two-reel modern drama, "The Purple Maze," which is released on May 2. On the same day Cleo Madison is featured in the Rex drama, "Eleanor's Catch," and Victor Potel and Eileen Sedgwick cavort around in the Imp comedy, "When Slim Was Home Cured."

Mary Fuller, supported by William J. Welch and Edna Pendleton, appears in "The Girl Who Feared Daylight," which will be released under the Victor brand on May 3. Alice Howell and Ray Griffith add the comedy balance to the day's program in the L-KO comedy, "The Bankruptcy of Boggs & Schultz." The Universal Animated Weekly, No. 18, containing views of Dr. Waite, and the last ride of "Wild Bob" Burman also will be released on May 3.

There will be no release under the Laemmle brand on May 4, but two topnotch photoplays, one featuring Thomas Jefferson, son of the late Joseph Jefferson, and the other King Baggot, will more than make up for the deficiency. Mr. Jefferson and his little child actress, Zoe Bech, make a delightful combination in "The Beloved Liar," a three-reel human-interest drama, which will be released under the Big U brand. Mr. Baggott is featured in a protean photoplay, "Won with a Makeup," in which the veteran Imp star assumes many puzzling disguises.

Edith Roberts and Sydell Dowling are co-starred in "Just Kitty," a delightfully charming Imp comedy-drama, which will be released on May 5. On the same day, Myrtle Gonzalez and Fred Church are featured in the Laemmle drama, "The Thief of the Desert." Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Betty Compson close the day's program with "Lem's College Career," a two-reel Nestor comedy, which is loaded to bursting with laughs.

On May 6 "The Leap," a Bison two-reel railroad drama, with Lee Hill and Gene Rogers, will be released.. Gale Henry and William Franey present "A Perfect Match," a Joker comedy, on the same day.

"Scaling the Jungfrau," a Rex educational scenic will be released on May 7. It will be followed by "The Marriage of Arthur," a two-reel comedy-drama, with Rupert Julian and Elsie Jane Wilson heading the cast. The L-KO single-reel comedy, "Mr. Buddy Briggs, Burglar," with Gertrude Selby and Reggie Morris furnishing the fun, closes up the week with a laugh.

The attention of exhibitors is called to the fact that during the week of May 1 the first episode of the new Universal serial, "The Adventures of Peg o' the Ring," will be released. Episode one, in which Ruth Stonehouse, formerly of Essanay, and Eddie Polo are starred, supported by Grace Cunard and Francis Ford, is entitled "The Leopard's Mark."

"Ramona" to be Shown in Boston

In a Few Weeks Clune Film Will Be Playing Simultaneously Across the Continent.

ANNOUNCEMENT is made that the Colonial theater in Boston will be the New England summer home of Clune's cinema-drama "Ramona," another production of the elaborate film founded on Helen Hunt Jackson's famous romance being sent there while the New York company continues its run at the Forty-fourth Street theater.

Negotiations for the presentation of "Ramona" at the Colonial, Boston, have been concluded by W. H. Clune, the Los Angeles film magnate, and his associate, Lloyd Brown, on behalf of the "Ramona" company, and Klaw & Erlanger, as the representatives of the Colonial theater management. The definite date for the opening has not been set, but it will be about the latter part of May.

With the opening in Boston "Ramona" will be running simultaneously on the Pacific Coast and in New York and Boston. The chain across the continent will be further strengthened by the addition of Chicago and Cleveland in the course of a few weeks. In Chicago "Ramona" opens at the Auditorium on June 19. The Cleveland theater and date have not yet been announced.

Selznick Selects His Staff

Four Well-Known Exchange Men Form the Nucleus of Distributing Company for Clara Kimball Young Features.

WITH four of the best-known exchange and sales experts in the film industry as the nucleus of its organization, Lewis J. Selznick Productions, Inc., the distributing company for the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation, began its nation-wide campaign this week. The first of the producing company's features will be "The Common Law," an adaptation of the noted novel by Robert W. Chambers, and with this remarkable production to exploit the new Selznick Exchange managers expect tremendous results.

The four men who have resigned important positions with big film concerns to align themselves with Mr. Selznick are Ned H. Spitzer and Sol J. Berman, of Bluebird; Sam E. Morris and Ben S. Cohen, of World Film.

Mr. Spitzer has been identified with the industry for nine years. He began with the late William Harbeck, was associated with the Warners and in the distribution of "The Million Dollar Mystery" and then became the Kansas City manager for World Film. Later he was engaged as general Canadian manager for William Fox, since when he has been general representative for Bluebird.

Mr. Berman has been in the film business for ten years. He organized in Des Moines, Iowa, the first exchange in the middle west. He was the Pittsburgh manager for Metro and district manager for the famous "Million Dollar Mystery." For a while he was New York exchange manager for World Film, from which position he went to Bluebird, associating himself with Mr. Hoffman in the launching of that company.

Mr. Morris knows the exhibitor's end of the industry perhaps even more thoroughly than any of his associates, having been one of the pioneer exhibitors of Pittsburgh. It was only a year ago that he shifted from the exhibiting end to the exchange, becoming Cleveland manager for World Film. He was one of the early advocates of the feature film and a founder of the original Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, of which he was the first vice-president.

Mr. Cohen's career was told in these pages in a recent issue. He, too, was a World Film district manager and one of the best-known film salesmen and exchange managers in the country.

In collaboration with Mr. Selznick his new staff is at present engaged in going over the field, sorting out the thousands of applications for the Clara Kimball Young features and establishing exchanges in the principal cities. As soon as their preliminary work is completed they will make a comprehensive tour of the country, getting in personal touch with all the principal exhibitors and supervising the establishment of the Selznick exchanges and branches.

TRIANGLE PLAYS AT EIGHTY-FIRST STREET THEATER.

At the Eighty-first Street theater the newest Triangle film plays will be shown. On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday the well-known comedian, DeWolf Hopper, will be seen in a new comedy, "Sunshine Dad," in five parts, replete with fun and action. The newest Mack Sennett Keystone comedy will be shown.

On Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday the noted stars, William H. Thompson and Anna Lehr, will be shown in an intensely interesting story, "Civilization's Child," the story of a girl so ignorant that she believes only in good and happiness, and her pathetic and heart-rending experience. The latest Triangle Keystone comedy, directed by Mack Sennett, will be shown.

An exceptionally meritorious vaudeville bill will be given with the above.

BUTTONS ISSUED WITH "SOCIAL PIRATES."

In response to requests from many exhibitors, Kalem announces that the small buttons, which proved so popular a publicity aid on "Maxim's at Midnight," "Stingaree" and other Kalem features, have been issued on "The Social Pirates." The attractive button, three-quarters of an inch in diameter, carries the likenesses of Marin Sais and Ollie Kirkby, stars in this George Bronson Howard series. The early demand indicates that the buttons on "The Social Pirates" will equal the one million mark set by the aids on "Maxim's at Midnight."

V-L-S-E Special Features

Big Four Organization Has Many Important Productions On the Way.

IN line with the policy of the Big Four to offer at frequent intervals, features of extraordinary drawing power as added stimulus to the prestige and profit of the exhibitors handling the company's regular run of releases, there is announced for the next few months an unusual number of such pictures.

With "The Battle Cry of Peace" still playing to crowded houses all over the country, and "The Ne'er-Do-Well" creating a monumental success, the new additions will give exhibitors a tremendous lever with which to boost summer business.

"Salvation Joan," a seven part production which marks the return of Edna May, the famous heroine of "The Belle of New York" to public life as an entertainer, although only released a week ago, has already established box office records, while the success of the Essanay-Chaplin burlesque on "Carmen," is so sensational, that to dwell on its magnetic powers would be superfluous.

This week marks another big eight reel feature—"God's Country and the Woman," presented by the Vitagraph Company. It has been running at the Fulton Theatre, where leading critics of the New York papers were most commendatory in their endorsement of it.

The next big special production is the Essanay film version of "Sherlock Holmes," in seven reels, with William Gillette in the part which he has invested with world-wide success on the stage. It is scheduled for release, May 15th.

Work on "The Crisis," an adaptation of Winston Churchill's best known novel, is proceeding rapidly at the Selig studios. The same cast which appears in "The Ne'er-Do-Well" will be seen in "The Crisis," and critics who have watched the filming of the feature are unanimous in predicting that Selig will outdo all its previous successes.

A powerful and original drama entitled "The Combat" is fast assuming shape under the hands of Director Ralph Ince. This picture is scheduled for nine reels, and is expected to prove a greater sensation than any of the other big Vitagraph productions yet exploited. The settings are of the most elaborate nature, and a thoroughly unique and thrilling plot maintains its interest from start to finish.

The Lubin Company is rounding out its extensive preparations for the filming of the three Rex Beach novels, "The Barrier," "The Iron Trail," and "The Silver Horde." All of Mr. Beach's stories are noted for their rapid action and wealth of stirring incidents, and those mentioned above are particularly well suited for camera purposes.

These notable additions to the V-L-S-E program are "special" only in their exceptional drawing qualities. They all will be offered in strict accordance with the Big Four's popular policy of basing the rental price of every picture on its box office value.

"Saints and Sinners" for Peggy Hyland

Famous Players Select Henry Arthur Jones Play with Which to Introduce British Star to American Public.

"SAINTS AND SINNERS," the celebrated drama by Henry Arthur Jones, which has scored big stage successes both here and abroad, has been selected by the Famous Players Film Co. as the vehicle in which to introduce Peggy Hyland, the noted British star, to the American public. Miss Hyland will make her initial appearance in American photoplay theatres on the Paramount Program in May.

It is a powerful story which has exquisite country settings and delightful homelike atmosphere in the scenes which transpire in and around the parsonage. Letty is a mischievous little soul, whose whole life is wrapped up in her father and her lover. She is a dainty and sympathetic girl in whose career we cannot but become interested. She is the sort of heroine who makes us "hate the villain" in true healthy fashion. It is a peculiar coincidence that Miss Hyland plays the daughter of a clergyman in the photoplay and that she is, in real life, the niece of two well-known English vicars with whom she has spent a great deal of her time.

In "Saints and Sinners," Miss Hyland plays the role of a clergyman's daughter whose innocence very nearly proves her downfall. It is only the faith and determination of her lover and her aged father which save her after she has been taken to the city and lodged at a hotel by a man in whose honor she has every faith.

Another Producing Company

Popular Pictures Corporation with a Million and a Half in Capital Throws Its Hat in the Ring.

THE formation of The Popular Pictures Corporation, capitalized at one and a half million dollars, signals the entrance into the film industry of another big company, prepared to manufacture and market feature productions on a lavish scale. Already a country-wide system of exchanges is being organized, producing companies are being formed and the general machinery of operation being set in motion. So far have matters progressed that it is stated that the first production of the new company will be placed upon the market some time next month, and that by the first of next September a regular program consisting of one high-grade feature production released each week will be manufactured and handled.

The men behind the organization of the new concern represent a strong combination of experienced film men and strong business interests. Milton M. Goldsmith, formerly president of The Playgoers' Film Company, has been elected to serve a like capacity for the new company. Mr. Goldsmith is generally looked upon as one of the pioneers of the system of program marketing now in vogue. The vice-president of the corporation is A. C. Langan, formerly president of The Sun Photoplay Company. Mr. Langan will, among other activities, attend to the work of the organization of foreign branches, a task for which he is eminently fitted by past experience. A. J. Bimberg, capitalist, is treasurer of the corporation.

The new company has taken over the entire building, known as the Candler Annex, at 218 West 42d street, renaming it The Popular Pictures Building. The general offices of both the marketing and producing organizations, the New York exchange and a large projection room, have been installed in this building.

Announcements of the personnel of the producing companies will soon be made. Negotiations are now in progress with stars of international celebrity, while the directors selected are well and favorably known throughout the picture world.

NEW BLUEBIRDS COMING.

The Bluebird program adds another Tyrone Power production to its list early in June carrying the title of "The Eye of God." The Smalleys, who have so successfully produced numerous Bluebirds, have the entire credit for "The Eye of God." Lois Weber wrote the scenario and with her husband, Phillips Smalley, introduces a number of unusual procedures in the matter of direction.

Lois Weber plays the lead in support of Mr. Power and Ethel Weber and Chas. Gunn are the other principals. The story is told by a murderer condemned to death and pictures in logical sequence the events that led up to his predicament. The assertion is made by the Bluebird people that they have in "The Eye of God" a "crime" film equal in interest and mysterious details to "John Needham's Double," the feature in which Tyrone Power was first introduced to the program.

Another picture, equipped with unusual public interest, will be "Naked Hearts," a five-reeler based on Lord Alfred Tennyson's "Maud." In this beautifully contrived and executed picture, vouched for by the Bluebird management, Francella Billington makes her first appearance as a Bluebird star with Rupert Julian as her leading man. Olga Printzlau provided the scenario and the story derived from the poem, is credited to Rupert Julian, who also directs the production.

THE LUBIN-REX BEACH PICTURES.

"The Barrier" will probably be chosen by the Lubin Company for the first of the Rex Beach photoplay features with "The Silver Horde" and "The Iron Trail" following in the order named. Definite decision on this selection will be made within the next fortnight. Meanwhile preparations are progressing in an effort to make each production represent a new epoch in elaborate photoplay achievement.

The Rex Beach novels abound in thrilling episodes and big scenes and it is likely that nine or ten reels will be required for each story. The companies will be located in the regions described by Mr. Beach in his novels and when the final selection of principals has been announced it will be apparent that the Lubin Company has planned for the most important undertaking in modern history.

Brady Returns from T

World Film Head Reports Keen Interest in World Film Productions in West.

WILLIAM A. BRADY, now head of all the World Film Corporation, returned from a hurried trip to Chicago Wednesday morning, April 19, during which trip he visited Cleveland, Buffalo and Chicago, and since the wide-spread announcement of his forthcoming activities and the announced display of the first three "Brady-Made" World pictures, was besieged in every town by important exhibitors.

The Colonial theater, Chicago, for the past few months the headquarters of Triangle pictures, begins Sunday, April 23, running World Film pictures exclusively, starting with Clara Kimball Young in "The Feast of Life," being followed by Kitty Gordon in "Her Maternal Right" and then each of the World Film releases in turn.

The Colonial theater occupies the same important position in theatricals as the Strand theater occupies in New York. It is the most important motion picture theater in the west, and is of necessity the pet of the Jones, Linick & Schaefer enterprises. The subjects are as carefully selected there as it is possible.

Mr. Brady's trip to Chicago had a two-fold purpose. Arrangements are going forward for the opening there of Grace George in her repertoire of "Shavian" dramas and it was while Mr. Brady was there in the interests of this attaraction that he was besieged by various first-run exhibitors, with the result that the Colonial became the permanent World Film headquarters.

On his return from Chicago he spent a few hours in Cleveland and at Buffalo the same condition prevailed as in Chicago and Cleveland. The Palace theater of Buffalo, one of the finest houses in northern New York, secured World pictures for first run. The Boston theater, Marcus Loew's Orpheum theater and the new magnificent Fenway theater, in the fashionable Back Bay section of the Hub, have assumed World Film contracts.

This remarkable leap has been accomplished by the faith of the exhibitors in the continuance of the Brady policy which is so noticeable in the forthcoming three World releases. Clara Kimball Young in "The Feast of Life," Kitty Gordon in "Her Maternal Right" and House Peters in "The Closed Road" and those to follow, including Holbrook Blinn in "The Way of the World," Alice Brady in "La Boheme," Robert Warwick in "Friday the 13th" and Gail Kane in "The Other Sister." These pictures have been produced under the direct supervision of Mr. Brady with his censorship and physical efforts obtaining from the day the scenario was procured to the last dip in the finishing vats.

Early reports from throughout the United States of the nation-wide trades display held last Monday in the various states throughout the United States, in which World Film exchanges are located and to which the exhibitors were invited to view the forthcoming "Brady-Made" pictures, show a great interest on the part of the exhibitors in the new World productions and the fourteen offices already heard from show an exceptional number of new accounts and extensions and continuances of contracts already had. Almost every Metropolitan center throughout the country is responding with extreme rapidity to Mr. Brady's announcement, which was sent out through the mails and by the large insert which appeared in this paper in last week's issue, and which will appear in the May 6 issue of the Saturday Evening Post.

V-L-S-E FORCE GETS SUBSTANTIAL BONUS.

During the past week, there was distributed by the Board of Directors of the V-L-S-E to its employees, twenty per cent. of the net profits of that organization, in accordance with the plan established almost at the inception of the Big Four, for the purpose of stimulating the maximum interest in the company's service to its exhibitors. This is the third time within a period of nine months that such a division has been made.

This profit sharing idea, which makes each employee a partner in the corporation, has worked to such advantage for all concerned, that it has attracted widespread attention from companies in other lines. Recently the United States Department of Commerce made an investigation of the plan for the purpose of advising business enterprises generally of the cooperation between a sales force and its customers which the policy engenders.

Among the organizations which have adopted the V-L-S-E plan may be mentioned the company operating the Strand Theater of this city, whose employees were recently notified that they would be placed upon a profit sharing basis. The efficiency developed by the Big Four sales and office forces in their labors for the company's customers, has more than proven the wisdom of the plan, the V-L-S-E directors believe.

Paramount Program

Supplementary Subjects Comprise a Number of Single Reel Novelties.

SINGLE reel features completing the Paramount program for the week of May 8th will include additional screen propaganda in the "Preparedness" and "Better Babies" campaigns of the Paramount Pictograph; a jaunt with Burton Holmes and the Igorots "hiking" from Baguio to Bontoc of the Philippines in the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel-Pictures and another Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoon.

In continuation of the forceful arguments which are converting a nation to "Preparedness" doctrines, Henry Reuterdahl, greatest of naval experts, has prepared a picturization of his great story "Arm or Surrender" for the fourteenth release of the Pictograph. If every jinx in the world followed at the heels of members of the Thirteen Club, no one in that organization would have a single worry. Every known superstition is defied and proved unfounded in the Pictograph pictures in this release of the recent dinner given by this famous club in New York City where the guests walked under ladders, sat thirteen at table, carried skulls home in their pockets and laughed in the face of hoodoos in general. In other departments of the Pictograph will appear the picturized arguments in favor of the new ABC for infants—that of etiquette—warranted to create "Better Babies" even out of good ones; "Miss Nomination," a political cartoon by J. R. Bray, and "Happifat and Flossie Fisher Take An Unexpected Buggy Ride" in the Trickids.

The fourteenth release of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel-Pictures takes the audience with Burton Holmes as he "Hikes With the Igorots from Baguio to Bontoc." Governor-General Cameron Forbes and other men in the administration of Uncle Sam's insular possessions entertained Mr. Holmes in the summer capitol at Baguio. On the screen they are seen at their functions, ceremonies, and recreations. Of these latter, polo is a great favorite, both with players and spectators, and Cameron Forbes, himself, is a most proficient polo player. After leaving Baguio the travellers have no comforts except those which can be carried on the backs of Cargadores, or carriers, three of whom are women on the screen, who can carry thirty pounds of luggage thirty miles a day over trails as steep and winding as those of Switzerland. Many quaint sights greet the eye in this release—Grandmother smoking her pipe as she digs her native potatoes or "camotes," the native constabulary giving a little exhibition drill; Bontoc, the Igorot capitol; natives who shun clothes as immodest and others who thrive in raiment of their own particular type.

"Miss Nanny-Goat on a Rampage," the frolicsome adventures of a goat, will be the subject of the nineteenth release of the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoons. It is the work of Clarence Rigby of the Bray Studio.

WALTHALL TAKES VACATION.

Seeking a rest after completing nearly forty reels of film since the first of the year, Henry B. Walthall, Essanay star, is now in California. He intends to spend several weeks in complete recuperation, visiting film-world friends and scenes of past work, before returning to Chicago to appear in several new pieces which have been arranged for him.

His greatest work since the first of the year was thirty reels of "The Strange Case of Mary Page," long since completed. "The Misleading Lady," and other films also took up his time. After appearing in scenes all day and reading scripts most of the night, he has had nothing to do until the next morning. That he may greater enjoy his trip to the coast he has shipped a new motor car there and most of his travels while there will be overland.

VITAGRAPH PLAYERS CONTRIBUTE TO ACTORS' FUND.

The motion picture campaign for the Actors' Fund of America was given a decided impetus last week when several members of the Vitagraph Company contributed between them $500. Anita Stewart, Edith Storey, Dorothy Kelly and several others separated themselves from enough of their weekly stipend to total that amount.

"The Common Law" for Clara Kimball Young

Novel That Created a Furore Throughout the World Will Be the Initial Feature for the Popular Star.

A TRANSACTION of interest to every exhibitor in the country, as well as to the motion picture public at large, was the purchase this week of the world's picture rights to Robert W. Chambers' famous novel, "The Common Law," by the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation. Since Lewis J. Selznick first announced the formation of this new producing company there has been widespread speculation as to the character and quality of the pictures in which the beautiful and widely-popular star would be presented when the new organization should begin operations in July. This novel, "The Common Law," has been read and discussed by more people than any book published in ten years. It is safe to say that there is not a fiction reader in the United States who has not read and revelled in the story and the public demand for its presentation on the screen has been insistent.

A number of big producers have considered purchasing the novel from Mr. Chambers, but all are said to have weakened when the famous novelist set his price. There have been some big prices paid for the rights to picturize plays and novels, but in the purchase of "The Common Law," Mr. Selznick believes he has set a new record. The actual figures are not being announced, but the fact that Mr. Chambers recently scorned an offer of $12,000 for the rights to screen his book may be taken as some indication of the amount finally agreed upon.

Aside from the tremendous advertising value of the title and author's name, the story of "The Common Law" is magnificently adapted to screen presentation. It is just the sort of a narrative in which the films excel, clean-cut, swiftly cumulative in action, dramatic and fairly reeking with "local color" and "atmosphere." The central character, Valerie, the artist's model, could not be better suited to Miss Young's personality and dramatic gifts had it been written for her.

The purchase of the story was made through Mr. Chambers, Joseph Farnham, Al Woods and Selwyn and Company. At the conclusion of the negotiations, Mr. Chambers sent Miss Young a note in which he congratulates himself on the fact that his novel would be screened "by so beautiful and talented an artist."

Booking Billie Burke Pictures

George Kleine Reports That All Records Are Being Smashed by Demand for "Gloria's Romance."

ALL the amazing booking records of the past on serial feature film have been smashed already by "Gloria's Romance," the George Kleine motion picture novel from the pen of Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Hughes, in which Billie Burke is the featured star, and the work of signing up exhibitors still goes on. From all over the country reports indicate that prices hitherto undreamed of are being cheerfully paid by the exhibitors who are anxious to place Billie Burke on their screens.

As a special favor to a few large theaters in the larger cities of the country, contracts are being made which permit the screening of the film two weeks ahead of its general release date on May 22nd, and the surprising sum of $40,000 has been paid in one city for such a service. The owner of a large circuit of neighborhood houses has contracted for "Gloria's Romance" in all of his chain of theaters, and is paying $16,000 for the film beginning Monday, May 22.

Any number of houses scattered all over the country, which have never in the past held any picture on their screens for more than two days, and this includes such gigantic attractions as "Cabiria" and "The Battle Cry of Peace" are contracting to run the Billie Burke picture for a full week—the drawing power of this star having been so emphatically established that the management broke all precedents and booked the subject for a solid week.

Just as samples of the class of theaters that are contracting for the Hughes film novel one might mention the Studebaker in Chicago, under the management of Jones, Linick & Schaefer; the Arcadia in Philadelphia, which is operated by the Stanley Company; the Mary Anderson at Louisville, one of the Keith houses; and the Isis at Denver operated by Mr. Baxter. Ascher Brothers, owners of a whole circuit of neighborhood theaters in and about Chicago, have taken the production for their whole chain of houses, while in the East and the South, more than a dozen big chain theater owners are bidding against one another for the first showing of the picture.

All for Art's Sake

Marin Sais Dons Trousers for Double Role in Coming "Social Pirates" Episode.

MARIN SAIS dons trousers, a sticky little mustache, and a mannish wig—all in the cause of art—for "The Rogue's Nemesis," a coming episode of "The Social Pirates," scheduled for release on May 8.

"If the scenario calls for me to do it," declared Miss Sais when Director Horne suggested that male double might be secured for the particular scenes, "then I'll do it. There'll be no doubling in any of my parts, but believe me, the company pays for the outfit of male clothing that I must get, for when will I ever be able to use it again?"

In "The Rogue's Nemesis," George Bronson Howard has written another novel story, which shows the girls called in to aid in dealing justice to an unscrupulous hypocrite who is beyond the reach of the law. A carefully-laid plan succeeds in making him become interested in Mary, played by Ollie Kirkby.

It is then that Marin Sais is called upon to contribute her delightful performance in the male role, for she must pose as an eccentric musical genius, the husband of Mary. With this basis the story that follows may be expected to be rife with thrills and suspense.

May releases in "The Social Pirates" series will bring the episodes numbered from six to ten. The company at the Glendale studio is putting the finishing touches on the tenth episode. When weather conditions become suitable, Director Horne and the company are going to make another trip to Seattle, securing marine scenes on the boat trip and making extended stop-overs in San Francisco and Seattle for new locations.

Ivy Close Coming Here

English Stage Beauty Will Probably Make Screen Bow with American Company.

WITH the stated object of aiding in the work of collecting funds for the British Red Cross and British Stage Relief Fund, Ivy Close, the famous English star, is making preparations to come to the United States this Spring. Since the announcement comes so close on the published rumors that the international beauty might soon enter the motion picture field, it seems certain that Miss Close is to make her appearance with an American company.

So far no definite announcement concerning the film organization which she has joined has been made by Miss Close. She has, however, confirmed the statements that she would become a screen star. "I have long been tempted to take up picture work," she declares, "and the present seems a favorable moment, since war conditions must necessarily cancel my contracts for appearances on the Continent this year. I had planned to make an appearance in London this spring, but the motion picture inducements have been strong."

This trip will mark Miss Close's first journey to America. The star is silent as to the prospects of her appearing on the speaking stage while in this country. Three or four seasons ago Charles Frohman announced in London that he was bringing Miss Close to America for a season, but the plan fell through, owing to the fact that she could not make satisfactory arrangements for the cancellation of contracts for appearances that season on the Continent.

FRED SCHAEFER WITH VITAGRAPH.

Among the new faces at the Vitagraph headquarters in Brooklyn is that of Fred Schaefer, who is a newcomer in New York, but is far from a stranger to it. Mr. Schaefer is in the news service department recently organized by Harold Bolster, assistant to Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, and is just from the Pacific coast where he spent five years under contract with the Newspaper Enterprise Association as editor of their syndicated humor, which until recently was handled altogether from San Francisco. While on the coast Mr. Schaefer made a thorough study of motion picture production and activities and is well known among some of the western studios. He is even better known in newspaper circles all over the country and after arriving here has met hosts of his former associates in Louisville, Cincinnati, Cleveland and San Francisco located here in various lines of business. He is generally known as the author of "Oscar and Adolph," the dialect comedy cartoon stunt that was syndicated for many years and which was shown as a musical comedy two seasons.

OBSERVATIONS
BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

IT is now in order for all producers in the legitimate field of motion picture work, as well as all supervising boards (including official censors) to take a stand regarding fight pictures. Such film productions are neither a part nor parcel of the legitimate motion picture business. Under the existing laws they are prohibited from inter-state transportation. They figure in no way as a part of artistic presentation, but form only a part of financial revenue for the "dubs" who fight and the gamblers who back them. Everything tending to sustain the legitimate end of the motion picture business should be sustained by all who are its serious advocates. The first step is to sustain the laws. If they are unjust or oppressive there are courts in which they may be tested. There is also a remedy in repeal. Pending final adjudication in either quarter the legitimate producer will wisely bow to the inevitable. There must not be any attempt at evasion of the law. A cause founded upon such a principle savors not to the good.

This thought is the outcome of reflection on the acts of some people who claim to be law-abiding. When the negro, Jackson, won the championship from Jefferies, a few years ago, pictures of the fight were barred by the Inter-State Commerce Act. Some of the very people who were responsible for that enactment are new trying to "beat" their own work. The negro champion was defeated in Havana, Cuba, by a white man, and now some people cannot understand why pictures of the fight should be barred. The importation of pictures showing the latter fight has been fought unsuccessfully through two United States Courts and the sponsors for the importation declared they would take the case up for final adjudication by the United States Supreme Court. From the best information at hand that appeal has not been advanced. The people behind it, with the air of sharp legal wits, have attempted to ridicule both the law and the two court decisions. They went to the Canadian border line and secured a reproduction of the Willard-Johnson fight pictures by an ingenious arrangement of a camera on the United States side and the fight pictures on the foreign side. There is still a question as to whether an actual boundry line existed during the transmission. But a part of the reproduction was given private exhibition in this city recently as a test and many people are waiting the next move of the daring promoters. Careful observers are inclined to the belief that the scheme will not prevail. Expert legal opinion has been given to the effect that while a fine question is raised as to whether the pictures were brought into this country in violation of the law, there is no question as to a deliberate conspiracy to evade the Internal Revenue regulations, so that it is not likely that the fight pictures taken at Havana will become what the shrewd manipulators anticipate. If the Canadian scheme were allowed to go unchallenged then it would be an easy matter to thwart the Inter-State Commerce Act within the States. While the pictures taken by trickery at the Canadian border line could not, under the Inter-State Act, be transported from one State to another, nothing would stand in the way of having reproductions made over each State dividing line, so that the law fathered by the then disgruntled "sports" would be, in turn, defeated by their own recanting and trickery.

The legitimate motion picture people have never even attempted to evade the laws, and in order to not give the censorship agitators an undue advantage by saddling the trickery of a prize fight picture tricksters' doings upon the industry as a whole it would be wise for the Board of Trade of that industry to put its stamp of disapproval upon the prize fight picture evasion. Prize fight pictures do not belong to the industry. They are a speculative creation of fighters and backers.

Somebody has asked why a preponderance of foreign born directors are employed in making or trying to make films portraying every-day American life, while a startling number of native born directors, with all qualifications as to sobriety, reliability and industry, are unable to find jobs. To answer this question satisfactorily it would be necessary to first have the party raising it produce an enumeration of directors. On an off-hand glance the claim that foreign-born directors are predominant is not sustained. I am inclined to the belief that, through self interest, the one who has precipitated the discussion has so far over-reached himself that he is guilty of an aspersion upon the very people for whom he has made himself spokesman. To bring the issue to a head and give the home rights man a chance to back up his statements with facts, I will name a list of directors known to me and ask him to designate the foreign-born among them. Here is the list: Cecil B. De Mille, Fred. Thompson, Wilfred North, W. S. Davis, Jay Williams, Tom Ince, George Baker, John Ince, Sydney Drew, Wally Vannostrand, Burton George, Ralph Ince, James Young, Paul Scardon, George Fitzmaurice, Van Dyke Brooke, J. P. McGowan, Frank Currier, D. W. Griffith, T. M. Morsten, Otis Turner, Tefet Johnson, Paul Scardon, George Melford, Rankin Drew, Colin Campbell, Harry Davenport, Jack Halloway, E. H. Calvert, W. P. I. Earle, G. A. Smith, William Humphrey, John O'Brien, Donald Crisp. I have listed these names without regard to seniority or standing, simply to induce contra enumeration and settle the question as to whether there is a preponderance of foreign-born directors in the producing field in this country. The question itself does not amount to a hill of beans, but it is one of those provoking problems that help furnish ammunition for the enemies of the moving picture industry and give them an excuse to appeal to national prejudice. If a picture is a good one what difference does it make where the director was born? If his foreign birth is such a handicap to a director that he cannot intelligently produce a subject built along American lines it is an assured fact that no sane producing company will force him to continue along that line of work. It is to be regretted that a startling number of United States born men who are directors of standing with long lists of successes to their credit should be walking about looking for jobs, but why appeal to national prejudice to adjust the matter, especially when facts do not seem to bear out the contention that their condition is due to the employment of a preponderance of foreign directors? The complaint has not got a good sound. It seems to come from a source that lacks the spirit of confidence and ability. If the members of the theatrical profession were to take the same stand against the foreign-born members who are in the theaters of this country today, and have appeared in them for years, the press would charge them with know nothingism. The moving picture people already have sufficient home troubles to meet without dabbling with international questions. Their worst enemies are American-born hypocrites and grafters, who have blinded themselves to the teachings of the rock upon which the country stands—the Constitution of the United States. Whatever failing a foreign-born director may have in his work as a director in trying to portray every-day American life is of minute importance when compared with the ravages that are being made upon the moving picture industry by the censorship agitators, whose main idea of American citizenship seems to be a license to hold public office and get all they can out of it.

One of the clergymen who took an active part in the unsuccessful fight to establish official censorship at Rochester, N. Y., declared that "moving pictures cost the nation $500,000,000 a year." What the clergyman meant, but put in misleading form, was that the people of the country spend that amount of money in patronizing moving picture shows. It takes an enormous number of people to roll up that amount of money at the box offices of moving picture theaters. A powerful voting element is also reflected by the figures, so let the censorship timbers stop and reflect, especially the tools that champion the measures of the grafters and bleeders in the legislative halls.

WARDROBE FOR "GLORIA" INSURED.

Insurance to the amount of $40,000 has been taken out by George Kleine on the wardrobe of Henrie Bendel, Lucile, Balcom frocks that Billie Burke is to wear while playing the leading role, that of Gloria Stafford, in the new Rupert Hughes motion picture novel "Gloria's Romance," which is scheduled for release through the Kleine exchanges on Monday, May 22. Mr. Kleine was not inspired to insure these lavish gowns for such a sum merely on account of their cost, but largely because of the time, trouble and expense that would ensue should any of them be destroyed before the completion of the picture.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Decency.

EVIDENTLY photoplay lovers have the interest of the business closer to their hearts than some photoplay managers, for two outsiders are moved to protest at the manner in which current attractions are advertised. One of these sends a marked copy of the program of the Broad theater, South Bethlehem, Pa., which advertises the appearance of

> Marguerite Leslie, England's Loveliest Leading Woman, in
> The Question.
> The story of the efforts of women of culture and refinement to avoid becoming mothers.

At least the house does not appear to have made any effort to profit by the undue featuring of this film. It is announced in the same manner as the remainder of the program. This is to their credit, and the only objectionable part is the crudity with which the subject of birth regulation is announced. It is a vital question; one that is attracting attention everywhere, and outside of the films it passes without bar, but it is coaxing the fanatical Pennsylvania censors to advertise the subject thus crudely.

The other objection comes from Colorado and is offered by a man who covers many towns in the course of his business, which is in no way connected with motion pictures. He sends in copies of the Cripple Creek "Times" and "Victor Daily Record," which is all one paper covering the two mining towns. Our correspondent writes in part:

> As a regular patron of the motion picture theaters and a fairly "constant reader" of the "World," I have been much interested and pleased with the contents of your department of the magazine, especially with your vigorous stand for clean and consistent advertising.
> In my work I visit numerous small towns in this vicinity and, having been in the advertising game, it is natural that I should take a more or less critical view of the various efforts at publicity put forth by the exhibitors.
> I am sending you, under separate cover, two copies of the "Times and Record," the daily paper of the Cripple Creek District which, besides Cripple Creek and Victor, includes several other small towns making up an aggregate population of about 15,000 people.
> Several of the better features show in Cripple Creek one night and Victor the following night. The former town has two houses, and the latter has three.
> You will note generous use of newspaper space is the order, and most of the ads are fairly attractive, but the way the beautiful Bluebird Masterpiece, Undine, is advertised amounts almost to a desecration of art. I leave it to you.

The objectionable advertisement reads:

> UNDINE
> Should be for > LADIES ONLY
> But Men will be Admitted.

This is a double-column, five-inch advertisement, set in very black type so that the "Ladies only" is prominently displayed. The press notice reads:

> "Undine," an adaption of the famous fairy tale, will be shown this evening at the Victor Opera House. The class in German at the Victor High School just recently finished their reading of this extraordinary book. It makes a spectacular picture, showing some 30 or 40 mermaids and nymphs, and the producer has made his characters appear in the attire that is usually thought to be worn by a nymph, which is almost nothing.
> Mr. Zeigfeld in his happiest moment never costumed a "Follies" with less expense than did the director of "Undine," for if the truth were known the total expense of costuming the girls in "Undine" probably did not exceed the ordinary cost price of a hair ribbon. There are scores of girls in the picture who are calculated to make the late lamented Anthony Comstock turn over in his grave.
> Is this photo-play "art" or "undress?" That probably is a matter of personally opinion. Anyway, the picture lives up to its boast that it is more daring than Annette Kellerman in the picture in which she disported herself in her flowing locks and was a water nymph beautiful to behold.
> "Undine" is an unusual picture. The Board of Censors would probably balk at passing its kind six days a week, but once in awhile it is all right.
> Anyway, what's the use of being prduish? The majority of mankind will enjoy it and call it good.

Undine has been produced two or three times, and it would be absurd to argue that the producers were unaware of the spectacular possibilities of the subject. That is one reason why it has been made repeatedly, but the story is a German classic known to every civilized tongue, and it is presented as a story and NOT as an exhibition of nudity. The making of the story requires the showing of Undine's companions, and that producer would be clumsy indeed who would present a screen version with the water maidens carefully cut out. It is a part of the story and not an interpolation. It belongs and it is necessary to the telling of the story. Undoubtedly there are many who will attend the showing of the film merely because it portrays semi-nudity, but there is no reason why we should be denied the showing of a classic merely because water nymphs are not cased in gunnysacking, and to say that the censors would balk at passing such subjects six days a week is to throw the story into the same class with a certain type of film that is kept for private showings. There should be some way of choking off persons who deliberately prostitute the classics to make a few dimes. Such a man would profane Faust by advertising "Come and see Marguerite seduced," and make the loose morals of Camille rise superior to the greatness of her sacrifice, which is what makes the story immortal.

If you want to make money out of the animal instincts, change your business. Do not drag the classics down to the mental level of the baser element, particularly when more and cleaner money could be made with the same film by appealing as well to those who can appreciate the story and its pictorial value, for it has pictorial value greatly in excess of its photographic aspects.

Look at it from the purely business side. This picture has but recently been studied by the High School class. Is it to be supposed that mothers would permit their daughters to attend the showing of a picture suitable for women only, but to which men were admitted? Suppose the class in English Literature numbered but thirty and that only twenty attended this performance. All would not come alone. Perhaps fifteen would come with one or more other persons. More than this, they would have been pleased with the picture as a work of art. They would have had a new and greater respect for the picture literature. They would come again and again. The pictures would have been given a greater value in the eyes of the better class of persons AND the men would have come, anyway. Just as a plain business proposition it pays to be clean and decent and have a proper respect for one's business.

Here's Another.

A correspondent in Cincinnati sends in another vicious advertisement. It cuts both ways, for it misbrands two different titles, the one shown and the one referred to. It is a pity that there cannot be some way of preventing the misrepresentation of subjects. This is the edvertisement:

> MOTION PICTURE SQUARE.
> COLONIAL | FIFTH ST., BET. RACE & ELM ST.
> Now Showing for the Second Week.
> CONTINUOUS FROM 9 A. M. TO 11 P. M.
> "FORBIDDEN FRUIT"
> The Sensation of the Age, More Daring and Bolder Than "DAMAGED GOODS."
> ALL SEATS 15 CENTS.

If this sort of thing merely reacted against the offender, no one would care, but it affects the business as a whole. And it's tough when picture fans are more jealous of the good name of photoplay than are the men who gain their living through their exhibition.

Nothing Doing.

If you merely print your house name on a herald or a Paramount or Metro magazine, it doesn't count. Do more than that.

Sergel Has Switched.

W. J. Sergel, who used to send in a lot of good dope from Buhl, Idaho, seems to have been jumping since then. He was with a house that went on the rocks through the desire of the owner to play vaudeville, too, and now he is with the Orpheum, Burley, Idaho, where he has started in. Here is one stunt he used:

> Recently advertised the Paramount subject "Snobs" by stacking a dozen or more milk cans in front of the lobby with cards attached reading "Is Your Milk Man a Duke?"—"4,000 Feet of Milk for Ten Cents"—"Has Your Milk Man Got 20 Million Dollars?" The cans were the large ones used for shipping milk and the unusual appearance of milk cans in front of a theater attracted much attention—and also patronage.

He sends in some programs from his "last job." Also he wants to know what we think of them. He liked them because he can change the color weekly. These are manila strips, about twelve by four. The colors are not as bad as they might be, though manila will not give a brilliant color, at best. Also we never did hug up close to the idea that it should be necessary to change the color each week to let the reader see that it was a new one. The better way is to make it readable and then it will be read and the date noted, if the days are dated. Mr. Sergel dates his days, but the strip program does not permit much to be done in the way of chat. We like better his current house program if he will fill it up. The first issue carries too much blank space because he sent the job over to the printer and trusted to luck. We know he can write the proper sort of stuff, and if he will get out a gossipy program he will do better pulling with talk than with color. He sends in some pretty newspaper advertising. Space was cheap and so he could use a lot and does much with six point rule boxes held together with bits of similar rule dropping from one to the other, like post cards threaded on ribbon in the home made calendar style.

An Ad. Squad.

The Borough Hall theater, Roselle, N. J., uses an inserted page in the Paramount Picture Progress for its program. This does nicely. The edge of the page is glued and slipped in between the cover and the first page. This holds down the cover a little, but not enough to matter, and gives a house organ that is better than a loose insert. Here is a good idea from a recent issue:

> The manager is thinking of organizing an "Advertising Squad" of six boys over 12 years of age to take care of the distribution of all our advertising matter. The organization will be something like this: The manager will appoint one boy to act as captain of the squad, then he and the manager together will appoint a second boy, and so on until six boys are selected who are willing to work together for our "Movies." Selections will be made from boys who personally apply to the manager for the job. Members of the squad will receive a regular "pass" signed by the manager admitting them to all shows. In addition to this, there will be one trip to New York to the theater during the winter and a boat trip sometime during the summer. The extent of these two trips will depend on the gross profits of the shows for six months preceding the trip. These profits will be governed largely by the way the boys do their work.
> Think it over, boys, and if it thinks well, let Mr. Gardiner know you're a thinker!

The house tried to get fifteen cents for Paramount but failed to make it stick and so came back to ten cents. We think that even in the Jersey suburbs they'll stand for fifteen cents if properly educated.

Getting It Right.

George Editor Carpenter announces that the E stands for Eustace.

Nicely Laid.

The Circle theater, Easton, Pa., gets out a program that is good but not striking, but it does better with its newspaper advertising. The copy shown is three eights and would be very good if they dated the day. In the example shown they do run the day, but in their daily work they say "today" and "tomorrow" instead of Saturday, April 1st. It costs no more and then it works even should the newspaper become so torn that the advertisement cannot be connected with the date line of the sheet. You cannot be too definite. Most of the advertisements are set with two heavy and two light rules, to give a box effect.

With an Index.

L. J. Scott, who does the publicity for the V-L-S-E Kansas City branch, issues a press sheet with the subjects carefully indexed in a line that shows what the story is about better than the catchline can. One item, for instance, announced "Noted Actress Plays for Charity." The index tells that "Edna May will donate $100,000 to charity," which is more what the editor wants to know, though the former makes the better newspaper headline. It is a good idea and passed along to the rest of the clip-sheet editors.

Gets the Idea.

The Berkeley, Brooklyn, sends in a house program for comment, and Joseph O'Brien wants to know if he is telling too much. He is telling a lot, but not too much, for by playing up the titles in small but odd type and holding the rest down, he makes it possible to skin over the program for titles or to read the announcement as the reader elects. He gets the sheet pretty full of type, but the cut should show that the titles stand up. The sheet is small and some of that bold face is only twelve points high, but it is more prominent than the rest, and so it shows, which is the real idea. Part of the back page should be taken for house talk, but otherwise the program works nicely.

Stunt Stuff.

Charles E. Couche, of the Sunset, Portland, Oregon, is doing stunts and making them pay. He writes:

> Kalem's "Black Crook" was a welcome surprise. I advertised it with little "coming" cuts with skull and cross bones, for several weeks in advance. Then I built hell in the main lobby during the showing. It was a realistic scene built of papier mache with a dummy, dressed as the Devil, holding the Sinner's Roll Call on his knee, on which advertising matter was written. Skulls, bats and an owl formed the minor accessories and the title in big red cut-out letters was suspended from above. Saturday's business alone exceeded $250, which isn't bad for a house that on Christmas day, less than six weeks before, and with equally favorable weather, showed about one-fifth of that sum. The lobby cost $25 complete. One factor was the music. I advertised that the enlarged orchestra would play the original music and put the music in a case in the lobby before the reels came, to show that it was the real thing.
> For St. Valentine's I had Bushman, and two huge red hearts were used to frame his photographs with pictures of Miss Bayne in smaller heart-shaped openings in this larger frame. I also announced that Bushman's record of 2,973 valentines one year was an unbeatable record, and that got into the papers. Business was fine.
> For Breese I used the book sale and a Yukon lobby that cost $25 and brought people from a' over the city to see it. The Magic Skin was tacked on a board and outlined in white with the legend "Watch it shrink." I used a calf skin, not getting in touch with any wild ass skins here, and the shrinkage was accomplished by means of a pen knife each night, a new outline being drawn. It drew a lot of attention. Dimples suggested a mossy cell that cost $30. The floor was covered with moss, held down by wire netting and the walls and ceiling were a mass of maple and willow, the frames being maple poles. Business is building and people come around to see what I have.

Mr. Couche sends in some excellent newspaper advertising, but it is the stunt stuff that seems to be pulling the house into prosperity, which no doubt greatly pleases Tom North, who suggested him for the job. Stunts pull when they are clever, timely and are not run too long. Get people expecting you to have something new and they will go out of their way to pass the house and see what you have. Some years ago when the National Cash Register was doing a lot of stunt stuff in its window displays a prominent theatrical advertiser in New York told us that he spent two car fares and valuable time getting down below the theater line to see what they had. It was not stuff he could use for his own shows, but it was for the greater part genuinely clever and it interested him.

Want Some Help.

If you will turn the paper sideways you will note that this is an advertisement for "Help Wanted." It works particularly well with this title, but the type arrangement and general idea can be worked over for other film if you have not "Help Wanted" booked. It comes from the Orpheum, Burley, Idaho, and W. J. Sergel writes that George Editor Carpenter told him to send it in. We wish that George Editor would round up some of the others. Mr. Sergel is an old contributor. We knew him for a live one before G. E. did.

Anyhow, it's good paper and generally useful. Mr. Sergel writes that he has "stolen" some ideas from the department including the Bleichisms. That is not correct. The stuff is sent in to be used by others and it is only borrowed when payment is made in kind, and Mr. Sergel is one who pays his debts with other good ideas. There is not another business in the country in which there are so many big men (even though they may have small houses) who are so ready to help others. Help yourself to what you like. Then when you do something good, pass it along for the others who have helped you. Mr. Sergel's programs are brief, but snappy and convincing. Here is a pick-up for program filler from a recent issue:

> Our red-headed—pardon!—auburn-haired operator, J. M. Bell, has some head for figures. He has doped out that since January 1 he has run through the machine 216 miles, 3 rods, 2 yards, 1 foot and 9½ inches of film. We have not verified his figures.

Another Exchange Organ.

The Kansas City Feature Film Company, distributors of Paramount, comes into the field with an eight-page semi-monthly well edited by Lee D. Balsey. It is printed on cream paper in black and it is typical of the service it represents, and gives an adequate impression of that service. They call it "Picture Pep," and "pep" is the text of all the articles, which urges snappy advertising and tells how to do it and what others have done. It was born with hair and teeth and will stand watching. The exchange organ is just as useful as the theater organ, and these various sheets throughout the country are doing valuable work in backing up the campaign for good advertising started by this department four and a half years ago.

That Rotten.

J. W. Llewllyn started something when he trained his patrons to say that a film did not appeal to them instead of pronouncing it rotten. R. B. Wilby, of the Strand, Montgomery, Alabama, is writing in his old happy vein in the Stramco "Post," and he has this to say:

> A film is bad simply because the story does not happen to appeal to you no more than French Dressing or Grand Opera or white hose is all wrong because you don't like 'em. It's all right to be a critic if you wish, but use a critic's gauge of excellence; the acting, the story, the fidelity to conditions existing at the time the action is supposed to take place, the clearness of the story as told by the players, the photography, the production, the consistency and the logic of the development, the humanness of the characters; but, please, not the appeal of the type of story to you. For that last is but a statement of whether you liked the picture or not, and does not necessarily have anything whatever to do with its being good, indifferent or "rotten."

Another good point in the Stramco "Post" is the italic line over each feature story that tells when the film will be seen at the house. It is not enough to give the program and suppose that the interested reader will turn to the program for information. Tell him every chance you get. We are glad to see that Mr. Wilby now has time to get busy. He is one of the soundest writers in the game and he is writing in his old Academian vein. You wil probably best remember him as the man who started the comparison between a sliding scale of admission and the varying prices for phonograph records.

Full But Good.

The Rex theater, San Francisco, gets out a weekly program on colored manila stock, 4½x10 inches. They fill it rather full of type, but the composition is good. It is used as a post card for mailing, and so serves a double purpose, since it can also be given door to door or lobby distribution. Colored manila is never very bright, but they have a better stock than usual for its kind, and it is not the color of a sick sage cheese.

Dates Needed.

The Victoria, Philadelphia, gets out some neat programs, but forgets to date the days and trusts to a single cover line. If it is worth telling at all, it should be told at every chance. They use a four-page sheet, 4x6, with the program on the inside pages, set as a whole.

Took the Hint.

George A. Bleich, of Owensboro, Ky., has taken our advice and is using a little talk on the front page of his eight-page folder. He comes straight out when he talks, but he backs talks with deeds. Here is a late one:

"TIPS" ON THE BEST PICTURES.

> Take in the whole "smash" from one end of the week to the other is my advice, as there isn't any one day that you can well afford to let go by. This sounds like stretching things, but go through this folder and see for yourself—bearing in mind that the absolute truth is adhered to in describing the merit of each program.
> Figuratively speaking, I have taken off my coat and rolled up my sleeves in a determined effort that you shall see the most interesting photoplays that can be secured, not for this one week, but for the weeks that follow as well. It's a task, but "by hooky" I don't mean to book any picture that "smells" in the slightest. They must be prime. Cut this out and frame it—see if there isn't some Washington in me as well as some George. Bleich.

There is a whole lot of "Washington" in Mr. Bleich, though his middle initial is not W. And it is the Washington that has made him so singularly successful.

Handy Cards.

The Cahill-Igoe Company, of Chicago, is issuing a series of colored photoplayer post cards that are nicely gotten up and which sell for a price that enables their generous use as souvenirs and advertisements. The company's sheet shows several schemes for their use, the reverse of the card being left blank for local printing in various forms. Only black and red are used, but stipple gives the suggestion of several colors in the ornamental border that encloses the portrait and a brief history of the player.

Has a New One.

Fred M. Taylor, of the Academy of Music, Newburgh, N. Y., is getting out a house organ, "Stage and Screen," and wants some suggestions. It is an eight by eleven sheet, wood stock, calling for fine screen cuts instead of the coarse stuff used, which does not show up well. The page is a mixed make-up, the first page carrying one twenty-em column and two ten-em columns following. Inside the twenty em column is centered with the smaller ones on the sides, and the back page has four of the small columns. It would be better to set the entire sheet in the standard thirteen em or thirteen and a half em column, and change the ads accordingly. This will make it better for cut work, too, as these are sized to the thirteen em column and trying to use them with the irregular measurement makes trouble. The effort should be to suggest a regular magazine make-up, and this cannot be done with the ten em column. Three thirteens would work out well in the same space and look more like something. In this case the advertising should be pushed to a margin and not run in the center, which still further spoils the suggestion of a real publication at present. The first issue carries some good house talk, but bears down a little too heavy on the proposition they wish to please. One of these a week is plenty. It is better to speak of other features of the house as well. Too much protestation does not sound sincere but suggests that advertising capital is being made. Apart from this the issue starts out very well indeed and is a clean and nice looking sheet of handy size.

Green——But

Tom North brought out the V-L-S-E Pals in green for St. Patrick's Day and listed Sigmund O'Lubin among the good Irishmen in the company. North of Ireland would not fit so well on St. Patrick's Day, either, would it? Mr. North announces that he has almost enough bona-fide subscriptions to get second class entry for Pals. More power to him! He does the trade more good than the quarter he asks.

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising for Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throwaways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. Mr. Sargent tells all he knows and this includes what several hundred successful exhibitors have told him. More than 100 examples. An introduction and then 299 pages of solid text. All practical because it has helped others. It will help you. Handsome clothboard binding. By mail, postpaid, $2.00

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Inquiries.

Questions concerning the writing (but NOT the marketing) of photoplays will be replied to without charge if addressed to the Photoplaywright Department and accompanied by a fully addressed stamped envelope. Questions must be typewritten or written with pen and ink.

Questions as to the financial standing of concerns or the probable markets for specific or certain styles of stories cannot be answered.

In no case and under no circumstance will any manuscript or synopsis be handled and if sent will be returned without reply.

A list of addresses of producing companies will be sent if the request is made direct to the publication office, but not where request is made to this department.

Criticism.

EVEN if it is a bit over-flattering, we are printing part of a letter from one of the German Money synopsis writers. She didn't like the crfiticism she got so she came back for more. That was not much more palatable, either, but good sense saved here, and now she writes:

> When I first got your short and snappy criticism, I went straight up in the air with the worst case of injured feelings you ever saw. I apologize for myself by explaining that success in my other lines of work came to me easily, and I expect I am a bit spoiled. Well, when I began to come down toward earth again, my common sense gave feeble indications of coming to life, and my thinking machinery began to revolve slowly. I reasoned with myself literally along this line:
> "Now, look here, young woman, cool off; anyone can get angry when their vanity is touched. In the first place, if what you wrote was ridiculous, you want to find it out, and in the second place, Mr. Sargent is a busy man, and has not time to waste being disagreeable. Furthermore, it will take you a few years to learn even half of what he knows about the photoplay business. So forget your injured feelings, and look for the reason of this criticism; it will be valuable to you."
> So I got busy, and I didn't have to look very hard, or very far for the reason, and it was valuable to me. My work has improved 100% since then. And then I thought of how many of us continually let our conceit stand in the way of our progress because we are not willing to learn from anyone else, and I learned a worth-while lesson right then, and wrote to thank you for it. And some time later, when you landed on me three times as hard, it didn't worry me a bit. But just think of the score or more people who put your criticism of their synopses down to professional jealousy! It doesn't take Charlie Chaplin to make that funny, either.
> I am working hard on my photoplay work, but am not trying very hard to sell anything, as I am working for a permanent success, and it would not do me any good to sell one play unless I could immediately follow it up with another as good, or better. Here is a point I have puzzled over lately: Am I not limited in my writing to a great extent by my lack of studio experience, and if I went after that experience, would the increased advantage compensate for the time spent in getting it?
> I am leaving for the South shortly to get some material about conditions in the cotton mill region for other work, but this should also afford good photoplay material, as we know very little about this side of life up here in the North. I notice every paragraph in this letter begins with "I," so I am going to stop before you are bored to death.

The best friend you can have is the person who tells you your faults; not in a spirit of malice, but that you may correct them. It is nice to be told that your work is good, but it is better still, later on, to get the checks that prove that strangers think so, as well as your friends. The check counts as a sign of success, but you cannot get checks and taffy at the same time. Get the checks and then you can believe the honeyed words. In the meantime the best friend you have is the one who yells at you.

A Contest.

Another contest is announced, this time by the Boston Traveler, in connection with the Atlas Film Company, of that city. The first prize is $250. Details of the contest may be obtained from the Boston Traveler. If you want the details, get the paper. This department does not supply the details of any contest, on general principles.

To Study Serials.

The best way to learn photoplay is to study photoplays, and those who would write serial stories will find it interesting to study Roy L. McCardell's "The Diamond from the Sky," now issued in book form by Dillingham. It affords an excellent example of how the suspense can be maintained in a story that must end its various instalments with a punch and offers a still better example as to how the vital first instalment may be made of unusual interest without spoiling what may follow. This is done, in the present instance, through the use of a prologue of vivid action which serves merely to pave the way for what follows. Most serials have been novelized, but this offers many advantages over most. Incidentally, it is a virile story that will hold interest without reference to the film.

Play vs. Story.

W. Grahame Jones, writing from the Lambs' Club, makes a nice distinction between "story" and "play." Perhaps he draws the distinction too fine, for every play must have a story and "story" was used in that sense in the paragraph to which the correspondent takes exception. He says:

> In the "Photoplaywright" columns of your April 1 number, under the heading, Questions of Price, it is stated that $10 a reel seems absurdly small pay to the author for a five-reel "story." It is not small pay. Similar successions of scenes in prose are turned out by magazine writers by the mile at 5 cents a word. Two hundred words will easily cover any of the average current releases. Any competent director can spread them over five thousand feet of otherwise valuable film.
> If the hitherto unattainable—a tense, orderly, sustained, progressively cumulative action can be realized on the screen, it will make a picture "play." If such a play is possible, and the demand for it is ever general among producers instead of for the "story," a higher rate of pay will result. The first symptom of such a radical change will be the dropping of the word "story" from the jargon of the studios.
> But this change will never take place generally until the studios demand and read Plot of Action instead of Synopsis. This is as obvious to those who know the mechanics of writing in action, as is the daily rising of old friend Sun.
> The call at present for anybody willing and capable of making the mental effort necessary to turn out a real photo "play" is like the noonday stillness of the Northwoods to the city dweller—a clamorous silence.
> The important question yet to be answered is whether the "traffic will bear" the charge of adequate payment for play craftmanship. Until this is settled, it is unfair to encourage writers unfamiliar with the business to chase the will o' the wisp, and your paragraph under the heading "Undervalued" is misleading in its implications. Hardened writers will forgive your reference to Sneak Thieves, especially as it is directly coupled with critics, and any who may have a glimmer of the far-off picture "play" will reason that because you said a "story" you are entitled to an alibi.

When a lot of conceited directors and editor get it through their concrete craniums that there are others besides themselves who have ideas, and may even be brought to admit that these ideas will be good, then there will be a demand for the continuity of action and photoplays will not possess the similarity they now show. But until that time comes, all ideas will be worked over by a handful of men in the same way they worked over ideas last week and the week before, and patrons will continue to drop out because they find no novelty in the offerings. If some manufacturers could only realize the damage done their interests by persons in their employ they would murder them. The trouble is that the manufacturers know even less about plays and trust to those who talk the loudest. And these men talk because they cannot think. They are striving to cover up their ignorance.

Be Neat.

Lately a woman sent in four stories with an offer to let us keep a third of the proceeds if we would sell them for her. We hated to handle the stuff even to the extent necessary to transfer them to a return envelope. They were positively filthy with dirt and grime. Even filthy does not fitly indicate their condition, and yet she kept on sending the stuff around to all sorts of places. A letter sent with the scripts indicated that she had sent them to the Photoplay Clearing House without fee or return envelope of any sort. Then she got a letter from a fakir and promptly accused the Clearing House of sending her scripts around, though they very evidently had done nothing of the sort. Some day she will send them to a place and they will go into the waste basket, and ever after she will feel that four of her nice stories were stolen.

The moment a script shows signs of wear and tear, recopy and offer the new manuscript. No editor wants to look over scripts that must be handled with gloves and disinfectant.

Technique of the Photoplay

(Second Edition)

By EPES W. SARGENT

Not a line reprinted from the first edition, but an entirely new and exhaustive treatise of the Photoplay in its every aspect, together with a dictionary of technical terms and several sample scripts.

One hundred and seventy-six pages of actual text.

Special chapters on Developing the "Punch," Condensing the Script, Writing the Synopsis, Multiple Reel Stories, Talking Pictures, Copyrights, etc.

In cloth, two dollars. Full leather, three dollars.

By mail postpaid. Add ten cents if registration is desired.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost) will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Important Notice.

During the coming summer the editor will deliver a lecture on projection in the following cities, namely, Washington, D. C., Baltimore, Md., Philadelphia, Pa., Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Trenton, N. J., Newark, N. J., Atlantic City, N. J., Hoboken, N. J., New York City, New Haven, Conn., Springfield, Mass., Boston, Mass, New Bedford, Mass.; Albany, N. Y., Troy, N. Y., and such other cities in the New England States, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Northern Virginia and Maryland, as may signify their desire to have him do so and their willingness to make proper arrangements to secure a full attendance of exhibitors and operators.

These visits are solely and entirely designed to awaken interest in the better projection of pictures—high class work on the screen. Enlarged photographs of light ray action, etc., are being prepared at heavy expense, and the lecture will be one which cannot fail to benefit the industry locally, and interest managers and operators.

It is expected that the local arrangements in the various cities will be taken care of either by the Exhibitors' League, or the Operators' Union, or, preferably by the joint action of both. There is no charge of any kind whatsoever in connection with this service, but the editor feels that it will be up to the organizations in the various cities to at least secure a full attendance at the meetings. I have things to say which will be of intense interest to every exhibitor, manager, exchange man and operator. Arrangements have already been made with organizations in some cities. Such unions and leagues in the cities named, and in such other cities in the territory outlined, as would like to have a visit, and are willing to make the necessary preparations are invited to communicate with the editor at once.

Next winter an extended trip covering the entire south, west and northwest is being planned.

Question No. 135.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of honor.

What arguments are there for any against glass in the lens and observation ports. What kind of glass would you suggest for the lens ports? What is a "shadow box," how would you apply one to the observation port, and what purpose would it serve?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 128.

The Roll of Honor on question 128 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, New York; Walter Collins, Tiffin, Ohio; Manuel Nosti, Tampa, Florida; O. J. Bean, New Bedford, Massachusetts; Walter E. Bryner, Springfield, Illinois; F. F. Bell, Palestine, Texas; W. B. Allen, Edmonton, Canada; Wilson Hays, Barton, Maryland; Charles S. Stuckey, Edmonton, Canada; Carl Schmidt, New Ulm, Minnesota; F. H. Marx, Ashland, Wisconsin; T. Richards, Blaine, Washington; B. C. Nye, Jr., Wolf Point, Montana; M. T. Suttles, San Marcos, Texas; C. E. Linstruth, Carthage, New York; George F. Cushing, Elizabeth, New Jersey, and one pencil written with no name attached.

I have selected the reply of Brother Hays as best suited for publication.

Reply to Question No. 128.

By Wilson Hays, Barton, Md.

The Question:

What are the evils commonly practiced in the re-winding room? Describe the effect of each. Is it advisable to employ ushers and other inexperienced help in re-winding films? Give full reasons for your opinion.

The Answer:

Some of the evils most commonly practiced in the rewinding room are as follows: "Pulling down" the film roll in order to get it all wound on the reel, or to prevent the loosely wound roll from "flopping." Pulling down is responsible for a very large percentage of the rain marks in film. One remedy for this would be the use of reels of larger diameter; another more tension on the rewind, thus causing the film to be wound tightly. Another evil is the hurried or careless making of splices. This is very bad at any time, but is particularly obnoxious when the film is on circuit. The next operator may not have time to look over and repair the reels before running them, so that any carelessness in splicing will mean that the "next man" and his audience will have to suffer.

Another evil is the use of poor film cement, or the applying of too little pressure in making splices, or failure to scrape the emulsion all off the stub end, or failure to scrape the back side of the celluloid of the other end, any or all of which tends to produce a weak and unsatisfactory splice. Another evil is failure to match the sprocket holes properly in making splices. Then, too, there is another fault, namely, failure to cut out pieces where the sprocket holes are gone on one side, with result that the holes on the other side are overstrained so that they soon become weakened, and that section of the film is a constant danger until it is removed, since under these conditions if the weakened sprocket holes give way at the intermittent sprocket the film will stop in front of the aperture and there may be a fire.

It is a custom of some operators to pin film together when it breaks on the machine. This is very bad, since it will spoil from two to eight pictures, though the worst harm is done to the rewind boy, who may let the film slip through his more or less tightly gripped fingers as he is rewinding at high speed in order to find the broken splice. If the pin happens to point the right way he will find it all right, all right, and find it good and plenty, too. A paper clip should be used instead of a pin. It is just as quickly put on, and can be seen from the side of the reel; also, if a little tension be applied to the reel in rewinding (and there always should be tension in rewinding), the paper clip splice will pull apart when the break is reached.

Another fault is failure to stop a high-speed motor-driven rewind when the film is rewound. This will work serious damage to the titles of the film, which will whip and slap around until the rewind is stopped.

Another fault is a dirty operating room floor, and bits of film strewn around. The first is bad if a few turns of the film happens to slip off the reel and down on the floor, and the second is dangerous from the fire hazard point of view. Another fault is the sending of circuit films to the next operator either not rewound, or in bad condition, and with no note attached calling attention to the need of rewinding or repairing. Another rewinding room fault is the practice of stealing leaders and tail pieces. Still another is the practice of sticking the leader in between the film roll and the side of the reel. A torn sprocket hole will often catch on the side of the reel and slice off perhaps five or six inches of the leader, which is, of course, never spliced back on again. This practice is partially responsible for short leaders. Another serious fault is rewinding at high speed, which often makes sufficient noise to disturb the audience. Rewinding at high speed is seldom or never necessary. If a motor is employed to pull the rewind, and if anything goes wrong when rewinding is being done at high speed considerable damage is likely to be done to the film. Another rewind room evil which is particularly obnoxious, especially when the rewinding room and the operating room are one and the same, is the leaving of reels lying about unprotected, instead of placing them in a fire-proof compartment, or box.

No, it is never advisable to employ ushers or other inexperienced help in the rewinding of film, for the very simply reason that, due either to ignorance or lack of interest, they are more inclined to practice the beforenamed evils than is an operator, or a person regularly employed as operator's helper.

There is no earthly question but that the two-machine-two-operator system is best where it can possibly be afforded. An usher is not an operator, and is not, therefore, a proper person to place in charge of the repairs on reels of film worth from $100 to $125 each.

[The reply of C. E. Linstruth was of such nature that it will be used in the department later on.—Ed.]

Projection Day.

About seven years ago, at a time when the term "projection" meant practically nothing, and the standing of the moving picture machine operator had no existence in fact, the editor of this department began to preach the doctrine of better results on the screen. For at least five years he stood practically alone in the advocacy of better operators, better operating rooms, better projection equipment, and better projection of the picture, but notwithstanding failure to arouse interest among the big men of the industry, he kept consistently, persistently and stubbornly hammering away on one thing, and one thing only, namely, better projection.

It was a long, long pull, and a hard one, but of late interest has become apparent in places where interest counts for something, namely, among the big producers. They seem at last to have come to an understanding of the fact that, after all, the manner of projection of their masterpieces really does count for considerable in the success of those masterpieces.

And now comes the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America and sets apart half a day, May 9th, during the big Motion Picture Exposition at Madison Square Garden, for the editor to address the producers, the exchange men, the exhibitors, and the operators on practical projection. The Motion Picture Board of Trade is going to call the day "Projection Day," and thus at long and last we have secured what amounts to an official recognition of the importance of projection.

The editor is having prepared enlarged light ray photographs and large drawings, and is getting together a thoroughly practical talk, or lecture on projection, dealing particularly with the fact that there is, in the United States and Canada alone, a loss of at least $40,000 a DAY in absolutely unnecessary film damage and loss of electric power, due directly to incompetency in the operating room and in the moving picture theater manager's office, and with the various things which operate to cause this loss.

This same lecture will be given in the various cities in the east and northeast during the coming summer, and in the south and west next winter.

It is indeed gratifying that the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America has seen fit to take this action. We firmly believe that great good will be accomplished through the opportunity presented to bring home to the big producers, and film exchange men the possibilities for improvement along the lines suggested. It has taken almost seven years of constant effort to reach this point and secure official recognition of the correctness of the position which the editor of this department has occupied during all that time.

Operating Room Dimensions.

The increasing size of projection machines calls for changes in operating room construction, and just what these changes ought to be is an extremely important matter. Space in theaters is valuable. Moreover, it very frequently happens that the operating room must perforce be situated directly in the auditorium, and under these conditions the manager is particularly anxious to reduce it to the least possible dimensions.

I WOULD LIKE TO HAVE THE OPINION OF OPERATORS AS TO WHAT THEY CONSIDER THE LEAST POSSIBLE DIMENSIONS CONSISTENT WITH REASONABLE CONVENIENCE AND GOOD WORK, AND WHAT THEY THINK THE DIMENSIONS SHOULD BE UNDER IDEAL CONDITIONS. Of course, it is understood that from the operator's point of view there might be no objection to an operating room 20 feet square and 30 feet high, but that is not what I mean. Personally, I am of the opinion that the legal 8 x 9 for two machines ought to be changed to 9 x 9, thus providing another foot in depth. However, I am not going to set forth my views at length just now. First, I would prefer to hear the ideas and views of operators. I would like to impress this point upon you: those who make the laws governing operating room construction have been guided in their actions by the projection department of the Moving Picture World more than you know, and answers to questions of this kind will be read by officials of many cities, who have directly to do with the enactment of laws covering things of this character.

In this connection I might add that this department will, I think, soon have something to announce with regard to the licensing of New York operators which will interest you all.

Stereoscopic Projection.

While in Chicago the firm of Davidson and Pritchard ran up the distress signal and sent an S. O. S. for the editor to call, which we, of course, immediately proceeded to do—that is, "immediately" as soon as we could dispose of the dozen other similar we-want-you orders.

Mr. Pritchard, by the way, is, and has for six years past, been a licensed (Chicago) operator who, until a year ago, was actively engaged in his profession. He is, however, a man of ideas, and has for eight years employed his spare moments in the perfection of an apparatus for projecting stereoscopic pictures, both in miniature and in regular theatrical practice.

After an examination of drawings of the apparatus I am free to say that his miniature stereoscopic machine cannot be otherwise than practical. It consists primarily of a special camera, the lenses of which are spaced approximately three inches apart; in other words, the approximate distance between the normal pair of human eyes. The negative is made in the usual way, except that an exposure is made by each lens, each lens making its exposure on a separate one-and-three-eighths-inch-wide negative film. These negatives are developed, fixed and dried in the usual way, and then they are placed side by side in a special printing machine, which prints both films on a special film approximately three and one-quarter inches in width.

This special postive is then placed in the machine illustrated in Figure 1, in which 34 is in effect a stereoscope, precisely like the stereoscope you find reposing on the parlor table of many houses. 30 is a ground glass screen upon which the view is projected, in enlarged form, by condensing lens 35, Figure 2. 29, Figure 2 is the aperture through which the picture is projected and 38 is the revolving shutter. It will thus be seen that the actual film image is magnified to the size of screen 30, which is the ordinary stereoscope picture size and gives to the observer a lifelike effect. The two pictures are projected to the screen simultaneously, and are illuminated by lamp 36, Figure 2, the mirrors set in the corners reflecting the light from the incandescent light through the condenser, which has the effect of securing absolutely even illumination for both pictures.

The other details of the mechanism can be, I think, understood by means of the two drawings. As I said in the first place, there seems to be no reason in the world why this machine should not deliver perfect results, and this department wishes Brothers Davidson and Pritchard complete success in its introduction to the public.

The other proposition, which involves the projection of life size pictures to the screen in regular theatrical practice is, however, very muchly "something else again." I hardly think that, at this stage of the game, it would be worth while to publish illustrations of this machine, because the proof of the pudding is in the eating, and the "eating" hasn't come off yet. In the first instance, drawings were entirely convincing. In the second instance, I would have to see the thing in actual operation before I could believe it, though it looks reasonable when viewed on paper. The modus operandi is approximately as follows: A double camera is constructed with two lenses, spaced about three inches apart. Two ordinary negative films is placed therein, one for each lens, but the exposure of the object, moving or otherwise, are made alternately, the camera being so constructed that instead of moving the film down three-fourths of an inch it moves it one and one-half inches, although the film picture is the regulation three-fourth inch high by one inch wide. So much for the negative. These negatives are then printed on a regular one and three-eighth inch wide film stock in such way that the images from the two negatives alternate in the picture spaces. The film is then projected at double speed, or 120 feet a minute. Mr. Pritchard firmly believes there will be a perfect stereoscopic effect. Well, I am not at all prepared to dispute that proposition, on the other hand I am not going in yet because I am afraid the water is too cold, though possibly it may be just the right temperature. However, I'll wait and stick one finger in first. The "sticking my finger in" consisting of looking at a picture after the machine has been constructed. I hope it will work, and work perfectly. However, that is a matter which is in the future. More than that I don't feel justified in saying, so far as the life size stereoscopic theatrical projection be concerned.

110-Volt Resistance on 65 Volts.

> I am on the road and have one of your Handbooks, which has come in mighty handy many times. But I now have a little trouble that I don't seem able to master. We have a 65 volt, 31 ampere, D. C. generator; 1,800 R. P. M., using a No. 6 Powers machine and Powers adjustable rheostat, 52 to 220 volts. My trouble is that I cannot get more than 22 amperes through the rheostat. I connected in multiple, as shown in B, Fig. 60, of the second edition of the Handbook, and the ammeter only shows 22. Use about 100 feet of No. 6 wire between the generator and the arc lamp. I would like to use the whole generator capacity of 31 amperes. How can I do it?

The trouble is, my dear sir, that when you connect the Powers 52 to 220 volt adjustable rheostat in multiple, as shown in Fig. 60 of the second edition of the Handbook, you are opposing resistance calculated to withstand 110 volts against a 65 volt line. You should proceed as follows: Make your connection as per A, Fig. 60, first having placed the adjustment lever on contact 8, then move the adjustment lever to 9, 10, etc., until you get your 31 amperes. You could, of course, get the same thing with connection B, Fig. 60, by moving the adjustment lever around about to contact 3 or possibly 4, but connection A is the proper one. You may have to bring the lever around to contact 12; in fact I guess you will.

There was an incident transpired here in Gotham a short while since that was in a way amusing, although I felt sorry for the brother, who was the victim of his own mistaken ideas.

A member of Chicago Local Union 110 who had, according to his own story, been running machines for several years, came to New York and applied for license. He took the examination and fell down so hard it nearly loosened his teeth. He had not believed in projection departments and handbooks. He had followed the leadership of the Right Honorable Jack Miller, who also does not believe in handbooks and projection departments—in other words, in education in the technical side of the operating. This man's ideas, however, underwent a sudden and very violent change. He said to me: "Frankly, old man, I was ashamed of myself." And so he should have been. He thought a transformer worked just the same as did a rheostat. Had not even the faintest idea of electrical induction, or anything else in connection with a transformer, except how to hook the thing up. He was absolutely and entirely lacking in knowledge of the action of the three-wire system. He could not answer even the simplest questions with regard to it, except that he knew that you used one rheostat between the neutral and the outside wires, and two between the two outside wires, but he did not know why that was done. Also, he was equally densely ignorant on all other matters of similar nature.

The question arises: How did this man get past the Examining Board in Chicago? For he held a Chicago license. The question also arises, how did he get into the Chicago Operators' Union? What kind of examination does that body conduct in determining the fitness of an applicant for membership if a man possessed of absolutely no knowledge of the technical side of his profession can pass it?

This particular man now is a firm believer in the advisability of studying handbooks and projection departments. He is no longer a disciple of down-with-knowledge advocates.

It would perhaps be well for others to take warning, because I think you will discover that in the very near future the New York City Examining Board is going to extend its scope, and examine applicants not only in the electrical end, but also in optics and practical projection, and when that happens it is going to take a well posted man to "get by." The man who secures a New York license under those conditions will certainly be in possession of the necessary knowledge to project a perfect picture, or as nearly perfect as modern equipment will admit of.

From New Zealand.

J. H. Berryman, Grand Picture Theater, Invercargill, New Zealand, says:

> I want one of the new Handbooks just as soon as they are off the press—at your very earliest convenience, please. Enclosed find £1 in payment therefor. Am not yet informed as to what the price will be, but want it as soon as it is out. If this is not enough I will remit the balance immediately. Am a constant reader of the projection department, and enjoy it very much. It contains much which interests and is of value. The light ray experiments were particularly valuable, and I would like them in book form when published.

The light ray experiments, illustrations and all, are contained in the new Handbook. It is pleasing to know that our work is appreciated in far off New Zealand. I sincerely trust the Handbook will meet with your approval, and that you will continue to enjoy the department.

Taking Care of Film.

F. P. Ray, Columbus, Ohio, says:

> I would like to know what, in your opinion, is the best recipe for cleaning films and keeping them in good condition. Is there any film cleaning fluid which I can purchase already put up?

I only know of two film cleaning fluids on the market, and I do not know whether they are still being sold. However, I will send you, by mail, the addresses of the two firms who did deal in this sort of article.

As to keeping film in good condition, so far as I know there is nothing but just plain water that will have any appreciable effect in keeping them soft and pliable. Glycerine is added to the emulsion because glycerine has the property of absorbing water. On page 204 of the new Handbook, a copy of which you ought by all means to have, you will find explicit directions for giving film a water and glycerine bath; also, quoting from the Handbook, same page: "Traveling exhibitors often find that a reel of film which has been a long time in use has become dry and brittle. It may be remoistened and rendered pliable by unwinding into a large metal can, in the bottom of which water has been placed, with a wire screen over it to keep the film from contact therewith. Cover tightly, and set in a moderately warm place until the film is soft and pliable. Watch closely, however, since if made too moist the emulsion will stick to the back of the film when rewound."

So far as I know the only effective method of keeping film in condition while in use is to keep water in the compartment in which the film is contained. I would like to hear from exhibitors and operators as to their views with regard to keeping films soft and pliable, or, in other words, in good condition. Letters from operators and traveling exhibitors who have had experience along these lines will be particularly welcome.

Absurd, Isn't It?

Milwaukee, Wisconsin, says:

> I can only move my lamphouse back far enough to get 16 inches between the apex of the front condenser and the film by reason of the fact that my operating room is so small that when the usher comes through to turn on the fan he would bump into the adjusting handles of the lamp. The distance from the film to the back factor of the objective is 4⅛ inches, and the opening in the objective is 2½ inches. What ought my lens system to be?

Referring to Table 1 on page 141 of the third edition of the Handbook, selecting 16 in the horizontal row of figures at the top, we follow that column down vertically until we encounter 4.096, which is as near as the table comes to 4⅛ inches. Opposite this, in the left hand column, we find that, under this condition, using two 6½ condensers, there will be no light loss if the objective lens is 2⅛ inches in diameter. It therefore follows that you will be able to "get by" without light loss, but if you could get 22 inches between the apex of the front condensing lens and the film you could then use two 7½-inch condensers with an objective lens opening 1¾ inches.

But, after all, this is an absurd proposition. Here is a theater manager who builds an "operating room"(?) of such economical dimensions that there actually is not room enough to pull the lamphouse back where it belongs, and where it must be in order to get the best optical effect. It seems to me it is high time theater managers (a goodly percentage of them, I am sorry to say, would be better designated by the term theater mis-managers) came to a very thorough understanding of the fact that it is no longer considered good form to line the inside of a soap box with sheet iron, and call it an operating room. Operating rooms should be not less than 9 feet deep, or, for two machines, 9 feet square; 8 feet front and back is no longer sufficient to meet the requirements of all cases. Projection machines are constantly increasing in size and this, of course, calls for larger operating rooms.

American Projection Society.

The year 1915 gave birth to a new and promising organization known as the American Projection Society, which has for many months had its headquarters and club rooms at 1777 Broadway, New York City.

The society, of which the editor has been a member practically since its inception, has no intention of in any way usurping the field of the union, or in any way interfering with its functions. The body is designed to be wholly and purely educational and social. It will admit into membership only experienced operators who are known to be men of good character, and who have a reputation for high class work on the screen. As a matter of fact membership is a difficult thing to obtain, nor can a man who does not meet the foregoing requirements become enrolled.

The intention is to make this body somewhat similar to the engineers' club, and to have branches in various cities, thus banding together in social and educational solidity those men who are recognized as high class operators, and who respect both themselves and their profession. The editor is heartily in accord with this sort of movement. He believes there is a very distinct and legitimate field for such a body, without in any way interfering with the union, or impinging in any way upon its legitimate field of endeavor.

The particular objects for which this corporation is formed are, to promote social intercourse and friendly relations among the operators of motion picture projection machines, and individuals of allied industrial interests throughout the United States and the Dominion of Canada; to unite the efforts of the motion picture machine operators and their associates as individuals or branch organizations in the promotion of their common interests; to maintain club houses in New York City and such cities as may be favorable for branch organizations for the use and benefit of its members; to disseminate by discussions, lectures and publications, useful information and knowledge regarding the advancement of the industry; to bring before legislatures and municipal councils matters needful of legislation and regulation, and to generally promote as a vocational society the interests of the vocation.

Utica, New York.

In the issues of March 11th and 18th I spoke of a new house in Utica, N. Y., and of the excellence of its projection, but failed to name the man responsible for the said results.

Charles H. Skinner is chief operator in this house, and the result on the screen is ample proof that Brother Skinner is a student of projection and a man who not only "knows," but applies his knowledge to good purpose.

The Smoky City.

A Remnant from the Late Trip.

Really in thinking of Pittsburgh I don't know whether to laugh or feel insulted, so I guess we will call it a laugh and let it go at that. Pittsburgh had been notified of our intended visit weeks in advance, and the Local Union had, under its seal, said: "We will be glad to have you with us, and will do all in our power to make your visit pleasant; also we will try to get the exhibitors, or as many of them as possible, out."

I found Brother Joseph Dean, secretary, waiting at the depot. He was seated in the waiting room with his I. A. button displayed, eyeing the stream of incoming passengers with a hope-he-don't-come gaze, for which I don't in the least blame him. Joseph, old boy, is all right. He really regretted the situation. It seems that the union, beyond approving of our visit, had done absolutely not one single thing in the way of preparation.

At union headquarters I found half a dozen operators engaged in that profitable and exciting pastime called "penny ante." So engrossed were they that the entrance of a visitor did not serve to in the least distract their attention, therefore an introduction was omitted. Surely it would have been a shame to disturb so earnest a gathering. Two of three of the men were not, however, thus absorbed, and we did have the pleasure of a hand clasp and a pleasant word of greeting with them.

Brother Dean then piloted me around to the Theater Equipment Company (I think that was the name of the concern), where I was introduced to a very busy gentleman, who shook hands heartily, said: "I'm very glad to meet you; I've read lots of your stuff," and—went right on working, so I backed gracefully out and visited the office of Ludwig Hommel, where at last my wrinkled, ruffled, mussed-up dignity was smoothed out by a reception which showed that at least one Pittsburg man was really, truly glad to see me.

Brother Hommel, and two of his men, J. R. Newman and Charles A. Swartz, and the editor had dinner together, and enjoyed a long, most pleasant chat. These gentlemen remained with me until, at ten-thirty, Brother Dean reporting a "possibility" of being able to get at least a dozen and perhaps twenty-five (out of a hundred members) of the men, and maybe one or two exhibitors up to the union hall at midnight, I decided that the bed looked better than that kind of proposition, and concluded to call all bets off and turn in.

During the evening we visited the "Temple" theater, where Brother R. O. Freemand, president Pittsburg Local Union No. 171, M. P. M. O., works, and met that gentleman. Freemand frankly told us that he could not come to the meeting because he had stayed up all the two previous nights contemplating various combinations of pasteboards with which he sought to bring about the financial downfall of certain opponents who also held various and varying combinations of pasteboards covered with spots and interesting colored pictures. President Freemand did, however, finally agree that, provided some one notified him when the meeting was to be (at 9 P. M. that item was not yet decided), he would try to be there. This was indeed kind of Brother Freemand, as anyone could see with half an eye that his exertions of the two previous nights had put him to what we commonly term "the cleaners," and anyhow the opportunity to listen to a talk on projection is not of any great interest to a union president—why should it be?

The picture at the Temple theater is, under the conditions, absurdly large. When I entered in the afternoon (Freemand not on duty) there was a charming collection of what appeared to be paving bricks, brickbats and brickbatlets around the picture. In the evening those decorations were absent. The definition of the picture was none the best. Its illumination was good, considering its huge size, and the speed was O. K. At the side of the screen was a clock, with an incandescent lamp, illuminating its face—and most of the surrounding wall. Also on either side was an exit sign, the letters E X I T showing very faintly, but the light glaring in the audience's eyes balefully.

It was also our pleasure, and a very genuine one, too, to meet Brother C. W. Shepherd, of the Weiland Films Exchange. Shepherd is a live-wire. I like to meet such men. The industry needs them, and perhaps just a few more Shepherds scattered around in a certain city noted for its smoke might serve good purpose. Brother Dean undoubtedly meant well. But he was very plainly discouraged by the indifferent attitude of the men, who, after inviting a stranger to their city, treated him with what amounted to rank discourtesy.

I am told that the Pittsburg managers swear by The Moving Picture World, and that few of the operators read it. From what I saw and experienced I can believe this to be the exact fact. It is the live, progressive operator who reads and studies the department. The non-progressive, can't spare time from more important and absorbing pursuits—such as, for instance, penny ante.

In this article I have sought to be lenient. A statement of facts cannot, of course, offend anyone. I assume the Pittsburg boys did just what they wanted to do, and don't care two whoops who knows it—why should they?

I expect to visit Pittsburg again, but suppose it will be up to me to make arrangements with the Exhibitors' League next time, as it would be presumption on my part to again seek to disarrange the Poker Club's schedule.

New Motor Generator Set.

The Universal Motor Company, Oshkosh, Wisconsin, is offering to the moving picture trade a motor generator set which possesses features of distinct value. I have personally examined the set, though I have not seen one running; also I have had reports from users of the machine which are quite satisfactory.

The engine is nothing more or less than a well constructed 4 cylinder, 4 cycle automobile engine, modified for stationary use, having the manifolds cast in, the cylinders of which have a 2.625 inch bore, and a 4 inch stroke. The engine speed varies from 700 to 1,100, according to voltage. The crank pins are 1.50 inches in diameter and 11.75 inches long. The crank bearings, two of them, are 1.75 inches in length. The connecting rods are of drop-forged steel. All parts of the engine are interchangeable. Ignition is by means of a magneto. The engine is water-cooled.

Below we have a general view of the engine and generator, the two being direct connected, showing the crank for starting the carburetor and magneto. The engine stands 26 inches high, and occupies a floor space of 18 x 42, but added floor space is required for the water tank which is an integral part of the outfit, though not shown in the illustration.

Reliable figures as to the efficiency of this machine are not yet available, but we are told by users that current is produced at a low figure, even with gasoline at its present high price.

This outfit certainly is at least worth the careful investigation of those who propose to purchase a motor generator set for their theater.

Automatic Take-Up.

Joseph Miller, Utica, New York, says:

> For some time past I have been working on an automatic take-up device, which is now perfected. It will automatically supply even tension to the take-up throughout the projection of a 1,000-2,000-foot reel, or for that matter a reel of any size. It works perfectly, is very simple, and can, I think, be adapted to any machine. Would you kindly advise me as to whether or not there would be any market for it?

I am afraid not, Brother Miller. During the past two years this department has had a number of very excellent tension equalizers presented to it, and several of these devices have been presented to the manufacturers, but without result. Except in one or two instances I am still of the opinion that the take-up of our standard projection machines can be very materially improved, but getting the manufacturers to do that little thing is something else again.

A Foolish Blunder.

Owners of the new Handbook will please turn to Figure 92, Page 236, and switch the names, placing voltmeter where ammeter is and ammeter where voltmeter is. How such an utterly absurd blunder occurred is beyond my comprehension. The draftsman is the goat, but nevertheless I should have seen the mistake myself in reading the proof, but I didn't. It will, of course, be corrected in all books sent out from now on, but present owners will have to make their own correction in pencil.

Green Tones by Vanadium and Iron.

Positives for this bath should be a full shade or even two shades lighter than normal and should be developed in metol-hydroquinon developer as a plain hydroquinon formula does not give good results with this bath.

	Avoirdupois.
A. Potassium Ferricyanide	4 lbs. 4½ ozs.
Ammonia .880	13 ozs.
Water to	10 gals.

Bleach for two to ten minutes, then wash for ten or fifteen minutes, tone in the following.

	Avoirdupois.
B. Ferric alum (Crystal) (Ferric ammonium sulphate)	13 oz. 2 drams
Vanadium chloride (stock sol.)	25 fl. oz.
Potassium bromide	6 oz. 5 drams
Hydrochloric acid (concentrated)	2½ oz.
Water to	10 gals.

Refer to green tones by Vanadium and Iron for composition of vanadium stock solution.

Temperature of toning should be around 70 degrees F and the time of toning ten to fifteen minutes.

Wash for ten minutes after toning.

Providing Bath A is screened from the light and kept covered in order to prevent the undue escape of ammonia, the bath keeps fairly well, but should the same show any signs of weakening it should be revived by the addition of a further quantity of ammonia equal in amount to that originally used. If so revived at intervals, 10 gallons will bleach 8,000 feet of film before exhaustion.

Ten gallons of solution B will tone 6,000 feet of film without further addition of acid, after which it should be thrown away.

Olive Green tones with iron (two solutions).

This tone is almost indistinguishable from those obtained with vanadium. Use a thin metol-hydroquinon developed positive with this formula, plain hydroquinon does not give very satisfactory results.

Bleach in solution A as for green tones by vanadium and iron, and after washing for ten to fifteen minutes tone in:

	Avoirdupois.
Ferric alum	13 oz. 2 drams
Potassium bromide	6 oz. 5 drams
Hydrochloric acid (concentrated)	2½ oz.
Water to	10 gals.

The time of toning, washing, life of bath, etc., are the same as for green tone by Vanadium and Iron. Should the highlights of the toned image be stained blue, this is due to insufficient washing after bleaching.

Iron Blue Tone. Use normal or slightly thin positive. Tone in the following:

	Avoirdupois.
Potassium bichromate	15 grains
Ferric alum	1 oz. 250 grs.
Oxalic acid	4 oz.
Potassium ferricyanide	1 oz. 146 grs.
Ammonium alum	6 oz. 5 drams
Hydrochloric acid 10%	1 oz. 2 drams
Water to	10 gals.

The method of compounding this bath is very important. Each of the solid chemicals should be dissolved separately in a small quantity of warm water and the solutions allowed to cool. The latter should be then filtered into the tank strictly in the order given, and the whole diluted to the required volume. If these instructions are adhered to, the bath will be free from any sign of precipitate and will remain so for a considerable period.

Tone for ten to fifteen minutes and wash ten to fifteen minutes until the highlights are clear. A very slight permanent yellow coloration of the clear gelatine will usually occur, but should be only just perceptible, when it is of no moment in projection. Should any sign of blue stain occur, this would be an indication of a stale bath or incorrect mixing of the same. These remarks regarding stains apply in all cases where single toning solutions are employed.

If the acid is renewed to the extent of the original amount after toning each 1,000 feet, the bath will on the whole tone 3,000 feet per ten gallons of solution.

If even after revival, the tone remains flat, the bath is exhausted and should be thrown away. As the bath becomes exhausted, the time of toning should be extended a little longer than ten minutes in order to obtain the necessary contrast.

After continued use, a slight bluish sludge will collect in the bath, but this is of no moment. Should this form, however to an appreciable extent, it is due either to incorrect mixing, the action of light, or to contact with metallic surfaces.

Two solution iron blue toning bath. Starting with a light normal positive, this is toned according to instructions given for olive green tones with iron.

The tone image is then immersed in the following fixing bath for three minutes:

	Avoirdupois.
Hypo (crystal)	8 lbs. 5 ozs.
Sodium bisulphite (EKCo.)	2 lbs. 1¼ ozs.
Water to	10 gals.

After fixing the film is washed for ten to fifteen minutes. Should the resultant image be too thin, the toning solution should be allowed to act for fifteen minutes, or positive film of greater contrast should be employed.

Violet Tone with iron and ammonia. The iron blue tones may be converted to violet or dark blue by immersion for one to two minutes in the following bath.

	Avoirdupois.
Ammonia Pure .880	3-5 ozs.
Water to	10 gals.

Wash for one or two minutes and dry.

After some time the film will turn blue again but the violet tone can be restored by treatment with ammonia.

In many cases pleasing effects may be obtained by tinting film which has already been toned, the result being that the clear portions of highlights assume the color of the dye, whilst the shadows and half-tones project a tint intermediate between that of the dye and the toned deposit.

Considerable judgment is necessary, however, in choosing suitable tints to blend with any given tone.

The most successful combination of toning with tinting is in the production of sunset and moonlight effects over water, by first toning blue and subsequently tinting "orange" or "red."

The following combinations will cover most cases required:

Yellow Brown tone with pink tint.

Green and Blue tones with light yellow tint.

Blue and Violet with almost any delicate shade.

It is considered unnecessary to illustrate every combination of tone and tint above, so that only typical examples have been given. It must be noted that toned film, except copper and sulphide toned, dyes more quickly than untoned film in any given dyebath, so that in order to obtain the exact tints above the dyebaths should be diluted with about an equal quantity of water.

Dye for five to ten minutes, according to shade desired.

The equipment necessary for systematic toning and tinting is essentially the same as that required for development, consisting of the usual tanks and racks or small drums, only it is highly desirable that the same should be used for this purpose exclusively and, if possible, occupy a separate room in order to exclude any possibility of contamination of developing solutions either by the copper or sulphiding bath, which would cause development fog immediately.

The "drum" system, on account of the great expense involved in apparatus and the larger space required for manipulation, is not to be recommended for toning and tinting operations, though for the worker on a small scale, who only desires to produce short lengths of film at intervals, a small wooden drum revolving in a shallow wooden tank is most efficient and economical. The tanks employed should be of slate or other resistive materials, and have an outlet at the bottom in the form of a hard-rubber stopcock or a plain wooden plug.

Wooden tanks may be used but when once used for one color, cannot be used for any color that is complementary to the one previously used.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by Clarence E. Sinn and S. M. Berg

Inquiries.

QUESTIONS concerning any phase of the work of the orchestral leader in a photoplay theater may be addressed to the Moving Picture World and the answers of Mr. Berg will appear in a Question and Answer Department, which will be a regular feature of our Music Page.

Musical Setting for "The Closed Road."

Released April 24 by the World Film Corporation.
Suggestions prepared by S. M. Berg.
(By special arrangements with G. Schirmer, Inc., Music Publishers, New York.)

THIS "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is not designed to solve every possible musical requirements of the film, but is intended as a partial solution of the problem—what to play for the picture. It has proven to be of great assistance to the leader, not only by relieving to a degree the tedium of rehearsals, but by assisting materially in overcoming those conditions encountered when the film is not available until the hour of performance.

Musical Suggestion Cue Sheets can be obtained (free of charge) by managers from their local exchange in advance of the date of release, and a sufficient number should be secured to provide one for each member of the orchestra. This will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film drama he is to portray with his orchestra.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will help the leader to anticipate the various cues which may consist of the printed sub-title (marked T) or a described action (marked D). For instance: 11¼ T "Two days later" is a sub-title and is printed reading matter on the screen. But 2½ D "Grocer's bill" is a description of action.

Frank Sergeant, believing his heart is affected and that he has only six months to live, is about to commit suicide when he is stopped by Julia Annersley, whose brother is unjustly convicted of a murder. Sergeant agrees to confess to the crime and takes her brother's place. Later the brother learns of the sacrifice and at the 11th hour the murderer is discovered. Sergeant learns he is perfectly normal and when released from prison is united to Julia.

The whole character of the story is dramatic.

Note particularly: 34¾ Knocking on door, 46¾ Telephone bell, 70 Shots, and 71½ Telephone bell.

The theme selected is "Little Song"—d'Ambrosio.

Time schedule: 75 minutes, five reels (about 5,000 feet).

Time.		Subtitles or descriptive cues.	Music.
0	D	Opening.	Little Song.....d'Ambrosio (Allegretto moderato) (Theme)

75	T	The End.

NOTE.—For the convenience of readers of the Moving Picture World a price list of the numbers suggested in the above cue-sheet is to be found in G. Schirmer's advertisement on Page 1045.

Improvising.
Article IX.

Before I interrupted the drift of these articles to answer some queries regarding major and minor keys, we were about to take up the question of musical themes in their relation to characters and dramatic situations. As set forth in Article II, (page 1823, issue December 4, 1915, Moving Picture World), we can give a separate musical theme to each of our characters, or we can choose a theme supposed to be appropriate to the story. In either case we will play other music for the purpose of "filling in" and revert to our theme whenever we wish to emphasize some point in the story. A good improvisor will make his theme express many emotions in addition to that shown in the original form. He does this by change of tempo and expression as well as by alterations of the melody. Examples of alteration of melodies have been shown in previous articles. Change of expression and change of tempo (speed) are too well understood to need more than mention. But simple changes of expression must be the first thought of the picture accompanist when molding his music to fit the play. This is accompaniment. It is when he finds it expedient to give other forms to his melody—to alter its shape—that improvisation begins. Article III. (page 2178, issue of December 18, 1915) gives some of the more practical forms of alteration.

Say your hero is a sailor and you therefore choose some well-known sea song for his theme. An old-timer which is not too hackneyed is the song: "They All Love Jack," a portion of which is given in Example 37. As a lively 6-8 movement this will be appropriate to the lighter scenes in which "Jack" predominates. It would be used to introduce him—unless his first scene should be at utter variance with the lively character of the music. In that case you could still use this theme and alter its character by playing it slower. A slow 6-8, it can be given a sentimental or a plaintive character. Changed to 4-4 and played with a heavy marked accent will give it a bold, heroic swing. Sometimes you will find it effective to introduce a few measures of one of your themes in some other number—just to recall the person to the minds of your hearers. A storm, for example, in which a few measures of "Jack's" music might be given occasionally—just enough to be recognized as his music. In such cases you will not interrupt the tempo nor rhythm of the piece you happen to be playing, but make the theme conform to it. Example 38 shows a few measures of the subject introduced in a storm scene.

Ex. 38.

It is not always necessary to play "Jack's" music when he appears, nor to limit to such times as he is in the scene. Sometimes a character may influence a scene and not appear in it. Your heroine may be thinking of him; she may be in danger or in some trouble and needs his help. Or the audience knows he is on the way to her. In this case if his music were played softly before he comes into the picture, swells at his entrance and—if there be a big dramatic climax—rise up fortissimo to a big musical climax at the same time, you can easily understand how it would add to the value of your accompaniment.

At your character's first appearance in the picture you will play the musical theme you have chosen for that character; and make the nature of your theme conform to the nature of the character. Afterwards you will play that theme (in some form or other) whenever that particular character dominates the scene, whether he or she happens to be in the picture at the time or not. Usually, of course, the character is in the picture, but there are times when the character is not actually on the screen, but present in the mind of a prominent character who is on the screen at the time, and this has a bearing on that part of the story. You will readily see that at such moments the music of the absent character will be as appropriate as if he or she were in the scene because at that particular moment he or she dominates the scene. But as you are now suggesting a thought instead of describing an action, your music will be subdued.

If the story centers around one particular character, then the music of that character will predominate in your accompaniment. But this does not debar you from giving a theme to other characters. Usually the man and woman share the main incidents of the story, the more emotional music falling to her scenes and the heroic to his. Though not always.

The simpler your themes the easier they are to handle. Which is only another way of saying: "The easier they are to change into something a little different." To choose a couple of pieces—call them themes—and play them throughout the picture, would be monotonous. To play a number of pieces, one after anotner, until the picture is done is not good improvising even if you do "make them up." You are not improvising to the picture. You are only killing time.

Now you can play your themes for their several characters at such times as seem effective, and "fill-in" between with any non-commital music. In this yay you avoid the monotony of playing a few themes throughout. Or you can alter your themes at times to something a little different—just enough to make a pleasing variety and still be recognizable. And you can often find something in your theme which will suggest something else a great ueal different, and yet not so far away as to lose its relationship entirely. Much of this is mechanical and can be practiced with a pencil and paper. In fact it is recommended that the reader practice largely in this way. By combining this sort of practice with that at the keyboard one soon gets the "hang of it."

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of April 23 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

Marie Doro at the Strand.

DURING the week beginning Sunday, April 23, the Strand theater presented Marie Doro in "The Heart of Nora Flynn." This screen drama was written especially for Miss Doro by Hector Turnbull and Jeanie MacPherson, authors of "The Cheat." The production was made under the personal direction of Cecil B. De Mille, director-in-chief for the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, and it is released on the Paramount program. In "The Heart of Nora Flynn," Miss Doro takes the role of a nurse maid in a family of wealth, where her endeavors to bring order into a quarreling household places her under an unjust suspicion. The Paramount Pictograph, a short comedy, a cartoon comedy, news pictures of current events and excellent musical numbers complete the program.

Triangle Program at the Knickerbocker.

H. B. Warner in "The Beggar of Cawnpore," a Triangle picture based on the Sepoy Rebellion of 1857 in India, was the feature of the week's program at the Knickerbocker theater. In "The Beggar of Cawnpore," Warner appears as an English physician assigned to an isolated post in India. His sole white companion, an engineer, dies from fever, and the natives spread a report that he has been a victim of plague. They flee, leaving the physician practically alone. In the long months that follow he becomes a slave to drugs. The Sepoy revolt breaks out and the meagre garrison is forced to surrender. Realizing vaguely the peril of the few English, the physician throws off his habit, rescues his sweetheart and carries her away to safety. There are many thrilling situations in "The Beggar of Cawnpore," some realistic desert scenes, and a well balanced cast, which includes Lola May and Wyndham Standing.

"His Bread and Butter" presents Hank Mann, Peggy Pierce and other favorite Keystone funmakers. It is a typical Sennett combination of laughs and thrills. The usual variety to the program was given by an elaborate musical arrangement and educational, travel and news films.

"The Red Widow," a photo-adaptation of the comedy by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf, in which John Barrymore is starred as Cicero Hannibal Butts, was the main feature at the Broadway theater last week. The comic predicaments in which the distinguished corset salesman finds himself involve the Russian secret police and innumerable Nihilists, with a marked penchant for bomb-throwing. Chased aloft into the crow's nest of a steamer by visions of Siberia, and elected to kill the Czar by a company of Nihilists to whom he is introduced as the greatest living king killer, Butts dies about three imaginary deaths a minute in his agony of apprehension.

In addition to the star there are three notable figures in the cast—Flora Zabella, co-star of the original comedy production; George E. Mack and John Hendricks, who also appear in the film in the roles which they made famous on the stage.

New week events, colored scenics, comedies and cartoons round out the program.

Opening Bill at the Rialto.

Douglas Fairbanks in "The Good Bad-Man," a Triangle-Fine Arts picture, was the leading feature of the program for the opening week at the new Rialto theater. Mr. Fairbanks is the author of the scenario, and is assisted by Bessie Love, Sam de Grasse, Doc Cannon and Fred Burns in the acting of the photoplay. Roscoe Arbuckle in a Triangle-Keystone, "The Other Man," was another feature. Rialto Topical Digest, scenes on the Rialto, Venice, and excellent musical numbers completed the program.

JACK NELSON WITH HORSLEY.

An important addition to the David Horsley forces at Los Angeles is that of Jack Nelson, who for more than five years has been prominent in the film world in the capacity of actor and director, and was engaged recently for an important part in the forthcoming two-reel animal drama, supporting the co-stars, Margaret Gibson and William Clifford.

Nelson has a very fine reputation as a portrayer of juvenile characters and much of his fame came with the production of "The Alien," a New York Motion Picture Corporation subject, in which George Beban was starred. In that photoplay, Mr. Nelson played the juvenile lead and was highly complimented by the critics.

Five years ago he started his motion picture career with the American Company at Chicago and played leads for almost a year. He then joined the Eastern Selig Company and remained with that concern for twenty-seven months, after which he went with the New York Motion Picture Corportation in the capacity of juvenile lead and part of the time he was a director and put on the "Shorty" series.

In the forthcoming release, he will be seen in the character of "Jacques," a young fisherman, a part which allows him great scope to display his talents, both on the stage and in the water.

P. A. CHASE APPOINTED CONTROLLER OF UNICORN.

A valuable addition has been made to the executive staff of the newly-formed Unicorn Film Service by the appointment of P. A. Chase as controller. This announcement is particularly interesting, as it indicates that the Unicorn Company is taking a step in the right direction to carry out its policy of having every department of its organization manned by people of known ability.

Mr. Chase has an enviable reputation as an expert on efficiency, system and accounting. His experience in work of this kind has been long and varied, and his ability to handle the intricate details connected with the systematizing and accounting of film exchanges and other departments of the film business is now well established.

Some time ago Mr. Chase was the auditor of Warner's Features, Inc., and only recently occupied a similar position with the World-Equitable Company. He resigned from that organization to take up his new post as controller of the Unicorn. Mr. Chase will have as his assistant Frank L. Drumm, who also recently resigned from the World-Equitable Company.

KALEM SIGNS VICTOR ROTTMAN.

Victor Rottman is the latest addition to the roster of Kalem comedy players. Well known in the picture field as a juvenile, the new Kalemite also boasts a stage career that includes appearances with Florence Reed, Henry Kolker, Olga Nethersole and other prominent stars. He will appear in the popular Ethel Teare comedies, giving that organization a strong quartette in Ethel Teare, Jack MacDermott, Gus Leonard and Victor Rottman.

Spokes from the Hub

By Marion Howard.

WITH one exception, all the officers of the Film Club were re-elected at its annual meeting. Leon J. Dadmun, director-photographer, and opponent to censorship, was made first vice-president. Miss Frances Mittenthal was placed on the executive board. The club was recently entertained at the studio of Mr. Dadmun, who gave an informal talk on picture-making. The next affair is the first banquet, with guests, at the Brunswick, Friday, May 5, when Professor Hugo Muensterberg (who declares that the photoplay is an art in itself, and a high one at that) is to be the chief speaker. Invitations have gone to New York producers and to some players here that week in the spoken play, like "Bob" Edeson, Forrest Robinson and others. The club has joined the state federation and will make itself felt when motion pictures are under discussion. The president and other members go to New York May 23 for the biennial session of women's clubs as delegates from other clubs. Miss Brazier, the president, goes from the Professional Women's Club, which she founded nine years ago, and which is full of lovers of the photoplay.

It remained for John Craig, the actor-manager, to find a line in a play of the Immortal Bard predicting popularity of the motion pictures. This is what he quotes: "Marvel not then that things in motion sooner catch the eye than what not stirs." I pass this along to show that William was "wise in his day and generation." Mr. Craig is a friend of the motion pictures, attends them when time permits and has put quite a few on at the Castle Square, now running a series of Shakespearean plays.

"Ramona" is to be shown at the Colonial theater next month by W. H. Clune and will certainly draw, for we hear that the story has been well followed. Helen Hunt Jackson, the author of the book, was well known here, and literary Boston has a warm place in its heart for such careful productions like "Vanity Fair," for instance. Then, too, those of us who have made pilgrimages to the haunts of Ramona and Alessandro in California feel that with God's country pictured as in this play there will be nothing further to be desired.

"England's Menace," for a Sunday release at the Exeter theater, is intensely interesting and valuable, showing as it does the English way of dealing with spies. It is a London film, admirably done, and takes us into the heart of the city to Trafalgar Square, to the Houses of Parliament, to the Thames Embankment. It shows us not only the monument of Nelson, but the admiral's flagship anchored as a shrine, like our own "Constitution" at the Boston Navy Yard. Then, too, we are introduced to two children at work with their amateur wireless, used secretly by the spy who is a servant in the household. The picture is highly commended to theaters desiring to show the young people something that teaches patriotism and bravery. The motorcycle figures with the two kiddies defying speed laws in order to serve their country at a critical time. The plot is well worked out, with no inconsistency.

Someone in New York advised me to see "The Salamander," and so I took it in last week. In the cast were several familiar faces. One was John Sainpolis, formerly in stock here, and last seen in the films in "The Yellow Passport." Edgar L. Davenport was a good foil. It is a play to appeal to women, for here we see the villain repentant in giving the woman he had wronged a clear title to wifehood. Then there was another case of regeneracy in the "angel" of the show, listed on the title as an unscrupulous chap. To the gentle influence of a young girl he became a real man. It is a wholesome play on the whole and takes one inside the lines of the other side of life, where temptation reigns.

A compliment has been paid Stanley Sumner, of the Fenway theater, in being asked by the City Club (made up of leading men in business, civic and professional life) to show a photoplay there, and to the credit of his judgment he is to give them "Kennedy Square," which Hub fans would like repeated. Another Vitagraph offering which should be seen everywhere is "The Making Over of Geoffrey Manning," directed with much care. Every father should take his son or sons to see this working out of a vital problem concerning the idle rich young man. Harry Morey has ever pleased us here, but in this he shows more flexibility and power, and he emphasizes the cultivation of a determination to make good.

Along similar lines we find the same spirit in "A Man and His Soul," admirably done by Francis Bushman, who has made many new friends through this interpretation. I liked him tremendously in this, for he runs the gamut of emotions in the portrayal of conscience, the temporary destruction of his faith in humanity, and then the reawakening of his soul. These two plays preach a pretty good sort of sermon and with no cant—just facts illustrated.

The other day I made a round of calls on the exchanges in my neighborhood, which is becoming the storm center of activity among the film men. The General Film is getting into its new building; the Frohman Amusement Company has completed its fine new home, and other structures are going up. I found genial Frank H. Grady ensconced in the World Film office and rightly placed. An acquisition there is Miss Lily Izen, both going from the V-L-S-E. round the corner, where George Balsdon always has a welcome for your spokeswoman. In the next street I found Manager Clark of the Kleine-Edison talking enthusiastically about Billie Burke and the big serial, "Gloria's Romance." Next door was Frank Ferguson, former treasurer of the Boston theater, now a producer on his own hook. The Famous Players place showed much activity, it being "run-off" day. Its manager, W. A. Barry, is a new member of the Film Club. The Beech street office is a vast studio most attractively fitted up. Frank W. Vine has transferred his affections to the new Hearst organization and has a cosy office on Carver street, but goes later to one of the new buildings on Piedmont street.

Well, I went to see Charlie (pardon me, Charles) Chaplin at the Boston yesterday, and rather liked it in spots. The big house was packed and it is on for another week. The Hub has had "Carmen" served up in variety of late. You all know how "Jerry" Farrar used her film version gymnastics in the operatic version to the horror of one Caruso, and now we have a jolly burlesque. I hold no brief for Chaplin, but it struck many here that he was right in wanting it cut to two reels. On the same bill we had "The Half-Million Bribe," with Revelle and a fine company. The plot worked out well in the regeneration, and as it holds interest to the end ought to be a "good seller." In my opinion the work of Carl Brickert stands out clearest of all.

"The Sowers," put on by Mrs. Ayer at her theater, gave us a good taste of Russia at her worst and was not especially cheerful. The Laskys have given something convincing if only they would give us a strong leading woman to play opposite to such big players as Meighan Joy and Roberts. Miss Sweet looked more like a lass from Northern Scotland and bore no resemblance to the Russian type, and then, too, she affects a vacant expression, maddening to those in front who want "touch and go," and change of expression. This is a general view and not my sole opinion. On the same bill we had "Peggy," and such a contrast in the heroines, for Billy Burke is all action, and what a jolly picture this is until the ending. "The idea," said a young thing behind me, "to have her marry that narrow prig. She ought to have headed him for New York first." Her companion said: "I wonder if she will take him out in her car on Sunday." We liked "Peggy" and look forward to seeing her in the serial.

In "The Eternal City" one of two things stand out and will remain in memory, the wonderful make-up of Fuller Mellish as the Pope done so reverently and looking so much like the late Pope Leo. My attention was called to this by a priest who happened to be sitting beside me and who said—having seen the Pope—that he would like to know the actor, whose work he declared was the best he had ever seen in that form of impersonation. Then in a Roman house I saw a large picture of Abraham Lincoln, and wondered why it was there. Pauline Frederic is one of our own and so the house was crowded all the week.

"Let us have a few more such pictures as this and we would all stand for preparedness," said a straight-laced citizen at the Fenway the other day, on seeing "The Hero of Submarine D2." There was a big lesson in discipline, loyalty and manhood in this picture for all young men. It was mighty fine to have the co-operation of our navy in all the details of the story, and therefore it is of educational value to any audience.

"Hell's Hinges," despite its doubtful title, drew well here and is a credit to the Triangle. The "wild and wooly" atmosphere took with the men and boys present, but the one thing to impress the more thinking ones was the gradual development of the soul of the man who for the first time looked upon the face of a good woman. "Heart of the Plains," rightly named with its inscrutable face, hard manner, no gestures or change of expression, through three reels, was able to show clearly the softening influence of the woman. It typified the highest form of art in that the soul of the man thus awakened was discerned clearly to all in front through no apparent effort.

We congratulate the Moroscos on "The Code of Marcia Gray," seen here at three houses. Liking it so well I took a party along to see the work of Constance Collier and the male support, rarely excelled here. We are anticipating seeing Miss Collier in the star production of "Macbeth" with Sir Beerbohm Tree and Wilfred Lucas whom we recall in other plays like "The Lily and the Rose," and "The Wood Nymph," with little Doro. The Triangles have had some stirring pictures here of late at the Fenway, Exter and at four downtown theaters. I am trying to have the managers show "The Green Swamp," with dear Bessie Barriscale, for it has such a good lesson in it for women aspecially, and it is a natural play with domesticity preeminent.

Space forbids more than mere mention of the many pictures seen of late like "Molly Make-Believe," with Marguerite Clark, that wonderfully trained dog and the whole lesson all through, just the play for kiddies to see as it is understandable, while of equal interest to adults. Then we had Edith Storey in "The Two-Edged Sword," a play of emotions admirably done and striking a new note somehow in the working out of the theme. Evart Overton is always dependable, but we rarely see him in a character where he does not win out. "For a Woman's Fair Name," featuring Robert Edeson, and Harry Morey, went well here, as did that masterpiece, "A Supreme Temptation," with Antonio Moreno, Charles Kent, Mary Maurice and Dorothy Kelly. It had some gruesome features, but was intensely dramatic as a whole. "The Devil's Toy," showed Adele Blood for the first time here, but we did not care much for the play itself. It does not linger in the mind. "The Wild Olive," was well received, for we all like Forrest Stanley and Myrtle Stedman, who did such good work with Cyril Maude in "Peer Gynt." The Saleslady" went over well and caught the house as it was so well done in every detail, and Hazel Dawn had some work cut out for her. The opening scene was hideous with a casket placed across the screen, the heroine weeping over it. Why caskets and gruesome deathbed scenes anyhow? They are ghastly and could be left out with profit as to props and our feelings in front.

New Censorship Bill in Congress

Would Assess License Fee of $2.00 a Thousand Feet and 25 Cents a Thousand for Duplicates.

A NEW motion picture censorship bill has been introduced into Congress by Senator Hoke Smith of Georgia. The bill is largely the same as others introduced in Congress during this session. It provides for a commission of five members, to be appointed by the President, to serve for a period of six years each, at a salary of $8,000 per annum for the chairman and $7,500 each for the other members. Ninety thousand dollars is to be appropriated for the establishment of the work. A license fee of $2 per thousand feet of film and 25 cents per thousand feet for duplicates is to be assessed, although it is provided that this sum is to be reduced in the event that the commission finds there remains a surplus above the cost of conducting the work.

Films already in existence are not to be subject to the law under conditions named, and the commission is granted the right to issue permits without film examinations. The principal offices of the commission are to be in Washington, although offices may be located in other cities and be under the supervision of one of the commissioners or a deputy commissioner, for the commission is given the right to appoint such deputy commissioners and other employees as it may deem necessary.

"MYSTERIES OF MYRA" HIGHLY PRAISED.

The first showing of the International Film Service's serial, "The Mysteries of Myra," on the roof of the New York theater, April 19, drew an audience of nearly 1,500. William Randolph Hearst was present to see the initial episodes of the Whartons' unusual production, made from a story by Hereward Carrington and Charles W. Goddard. The picture was received with considerable enthusiasm, as were the war scenes and the animated cartoons, following the running of the feature production.

At the close of the showing, Lee Ochs stated that he considered "The Mysteries of Myra" the most revolutionary step ever made in serial or series productions. He predicted its great success. Samuel H. Trigger was no less lavish in his praise, as were other experienced exhibitors included in the representative audience.

MARTINDELL MAKES METRO DEBUT.

Edward Martindell, a widely-known and popular leading man, will make his debut on the Metro program in "The Scarlet Woman," in which Mme. Petrova, the gifted emotional actress, is starred. He has had considerable experience on both the speaking stage and in the silent drama. But the part he has in "The Scarlet Woman," that of the husband of the woman of the name part, played by Mme. Petrova, is easily the best thing he had done during his long professional career. Mr. Martindell is a distinctive leading man of the strong, heroic type and he makes an excellent foil for Mme. Petrova.

Jimmy Morrison, Versatile Vitagrapher

JAMES W. MORRISON is Vitagraph's versatile juvenile lead and character man. He has taken parts from youthful fourteen to superannuated seventy-five. He was born in Mattoon, Illinois, in November, 1888, and graduated at the Mattoon High School and the University of Chicago and received his theatrical training at the American Academy of Dramatic Arts of New York.

James W. Morrison.

It is something quite out of the ordinary when a man can portray parts from a school boy of fourteen to a venerable old man of seventy-five — and carry off the honors. In "Silas Leveredge" he grew up from a young man of twenty-five to an old gentleman of seventy-five who was the father of a charming daughter, impersonated by Dorothy Kelly.

In "The Battle Cry of Peace" as the youngest son he made a courageous and natural soldier. In "Out of the Beaten Snows" he was a hardy, determined, typical iron-fibered adventurer. In the "Submarine D-2" he went through all the processes of enlisting and training at Annapolis and then serving on a submarine. In this picture he did what no one had ever done before when he was shot from a torpedo gun from beneath the water. It was a risky part that required courage and fortitude. Reserved and gentlemanly, you would expect him to choose safer and more conservative roles; but the blood of the hero flows through his veins and he is at the height of his joy in performing daring and dangerous feats.

Morrison's greatest success was probably attained in "He Never Knew," a play which is likely to be revived in response to popular request. Other famous pictures in which he added to his laurels are: "The Seventh Son," "The Modern Prodigal," "The Christian," "Mother's Roses," "The Wheels of Justice," "In the Days of Famine" and "Mortmain."

FRANCINE LARRIMORE WITH EDISON.

Francine Larrimore, who appeared so successfully in the leading role in "Fair and Warmer" for a period of two months during which Madge Kennedy, the star of the play, was ill, has been engaged to appear in a forthcoming Edison release to be known as "The Princess of the Poorhouse." Miss Larrimore is a talented actress as well as a young woman of great charm and beauty and it is believed that she will be heralded as a new screen star following her appearance in the picture that is now being made at the Edison studios in the Bronx.

BRITISH NOTES

BY AN order in Council, issued by the Government, the export of moving picture films from Great Britain to foreign countries is to be considerably restricted and no exporter not licensed by the Government will be allowed to carry on his business. Beyond a little inconvenience to the London trading houses in the form of delay upon current orders in the Customs Houses, the announcement was received quietly by the trade, for it was simultaneously explained that licenses to export would be granted expeditiously to bona fide traders. A rumor is in circulation that films to be exported will first have to be examined, sealed and recorded by the British Board of Film Censors, but this statement up-to-date (March 26) lacks confirmation. "Why prohibit exports?" is the question generally asked. It may be sufficient to reply that celluloid contains the makings of gun cotton.

Contrary to general expectations the Fox Film Company has decided to handle its own output in Britain. Director Sheehan arrived in London last week to consult with the company's European manager, Joseph R. Darling, whose six months' stay has furnished the new undertaking with a thorough grounding in local conditions. The joint stock company, the Fox Film Company, Ltd., has already been incorporated and next week I hope to be able to announce the address of the London office. Immediately this is settled Mr. Darling will establish Fox exchanges for the provinces in Birmingham, Manchester, Leeds and Newcastle, for Wales in Cardiff, for Ireland in Dublin, and for the other side of the border in Glasgow. The first trade shows in London of "Samson," and "A Fool There Was," are already announced, and the policy of the company will for the present time, at any rate, be one big feature a week.

Which is the first State-owned moving picture exhibition? is a question suggested by the opening in a munition making area in Ayrshire of a cinema controlled by the Minister of Munitions. This newly grown settlement had no moving picture entertainment or in fact any facilities for the mental recreation of its army of war workers until the authorities handled the difficulty with the above very practical result. We have any number of moving picture enterprises belonging to temperance, friendly and co-operative societies and even municipal ventures, but this is the first Government departure into the exhibiting side of the business.

Amongst present visitors to London is Henry Winik, who was last in activity on this side three years ago with the Carnegie nature pictures and other famous features of that day. Mr. Winik has now the disposing of the British output of the World Film Corporation and in addition is identified with the Mutual forces.

Last Wednesday morning King George accepted on behalf of the nation the convoy of motor ambulances publicly subscribed for by the members of the trade during the past few months. The presentation took place at Buckingham Palace, the trade deputation presented to the King and Queen, consisting of Dr. Jupp of Provincial Cinematograph Theaters, Ltd., (President of the Fund); Will F. Jury, of Jury's Imperial Pictures, Ltd., (Treasurer of the Fund), and J. Frank Brockliss of J. F. Brockliss, Ltd., (Chairman of Committee). Lord Montague of Beaulieu, introduced the party to His Majesty, who made a careful inspection of the twenty-two cars, constituting the first detachment to be received from the makers. The complete convoy will be ready within a few days and has been assigned to service with the Red Cross Society in Mesopotamia.

"The Goddess," the serial production of the Vitagraph Company, has had a mixed reception at the several trade shows in this country. Not that its status as a production has in any way been criticised, but the basic theme of the story has been alternatively commended for its strength and originality and condemned as a mockery of religion. Even on the latter ground if such could be substantiated, there seems to be no reason for restraining its exhibition, yet I have been informed that the London office of the company has received notice that the film must not be exhibited until peace is declared. The inconvenience this has occasioned to Mr. Smith and his assistants can be gauged from the fact that over twelve trade shows have been held in different parts of the country, a large number of bookings accepted, and extensive arrangements made with newspapers to publish the story in literary form.

The first picture of the Ocean Film Corporation to be seen in England is, I hear, "Driftwood," which has been purchased by a newly launched renting establishment, Kino Exclusives, Ltd.

The week has seen the arrival of quite a number of "Big Four" productions particularly from the Lubin and Selig studios. "The Ne'er-Do-Well" has already been disposed of along with "Thy Neighbor's Wife," to International Exclusives, Ltd. A separately incorporated company, named the United Kinematograph Exclusive Film Co., Ltd., with offices in Wardow street, has been created to handle the "big" productions of the Lubin Co., and is leading off immediately with "The Great Divide," followed next week with trade shows of "The Gods of Fate." The first release date is July 3.

Welsh Writes a Book

Not Only a Book, But an Authoritative One—As Might Have Been Expected.

By Epes Winthrop Sargent.

USUALLY when a haughty publisher wants a book on the motion picture business, he calls a trusty hireling, gives him a pound and a half of press clippings and expects an eighteen ounce manuscript in return. Therefore praises be to Harper and Brothers—if there are such brothers. They took the trouble to look up a man who knew what he was to talk about. They picked out Robert E. Welsh, who ought to know something, because of his connection with the Dramatic Mirror as its Motion Picture Editor, and from other angles. The only trouble is that they seem to have told him the number of pages and the size of the type. In a word, Mr. Welsh does not get a chance to explain fully the business of making pictures, but he tells, for the most part, most intelligently and intelligibly, what he does know and is permitted to say. It is to be hoped that some day he is given greater scope.

Mr. Welsh is positively the first neutral writer on pictures who has had the good fortune to be published. He is the first man to get into print between cloth covers who knows Edison, Lumiere, Paul and others and their proper positions. He is the first to realize—publicly—that two Americans, an Englishman, a Frenchman and some others all saw the subject from various angles that concentrated on the focus of pictures in motion. This is equivalent to saying that Mr. Welsh is the first writer to give a general and not a specific credit. He overlooks Jenkins, Armant and others, but in his introduction he does deal broadly with the inception of pictures.

From there he takes the reader through the various processes of picture making, treating simply and clearly of the various steps. Not always does he give a full survey of the field, as, for example, when he tells of the pin-frame development and not of the rack and deep tank, and now and then he falters slightly as when he has the condenser lens pick up all of the light in the lamp house, instead of the rays from the spot, but from a popular point of view—and this is the point from which he writes—he tells in simple language what he knows of making and projection in a way that the uninformed may follow and he tells it more clearly and more definitely than any book writer who has gone before him. He has made the first start toward a more ample and complete history of the business and he has produced an informative book that may not be damned with faint praise. His few errors are those of omission rather than those of commission, as treating of but one of the many processes toward the same end instead of them all.

His final chapter sounds a brand new note, that of the amateur producer of pictures. In this Mr. Welsh is a little ahead of his day, but not far, and this chapter will prove invaluable in the nearby days to many who will seek in vain for this advice from other quarters.

Mr. Welsh has not written an impeccable book. He has written the most practicable book up to date. To him all credit belongs. It will interest all who are interested in pictures. To a majority it will be invaluable. (Harper and Brothers A-B-C series—121 pages, fifty cents.)

"The Iron Claw"

Chapter Eight Has Spectacular Moments Due to the Contrivance of Legar, with the Laughing Mask Holding the Winning Stakes.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE newest arrival in the game is the Count Lugi Da Espares, a confederate of Legar's, who cleverly causes Margery to fall in love with him. Davy, Golden's secretary, in love with Margery, airs his suspicions of De Espares to his own undoing, but finally wins out upon the discovery that Da Espares is really the questionable character that he has guessed him to be. Before Margery and her father are finally convinced of the man's character, however, Margery is lured away for the purpose of capture, and rescued by the efforts of Davy. And at a later date when the betrothal dinner is under way, Legar, supposed to be dead, looms up in disguise and manages to place a bomb under the safe in the Golden home. The Laughing Mask appears on the scene, orders all guests out of the dining room except Legar and Da Espares, whom he holds at the point of a revolver. The spectacle of the blowing out of the safe and the damage done to people and things thereby has been splendidly depicted. This is an excellent episode.

"Woman Against Woman"

Biograph Picture in Which an Appealing Story Is Capably Acted—Released in Three Reels.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE betrayal of innocence is safe material for the producer of heart-interest photoplays, such as Biograph's "Woman Against Woman." Two poor, pretty, but honest little girls weeping pitifully because they were not clever enough to avoid a trap laid by a designing woman, cannot fail to stir a sympathetic response to their grief. And the poorer they are, the prettier they are; and the harder they weep, the better the chances of the picture. Betty Gray, perfectly demure and sweet, in a poke bonnet and a made-over dress, and no less so in penitent black, makes an ideal exponent of guileless virtue pitted against designing vice, personified in Vivian Prescott's interpretation of a totally dissimilar woman. The second of the two sisters is convincingly drawn by Millicent Evans.

Wholesome simplicity and innocence being commonly attributed to life in a village, it is here that we meet the Misses Barton in the freshness of youth. But trouble comes; their father is killed in an accident and off they go to find work in the city. A little supper party, a private dining room, wine, and the villainness has effected the ruination of the prettier of the girls. There is little need for novelty in a tale of this description, where so much depends upon the ability of the actors to make the characters ring true. Situations either score or fail according to the acting, and in the present instance they score emphatically, because the playing is natural and sincere.

The plot is logical and meets the demands of social convention by bringing about the marriage of the wronged girl and the man who betrayed her, thus giving the child a name. Fortunately, the father dies and there is nothing to prevent a more congenial match. Lionel Barrymore, Miss Prescott and Alan

"The Closed Road" Is Exceptionally Strong Story Produced by Maurice Tourneur—"The Chain Invisible" an Equitable Picture.

"The Closed Road."

WITHOUT introducing a difficult theme, or aiming at anything out of the ordinary in characterization, Maurice Tourneur, author and director of "The Closed Road," a Paragon-World production, made an extraordinarily good picture. The story is not burdened with a moral lesson; it is not designed to improve or instruct, but amply serves its purpose when it thrills and entertains through five of the most engrossing reels offered on the World Film program for some time. The art of the story-teller and that of the director are finely combined in a smooth, harmonious photoplay, admirably acted in the chief roles by House Peters and Barbara Tennant.

The superiority of the picture is largely due to the avoidance of hackneyed situations and the novelty displayed in the choice of settings. There is a trial in "The Closed Road," but not the conventionl trial; even the argument of the jurymen is shown in a fresh light, and it is doubtful if the screen ever offered such an impressively real depiction of events in the death house at Sing Sing prior to an electrocution. Artistic discretion was used to prevent scenes of this kind from becoming unpleasantly gruesome. Under Director Tourneur's treatment they are vivid and strong and calculated to excite a horror of capital punishment, but they are not morbid. As a dramatic climax to the story it would be difficult to devise anything more effective than the moments during which the audience awaits the electrocution of Sargeant while the brother and sister, for whom he offered his life, try to stay the execution.

The complex situation out of which this climax arises reveals the ingenuity of Director Tourneur as a story writer. Annersley, a young doctor, on the verge of discovering a cure for cancer is held for murder on circumstantial evidence. Sargeant, told that he will live only six months, is about to commit suicide when the young physician's sister persuades him to make his death useful by accepting the guilt for the murder. Sargeant builds up an elaborate case against himself, difficult to break down after he learns that his health is entirely sound and that life is desirable. At once plausible, human in its appeal and filled with suspense, "The Closed Road" is a photoplay of excellent quality. Mr. Peters acts with strength and feeling, and for the rest we find a capable company.

"The Chain Invisible."

Being a poet and not a photoplaywright, Richard LeGallienne entrusted the adaptation of his story, "The Chain Invisible," to Roy L. McCardell, who has learned all the tricks of motion picture construction. Having completed the scenario, Mr. McCardell turned it over to Director Frank E. Powell, who, with Bruce McRae and Gerda Holmes as the leading characters, produced a drama of uneven merit. Certain parts of it are dramatic, picturesque and interesting; but the total effect is somewhat disappointing.

Scene from "The Chain Invisible" (Equitable-World).

Clear photography is especially essential in a photoplay utilizing sea scenes and the wild beauty of a tropical country; yet, if we may judge by the print shown for review, either the cameraman was at fault, or the laboratory work was defective, for too many of the scenes lack sharpness and a few are out of focus. On the other hand, the director and his photographer caught some charming effects, showing odd cloud formations and a glorious stretch of rocky coast lashed by the surf.

In story material of a romantic flavor the picture is not lacking. A lumberman, having made a fortune, goes to New York with the avowed intention of enjoying all that money can buy. He falls in love with Anne Dalton, the first pretty society girl he sees, and henceforth, author and director are careful to note each happening that strengthens the invisible chain drawing the two together—Anne's instinctive liking for the man, despite a premeditated aloofness, and Wadsworth's aggressive method of wooing. But even granting an impulsive nature and cave-man manners, one is startled at seeing Wadsworth throw his lady-love over the side of a steamer, preparatory to an uninterrupted companionship on an uninhabited island.

Up to this point, Anne, as presented by Gerda Holmes, has not smiled once, but time and propinquity have the usual effect of uniting the pair in an acknowledged love. The prolonged honeymoon terminates with the rescue of the bride and her child, whereas the man is accounted dead as the result of a fall over a cliff. Needless to say, he, too, is restored, and the last, rather hurried and artificial reel, brings a reunion. Easily the most impressive emotional scenes, forcefully played by Mr. McRae and Miss Holmes, transpire on the lonely island. Mr. McRae, in particular, is to be commended for the alteration he effects in appearance and manner when the veneer of civilization is rubbed off.

"The Law Decides"

Seven-Part Vitagraph Which Serves as a Remarkable Illustration of What "Treatment" Means to the Picture Play.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

MOVING picture productions of the quality of the one under review are hard to find. It presents a plain domestic theme whose treatment in the present instance would bear consideration by other producers. Marguerite Bertsch and Wm. P. S. Earle, respectively writer and director, are to be complimented on the wonderfully effective manner in which the psychological developments have been made. They have taken us to the innermost recesses of the homes and hearts of the characters of the play, and have done so in the most delicate manner, revealing every phase in the lives of individuals, and enabling us to read their very thoughts. Not once in the course of the play do we get as much as a glimpse of grossness, and only once does a question of consistency arise.

Scene from "The Law Decides" (Vitagraph).

The cast chosen to interpret this domestic drama are Donald Hall, Dorothy Kelly, Louise Beaudet, Harry Morey, Bobby Connelly, Adele Kelly and Bonnie Taylor. Of these no one individual can be pointed at as having done better than another, so well suited is each one to his or her part. Louise Beaudet as Mrs. Wharton, who with her daughter Beatrice occupies a portion of the home of her step-son who lives with his pretty wife and little boy in the other half of the house, does a marvelous piece of work. She it is who stirs the cauldron of misery which finally reacts against herself. To her is due the separation of man and wife, the suicide of the man who became her tool with a promise of individual benefit, the wrecking of her own daughter's happiness, and the final overthrowing of her own hopes for the achievement of a selfish desire.

It would not be fair to pass the production over without a word of special praise for Bobby Connelly, who has the most remarkably obedient fountain of tears that the screen exhibits. Bobby as an adjunct to this play could neither be omitted nor duplicated.

The point of inconsistency before mentioned occurs when Lorenz eloping with Beatrice on the eve of her marriage to the divorcee, Wharton, is telephoned to by his wife without evidence of her having any definite knowledge of his whereabouts.

This splendid production was released on the program of the V-L-S-E on April 24th.

"A Modern Thelma"

Latest Fox Picture a Highly Romantic Melodrama with Much to Commend It.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

PRETTY is the word that one will be apt to say first in speaking of this offering, a five-reel Fox picture directed by John Adolphi. Many of its backgrounds and set seenes, and especially the change that one will notice in it from mid-summer to snowy winter over the same hillsides and forest trees, are most attractive. There are many fine things in the way of well-acted moments in it—the best of them being the pleading of a mother for the love of a son whom she thought she had drowned in babyhood.

Vivian Martin plays Thelma delightfully for the most part; but she is wholly incapable when it comes to tragedy. We can't expect too much from one so young, and her grace and charm are ample. There are plenty in the cast who can act well. Most of the picture is ably presented and the story certainly holds well. The photography is wonderful and the backgrounds are worthy of it.

The plot is artificial; one can see the machinery moving all through; but it runs so smoothly that our very discontent with the unreason of the situations seems to translate itself into natural displeasure at what the villains and villainesses are doing to hinder the course of true love.

An English aristocrat visiting Norway falls in love with Thelma, daughter of a Viking-like Norse landowner, and this first part is an idyllic story. He marries her and takes her to England. Society women, one of whom has been infatuated with the young man, are disappointed, because Thelma is not only beautiful but has pretty manners and is popular. There is a very melodramatic conspiracy to break her heart by making her suspect her husband. It works and she runs away back to her Norway home. Her husband follows and the happy ending unites the two in the old Norse homestead.

It is a big, expensive picture in which good qualities much outweigh the defects, although the latter are there. It is so pretty and so full of grace that people will surely like it, and the story is interesting enough to hold.

"At Piney Ridge"

The Famous Higgins' Melodrama Filmed by Selig With a Strong Cast—Adapted by Gilson Willetts, Directed by Wm. R. Daly.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

THE popular melodrama, "At Piney Ridge," has lost none of its compelling interest in film form. Indeed, it has gained much by the Selig visualization, both in the quality of the acting and in the settings. The scenes of Piney Ridge, in the Tennessee mountains, have an atmosphere that no stage craft could convey, and the character types are diversified and well drawn.

Fritzi Brunette as the Cindy Lane of the story succeeds in investing the character with an interest that never wanes, although one is never convinced by the stubborness with which Cindy hides the name of the man who has betrayed her, especially so when her silence endangers the life of an innocent man on several occasions. But that is the fault of old melodramatic construction, which never halted at stretching a point to gain its end. I really commiserated Miss Brunette in the trying role, and could not help admiring the talent displayed in carrying it to a successful end.

The fine character work of Al. W. Filson in the part of Zele Lane, father of Cindy, cannot fail to win the commendation of everyone who views this production. The stern old mountaineer is shown in varying moods with natural touches that faithfully reflect the workings of his heart and mind. Death is ever in his eye and hand for the man who has wronged his child, and in the end the bullet from his rifle finds its mark; but the softer side of the man is also revealed in the pity and sorrow shown for his erring daughter.

Leo Pierson's Jack Rose is so well sustained that we shall look for his future appearance with more than ordinary interest. He photographs well and shows fine aptitude for heroic roles. The Mark Brierson of Ed. J. Piel is another well-drawn character. Brierson is the villain of the story, and Mr. Piel takes no half-way measures to paint him realistically.

The General Deering of Frank Clark is a typical Southern gentleman, both in manner and bearing, and Major Partree, his partner in the bank, finds an able representative in James Bradbury. It is quite a surprise to see this well-known comedian in a straight character part.

Miss Vivian Reed's Azalia is a winsome creature, and the Dagmar of Lillian Hayward is a strong characterization of a wily octoroon.

Wm. Scott as Rube Hollar, who loves Cindy and sticks to her through all her shame, is a fine type of a young Tennessee mountaineer. Indeed the acting throughout the entire production is excellent and worthy of all praise.

The release date is Monday, May 1, through V-L-S-E, Inc.

IN "The Red Widow," the Famous Players' four-part release of April 24, John Barrymore upholds his reputation as an all-around comedian—he may be or can be as polite as the circumstances may require or he may with perfect abandon fall backward out of a moving automobile without apparent damage to his anatomy. Mr. Barrymore plays the role of Cicero Hannibal Butts, corset salesman, young man about town turned bridegroom, in characteristically breezy, melodramatic fashion. The script is from the comedy of Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf.

The story is of the salesman who takes his bride with him on a business trip to Russia. The honeymoon is interrupted in London, when the bride is recalled to New York by reason of illness in her family. Before she learns the message is a mistake Butts is on his way to Russia—chaperoning or protecting a young Russian woman most anxious to return to her home, but debarred therefrom by the police of her country. There are many complications in which figure ambassadors, police, nihilists and bombs.

Mr. Barrymore is well supported, especially by Flora Zabelle, in the role of the charming Red Widow, and Lillian Tucker as the bride. Miss Zabelle sustains the part of Anna Varvara, the dancer with nihilistic affiliations, a role, by the way, she played on the stage. John Hendricks and George E. Mack, too, re-enact on the screen their former parts of the Baron and Popova.

There are amusing scenes at the wedding, one of these being due to the action of the bridegroom in his nervousness supplying the organist with "Good-bye Girls, I'm Through," instead of a wedding march. The later situations in Russia, in one of which the salesman is forced to draw lots for a killing, make comedy of seemingly stern moments. The picture is adequately staged and will be liked.

Columbia-Metro Pictures

"The Kiss of Hate," Starring Ethel Barrymore—Hamilton Revelle in "The Half Million Bribe."

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

"The Kiss of Hate."

IF AMERICANS do not realize the misfortune of being a Jew in Russia it is not through any oversight on the part of photoplay producers. Official corruption, police persecution and the long, snowy road to Siberia have figured in not a few screen dramas preceding this Columbia Pictures Corporation's production starring Ethel Barrymore, but there is no indication of an over-cultivation of a particularly fertile dramatic soil.

"The Kiss of Hate" may be classed as an emotionally stirring story, giving as convincing a depiction of Russain life as is to be expected in a picture made in the neighborhood of New York. Director William Nigh profited by the heavy snows of the past winter in making "road to Siberia" exteriors, whereas interiors—official quarters, homes of the persecuted Jews and secret places of meeting—offered no serious difficulty. The atmosphere of the picture is satisfactory.

For the real strength of this photoplay, however, one may look to the skillfully prepared story, having for its central characters, the governor of a Russian province, who sympathizes with the ill-treated Jews, the governor's daughter, Nadia,

Orzoff, a despicable prefect of police, and the prefect's son, a man of a different stamp. Having seen her father assassinated by the prefects' supporters, Nadia, to save her brother, gives herself to Orzoff, making it clear that her kiss is the kiss of implacable hate. All this transpires before the young woman meets the prefect's high-minded son, marked for death because of his unfortunate relationship. Placing her duty to the persecuted Jews above personal considerations, Nadia undertakes to kill Sergius herself. She kisses him and stabs him in the back with equal sincerity; then they die together when the house is destroyed by flames.

Miss Barrymore suggests the emotional depth and spiritual quality of Nadia; H. Cooper Cliffe gives a remarkably impressive characterization as the prefect, whose son is adequately presented by Robert Elliot. Ilean Hume, Roy Applegate and William L. Abingdon are others in a large cast.

"The Half Million Bribe"

Action in ample quantity and a complex plot calculated to arouse curiosity are the conspicuous features of this five-part version of William Hamilton Osborne's novel and play, "The Red Mouse," directed for the Columbia Pictures Corporation by Edgar Jones, from a scenario by Harry O. Hoyt. Hamilton Revelle appears as Lawrence Challoner, accused of murder, while his devoted wife, who offers her entire fortune to the district attorney in return for his assurance that her husband will be acquitted, is played by Marguerite Snow. In characters of almost equal prominence, Carl Brickert, as the district attorney, and John Smiley, as Pemmican, the real culprit, give creditable performances.

But "The Half Million Bribe" is much more a picture of situations than of characterization, and there is no questioning the ingenuity displayed in the construction of the scenario to secure an unusual trial scene in which uncertainty as to the outcome is carefully preserved. Dispensing with the usual introduction, Director Jones opened the picture with the happening that is at once a climax in the lives of those concerned in the story, and the starting point for a long chain of dramatic incidents. A man in evening clothes is seen bending over a lifeless body. Then he steals guiltily through the dark streets and the story is fairly under way.

With the lengthy trial as the pivot, the author swings backwards and forwards. He shows what led up to the murder of Hargraves, follows the seemingly unimpeachable testimony against Challoner, and emphasizes the heroic efforts being made by the wife to save her husband. There is nothing especially unusual about this method of development; but for three thousand feet it is made quite effective. In the last two reels the tone of the picture changes, more stress being laid on the regeneration of Challoner after he has fallen to a discouragingly low level. Exhibitors requiring exciting melodrama should be satisfied with "The Half Million Bribe."

Burton Holmes Travel Series, Bray Cartoons and Pictographs Offer Interesting Variety.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

SHORT pictures of good quality, designed to instruct and to entertain, are being offered each week on the Paramount program, that includes the clever cartoons prepared at the Bray studios, the travel series of Burton Holmes and Pictographs, a novelty among screen offerings.

"Colonel Heeza Liar Wins the Penant," the Bray contribution for April 27th, is a highly amusing drawing showing how the irrepressible Heeza Liar assists the Allies in ending the European war. For a time he conducts an offensive from a private trench, and later, when the fortunes of war turn against him, he conceives the notion of playing baseball with the enemy. Standing on an embankment, with a cannon for a bat, he knocks the shells back into the gunners' trenches. His only error is in mistaking the Allies' fortifications for those of the Germans.

Some of the photography in Burton Holmes' "The Dog Eaters of Benguet," to be released May 1, lacks sharpness, otherwise this is a decidedly interesting travel picture, giving a fair idea of the customs of one of the least civilized of the Filipino tribes. Under American influence it appears that these primitive people are progressing rapidly. Many scenes showing the mountains, roads and rivers on a picturesque island add considerably to the value of the film.

Arguments for the enlargement of the United States navy until it is second among the sea powers, are presented with no little force in Paramount Pictographs, which includes the usual departmental features, modeled along the lines of a popular magazine. The dinner of the Thirteen Club and Bray's political cartoon, "Miss Nomination," are amusing numbers in a well edited picture.

Triangle Program

"The No-Good Guy" and "The Beggar of Cawnpore," Both Kay-Bee, and "A Bath House Blunder," Keystone.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE NO-GOOD GUY came in delightful response to critical suggestion that William Collier be given opportunity more in accord with his ability than is afforded in knockdown farce. He did so well when the opportunity was afforded that hardened press critics laughed through five reels. He plays the role of a young man who is very weak and foolish with his money, and most of us are so tickled to find out that some one else besides ourselves is idiotic in the matter of expenditure that we roar at his revelations, fondly imagining that our own extravagences are virtues in comparison with his prodigality. We not only feel pleased that we—at least some of us—did not get into jail as Willy did, but we warm to the exquisitely human quality in the portrayal, our laughter is free from scorn.

The characterization of a naive, good-natured, thoughtless spendthrift, a man with a boy's heart and practically no sense of responsibility, while it delights us through five reels of Gardner Sullivan cleverness, is one not to be entrusted to any but a true artist, such as Collier has proven himself to be from the point of view of screen interpretation. He has not made a hit in "The No-Good Guy" by accident, but through the use of high intelligence and fine sensibilities. He keeps us laughing by an almost constant revelation of his own mental state, by concentrating on his part instead of on himself, virtually creating a role which is one of psychology from the beginning of the story to its end. "The No-Good Guy" is an immediate success and will be popular for a long time to come.

"The Beggar of Cawnpore" offers the elaborate and beautiful treatment of an outworn story made to drag through six weary reels through attenuation and constant repeats of scenes far from cheering. The effect is to alienate sympathy rather than attract it. Not only has the story of the opium-eater's redemption been done to death from one reel up to five, but there is hardly a change rung on the action—the change is that of atmosphere. Even as told, there are obvious inconsistencies, most notable that of ignorance on the part of an active and capable practitioner when assured by a layman that the drug habit will do him no harm. The story should be cut to five reels, but not at the expense of the animated ensembles, the only impressive part of the release.

"A Bath House Blunder" contains plenty of material for amusement, but there is very little fun started in the first act—it is all crowded into the second, and it there consists largely of feats purely acrobatic. The slender thread of a story is followed, but there is lacking a central figure of interest, some one of individuality sufficiently striking to hold attention. It is that which dulls the first part, but the second will carry the other on its shoulders.

"The Mysteries of Myra"

TWO episodes do not make a serial. "The Mysteries of Myra" may become less mysterious as they grow older, but if nothing so unfortunate happens; if they retain the flavor of the initial installments, the International Film Service, Inc., is going to have a great many friends among exhibitors before the close of 1916.

The introductory reels of Hereward Carrington's story of occult phenomena, done into scenario form by Charles W. Goddard and produced by the Wharton Brothers, were given a try-out recently before an invited audience on the New York theater roof. They scored so obviously, so decisively that to speak of their success is not expressing an opinion, but reporting a fact. "The Mysteries of Myra" dispels the fear that the possibilities of the motion picture serial have been attained. Here is a story, unusual and interesting, possessing a pseudo-intellectual twist that raises it above melodrama; but not too far above—trust William Randolph Hearst for that.

In preparing this photoplay the producers abandoned crass sensations in favor of more subtle appeals to a fear of the supernatural, which, it may be remarked, is nothing new. The difference lies in the method. It is one thing to announce in a sub-title, "this beautiful girl is doomed to die on her eighteenth birthday" and it is quite another to create an irresistibly convincing atmosphere of impending tragedy. Therein lies the art of "The Mysteries of Myra," an art not dependent upon credulity and a desire to be fooled.

As an expert fiction writer uses colorful words to create a setting for his characters, so the Whartons have used weird and strange effects in lighting and staging as a background for the Devil Worshippers, who exert such a baneful influence over the Maynard family. Every process known to modern photography, including some remarkable two-colored tinting, is utilized in making an audience feel the unspeakable horror of the Black Order. Then a strong element of human interest is developed with the introduction of a charmingly fresh, seemingly normal young girl, who unconsciously is falling under the spell of the occult powers.

By logical steps, advanced with care to give the picture the full benefit of delicate suggestiveness, we see how Myra is approaching a mysterious death, such as befell her two elder sisters, each on her eighteenth birthday. Alden, a young physican and a student of spirit phenomena, is the instrument of her salvation. At the climax of the first episode, when she is about to plunge a dagger into her heart, he interferes, and in the second episode he intercepts a night-blooming cereus laden with poison, released when the flowers open.

A detailed synopsis—printed elsewhere in the World—will give a fair idea of the ramifications of this admirable story, without indicating the finely calculated arrangement of the scenes. Numberless niceties of direction—all conducive to a balanced work of photoplay art, appealing to the eye and to the mind and through both to the emotions—call for attention. Blond, young, a perfect picture of sweet girlhood, Jean Sothern is an ideal Myra. Howard Estabrook, always a clean-cut, likeable actor, makes an excellent hero; Allen Murnane is forceful as Varno, a member of the Black Order, in love with Myra, whereas M. W. Rale is a suffciently awe-inspiring incarnation of evil. "The Mysteries of Myra" is original in concpetion and treatment and it is wonderfully well produced.

heart cannot betray a confidence. Nothing is more repellant to the Irish character than to be an "informer."

Nora Flynn is only a poor, simple little servant, but she has this admirable trait of her race to a marked degree. Driven to bay, disheartened with desertion by the man she loves, her reputation as a good woman trembling in the balance, Nora refuses to betray her mistress. True, her mistress has done nothing for her, even plots against her, but she is staunch in her human loyalty, and out of her sacrifice and suffering is born happiness to others. Surely there never was a finer theme for a strong, clean film play.

Marie Doro found herself in an unusual part, but she did the fullest justice to it. She evidently had made a very sympathetic study of the role, for she embodies it to perfection with all the pathos and humor of her race. Perhaps the action does not develop as swiftly as we would like, but we are delayed by the most pleasing glimpses and the most delightful episodes. The picture of life in a typical American nursery will never be otherwise than acceptable, and thrilling episodes, though they may connect with the main story only by the slenderest thread, are ever welcome. The rise of interest is well placed in about the middle of the third reel, and from there to the climax and the sweet, happy ending the sequence of events is rapid.

Marie Doro has excellent support. Of the splendid lighting effects, of the superb settings and the realistic atmosphere it is not necessary to say much when commenting on a Lasky production. A wave of pleasure and satisfaction will sweep over every audience at the end of this play, which here and there forces a little moisture to the eye.

"David Garrick"

A Pallas Pictures Production in Which Dustin Farnum Is Featured to Decided Advantage.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THERE are few plays on the American stage more popular than "David Garrick." The fame achieved by the elder Sothern in this role is one of the traditions of the American stage.

The film play produced by the Pallas Pictures follows very closely the lines of the play on the speaking stage. Perhaps it follows them too closely. There is a word in Spanish which sounds dangerous—"incinemagrafiable"—for which no adequate English translation can be found, but it means roughly speaking that there is a lack of film values. Of the acting of Dustin Farnum one cannot speak too highly. It was masterly. Mr. Farnum has a very fine conception of the character of the great tragedian and he portrays it perfectly. Great praise must likewise be given to the playing of the rest of the cast, notably that of Frank Bonn, who gave an excellent impersonation of "Squire Richard Chivy." Considerable pains have been taken by the director in securing the proper atmosphere and I think his success has been complete. The manners, the dresses, the furniture of the period are reproduced with rare fidelity. This fact adds very much to the play's undoubted merits.

The story, which of course is well known, has stood the test on the speaking stage and loses none of its essential merits on the screen.

as set down by the school of Scribe; but it leaves a distinct impression that logic has not been sacrificed to the "happy ending," and that the author has chopped off his story in much the same way that fate deals with human lives.

The theme of "The Heart's Tribute" is familiar enough. A wealthy young chap, just home from college, meets a young girl at a dance hall, and ruins her. She is a stenographer in his father's office, but neither one is aware of the other's identity. When she can no longer hide her disgrace, the girl is driven out by her father. In the meantime, young Taylor marries a girl in his own station of life, although he had promised Dora to make her his wife. The deceived girl goes back to work at the Taylor office, after her child is born. One day she is sent by the elder Taylor to do some stenographic work for his daughter-in-law. Here she comes face to face with her betrayer. The wife learns the truth and the unusual ending already referred to, is introduced.

Honesty of purpose is the chief merit of this photoplay. The characters are real, their acts are consistent, and the author commands respect for having the courage of his convictions.

The picture has been ably directed by Rene Plaissetty, and is acted with earnestness and skill by E. K. Lincoln, June Daye, Helen Greene, Eleanor Barry, Bernard Seigel and Herbert Fortier.

DIRECTOR ROLLIN S. STURGEON has produced many superb photoplays of the great outdoors, but it is doubtful if any of his earlier pictures have approached "God's Country and The Woman" in providing an ideal blending of dramatic story material, beautiful locations and impressive acting. The picture is extraordinarily fine in every element contributing to a screen drama; it is bound to impress audiences of all classes and lovers of nature in the wild are likely to name it as the most satisfying of photoplay productions. To close followers of the screen "God's Country and The Woman" carries an added interest in introducing Nell Shipman, writer of many scenarios, as an actress in a leading role. Miss Shipman is as good an actress as she is a writer, which is saying much. Her beauty is of a rarely expressive type and her playing is marked by intelligence and sincerity.

Although the story presented in this picture might be told in less than eight reels, the production would suffer rather than profit by a reduction to the conventional length, for the interest is sustained without a break and there is no danger of giving an over supply of scenes such as Director Sturgeon secured in the Great Bear Valley of the San Bernardino mountains of Southern California. Magnificent snow effects are varied with entrancing glimpses of lakes and rivers, mirror-like in their clearness and every now and again there comes a startling novelty in artistic photography, such as the scenes showing the canoists overtaken by a snow storm on the mountain lake. an appliance operating like the gills of a fish. No less an authority than Mr. Edison has suggested such a possibility. The initial test of the vessel is made, with the inventor, his daughter, her lover and others on board. A Japanese spy has also secreted himself in the submarine.

When the air is exhausted in the submerged vessel the new invention is set to work. The spy is overseen making a study of it and after an exciting effort to hold him he escapes through the conning tower, leaving the aperture open so water begins flooding the interior. The first chapter closes with the submarine sinking to the bed of the ocean.

The characters are clearly depicted. Thomas Chatterton appears as Lieut. Hope, U. S. N.; Juanita Hansen as the girl; Wm. Tedmarsh as the Japanese spy, and Lamar Johnstone, Hylda Hollis, George Clancy and Harry Edmundson in other roles. Chas. B. Hoadley and E. Alexander Powell have made the screen adaptation.

The difference lies in the method. It is one thing to announce in a sub-title, "this beautiful girl is doomed to die on her eighteenth birthday" and it is quite another to create an irresistibly convincing atmosphere of impending tragedy. Therein lies the art of "The Mysteries of Myra," an art not dependent upon credulity and a desire to be fooled.

As an expert fiction writer uses colorful words to create a setting for his characters, so the Whartons have used weird and strange effects in lighting and staging as a background for the Devil Worshippers, who exert such a baneful influence over the Maynard family. Every process known to modern photography, including some remarkable two-colored tinting, is utilized in making an audience feel the unspeakable horror of the Black Order. Then a strong element of human interest is developed with the introduction of a charmingly fresh, seemingly normal young girl, who unconsciously is falling under the spell of the occult powers.

By logical steps, advanced with care to give the picture the full benefit of delicate suggestiveness, we see how Myra is approaching a mysterious death, such as befell her two elder sisters, each on her eighteenth birthday. Alden, a young physican and a student of spirit phenomena, is the instrument of her salvation. At the climax of the first episode, when she is about to plunge a dagger into her heart, he interferes, and in the second episode he intercepts a night-blooming cereus laden with poison, released when the flowers open.

A detailed synopsis—printed elsewhere in the World—will give a fair idea of the ramifications of this admirable story, without indicating the finely calculated arrangement of the scenes. Numberless niceties of direction—all conducive to a balanced work of photoplay art, appealing to the eye and to the mind and through both to the emotions—call for attention. Blond, young, a perfect picture of sweet girlhood, Jean Sothern is an ideal Myra. Howard Estabrook, always a clean-cut, likeable actor, makes an excellent hero; Allen Murnane is forceful as Varno, a member of the Black Order, in love with Myra, whereas M. W. Rale is a suffciently awe-inspiring incarnation of evil. "The Mysteries of Myra" is original in concpetion and treatment and it is wonderfully well produced.

"The Heart of Nora Flynn"

A Highly Meritorious Feature of the Best Lasky Type, Deserving Unstinted Praise.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THIS feature reaches the best Lasky standards. In the first place a real human interest story is there. It is entirely original. It illustrates one of the most admirable traits in the Irish character. A man or a woman with a real Irish heart cannot betray a confidence. Nothing is more repellant to the Irish character than to be an "informer."

Nora Flynn is only a poor, simple little servant, but she has this admirable trait of her race to a marked degree. Driven to bay, disheartened with desertion by the man she loves, her reputation as a good woman trembling in the balance, Nora refuses to betray her mistress. True, her mistress has done nothing for her, even plots against her, but she is staunch in her human loyalty, and out of her sacrifice and suffering is born happiness to others. Surely there never was a finer theme for a strong, clean film play.

Marie Doro found herself in an unusual part, but she did the fullest justice to it. She evidently had made a very sympathetic study of the role, for she embodies it to perfection with all the pathos and humor of her race. Perhaps the action does not develop as swiftly as we would like, but we are delayed by the most pleasing glimpses and the most delightful episodes. The picture of life in a typical American nursery will never be otherwise than acceptable, and thrilling episodes, though they may connect with the main story only by the slenderest thread, are ever welcome. The rise of interest is well placed in about the middle of the third reel, and from there to the climax and the sweet, happy ending the sequence of events is rapid.

Marie Doro has excellent support. Of the splendid lighting effects, of the superb settings and the realistic atmosphere it is not necessary to say much when commenting on a Lasky production. A wave of pleasure and satisfaction will sweep over every audience at the end of this play, which here and there forces a little moisture to the eye.

"David Garrick"

A Pallas Pictures Production in Which Dustin Farnum Is Featured to Decided Advantage.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THERE are few plays on the American stage more popular than "David Garrick." The fame achieved by the elder Sothern in this role is one of the traditions of the American stage.

The film play produced by the Pallas Pictures follows very closely the lines of the play on the speaking stage. Perhaps it follows them too closely. There is a word in Spanish which sounds dangerous—"incinemagrafiable"—for which no adequate English translation can be found, but it means roughly speaking that there is a lack of film values. Of the acting of Dustin Farnum one cannot speak too highly. It was masterly. Mr. Farnum has a very fine conception of the character of the great tragedian and he portrays it perfectly. Great praise must likewise be given to the playing of the rest of the cast, notably that of Frank Bonn, who gave an excellent impersonation of "Squire Richard Chivy." Considerable pains have been taken by the director in securing the proper atmosphere and I think his success has been complete. The manners, the dresses, the furniture of the period are reproduced with rare fidelity. This fact adds very much to the play's undoubted merits.

The story, which of course is well known, has stood the test on the speaking stage and loses none of its essential merits on the screen.

" The Heart's Tribute "

Three-Reel Lubin Photoplay Written by Daniel Carson Goodman and Directed by Rene Plaissetty.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

A STORY without a hero, Ralph Taylor, the central figu in this three-reel drama, wrecks the lives of two wom who trust him, and Daniel Carson Goodman, the auth of the scenario, has had the courage to cast aside expedienc and see that the young man meets his proper punishmen when his wife learns that he has betrayed a young girl sh turns from him in loathing and befriends his victim. Such a ending does not conform to the rules of "the well-made play, as set down by the school of Scribe; but it leaves a distinct impression that logic has not been sacrificed to the "happy ending," and that the author has chopped off his story in much the same way that fate deals with human lives.

The theme of "The Heart's Tribute" is familiar enough. A wealthy young chap, just home from college, meets a young girl at a dance hall, and ruins her. She is a stenographer in his father's office, but neither one is aware of the other's identity. When she can no longer hide her disgrace, the girl is driven out by her father. In the meantime, young Taylor marries a girl in his own station of life, although he had promised Dora to make her his wife. The deceived girl goes back to work at the Taylor office, after her child is born. One day she is sent by the elder Taylor to do some stenographic work for his daughter-in-law. Here she comes face to face with her betrayer. The wife learns the truth and the unusual ending already referred to, is introduced.

Honesty of purpose is the chief merit of this photoplay. The characters are real, their acts are consistent, and the author commands respect for having the courage of his convictions.

The picture has been ably directed by Rene Plaissetty, and is acted with earnestness and skill by E. K. Lincoln, June Daye, Helen Greene, Eleanor Barry, Bernard Seigel and Herbert Fortier.

"God's Country and the Woman."

Strong Drama of the Northwest is Given Picturesque Production by the Vitagraph Company—Released in Eight Reels.

DIRECTOR ROLLIN S. STURGEON has produced many superb photoplays of the great outdoors, but it is doubtful if any of his earlier pictures have approached "God's Country and The Woman" in providing an ideal blending of dramatic story material, beautiful locations and impressive acting. The picture is extraordinarily fine in every element contributing to a screen drama; it is bound to impress audiences of all classes and lovers of nature in the wild are likely to name it as the most satisfying of photoplay productions. To close followers of the screen "God's Country and The Woman" carries an added interest in introducing Nell Shipman, writer of many scenarios, as an actress in a leading role. Miss Shipman is as good an actress as she is a writer, which is saying much. Her beauty is of a rarely expressive type and her playing is marked by intelligence and sincerity.

Although the story presented in this picture might be told in less than eight reels, the production would suffer rather than profit by a reduction to the conventional length, for the interest is sustained without a break and there is no danger of giving an over supply of scenes such as Director Sturgeon secured in the Great Bear Valley of the San Bernardino mountains of Southern California. Magnificent snow effects are varied with entrancing glimpses of lakes and rivers, mirror-like in their clearness and every now and again there comes a startling novelty in artistic photography, such as the scenes showing the canoists overtaken by a snow storm on the mountain lake. The call of the wild is echoed in every foot of this

THE theme of American defense has been treated in a live manner in this new serial, by Russell E. Smith. At any rate the opening instalment, in two reels, introduces the observer to some clear-cut, interesting characters, and closes with the sort of thrill that makes one wish to see more.

George Sargent, the director in charge of the production, has managed to work into the story some very comprehensive views of a submarine in action, giving both inside and outside scenes. As the story goes, the girl's father has invented a means by which a submarine may get its supply of air through an appliance operating like the gills of a fish. No less an authority than Mr. Edison has suggested such a possibility. The initial test of the vessel is made, with the inventor, his daughter, her lover and others on board. A Japanese spy has also secreted himself in the submarine.

When the air is exhausted in the submerged vessel the new invention is set to work. The spy is overseen making a study of it and after an exciting effort to hold him he escapes through the conning tower, leaving the aperture open so water begins flooding the interior. The first chapter closes with the submarine sinking to the bed of the ocean.

The characters are clearly depicted. Thomas Chatterton appears as Lieut. Hope, U. S. N.; Juanita Hansen as the girl; Wm. Tedmarsh as the Japanese spy, and Lamar Johnstone, Hylda Hollis, George Clancy and Harry Edmundson in other roles. Chas. B. Hoadley and E. Alexander Powell have made the screen adaptation.

Louise Lovely, as charming as her name suggests, plays well the role of Leonita, wife of an Italian maker of statuettes, and afterward the role of the daughter of the pair. Lon Chaney also gives a good impersonation of the Italian.

As the story runs Cyrus Kirkham, a globe trotter, happens in town while the carnival is at its height, and sees Leonita, who is a dancer by profession, dancing on the village green. In a covetous mood he offers her money to dance for him and his friends at a certain inn, where her husband, who accompanies her, is given drugged wine to enable Cyrus Kirkham to kidnap the beautiful dancer. Aboard his yacht she jumps into the water and is drowned. We are then shown the wedding of Kirkman to a society woman, and following this Giovanni, the Italian, with his child arriving in America. The story then skips ahead several years when the child has grown to young womanhood. She is noticed by a young artist, who finds in her beauty inspiration for a picture which he paints. Kirkham sees the picture and requests that the girl be located and that a picture of her be painted especially for him. In due time Giovanni comes across Kirkham, and later discovers his daughter at a gala affair in his apartments. In a fury the Italian rushes in, tries to kill Kirkham, and then jumps from the roof to his death. The story ends happily with the betrothal of the artist and the girl.

creature, adored by all the men who know her. She is imperious of will and has never met the man who could control her. The part is really the strongest feature of the picture, which is rather more of a social study than anything else.

It is, however, a very entertaining study, and will be delighted in by those who like to see sumptuous attire worn by screen favorites. Miss Fuller's wardrobe in this one production would almost equip a fashion show.

Joseph W. Gerard appears as Leslie Fleming, the man who elects to tame this orchid among women. He is a mining man, himself possessed of indomitable will. He declares that he will make himself her master and sets about the task in so courageous a way that he at once piques her interest. He gives her a necklace once worn by an Egyptian princess, and while she is overcome with delight, swears he intends to marry her. She accepts the challenge of destiny and they are wed.

Then follows the real work of subduing her unruly spirit. He takes her to the Western mining country and introduces her to the rough life. She flees from this, back to the old life, but finds the adoration of other men no longer holds her. Ashby, one of her former victims, swears to kill her and then himself, but the husband unexpectedly appears and prevents the tragedy. In the end the wife learns that she is really in love with Fleming.

The settings throughout this feature are attractive. It might have been told in briefer form, but at the same time there is much in it that will hold the interest through the entire five reels.

"The Other Woman"

Two-Reel Gold Seal Offering Presents Entertaining Little Study of Artistic Temperament.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

CERTAIN unusual features of plot and presentation render this an appealing two-reel number, not so much from any extravagance of setting but because the main situation is quite original. It is the story of a man who married two operatic stars.

The story begins at the time Dick, the son of Veroni, is twelve years old. The father, Richard Angus, has long since divorced Veroni and married Mina. The father's fortunes have declined and Mina is the sole support of the family, which includes the boy. Mina cannot get an engagement, while on the other hand Veroni is a popular favorite.

An offer is made by Veroni to permit Mina to sing the role of Carmen if she will give up Dick; if not she threatens to let the whole family starve. This brings up the main situation, in which the boy enters Veroni's dressing room, not knowing she is his mother. He comes in behalf of Mina, asking that she be allowed to sing the desired role. Veroni, touched by her love for the boy, kisses him and grants his request, allowing him to depart without revealing her identity.

Dorothy Davenport handles the part of Veroni in an appealing manner, obtaining considerable pathos in the latter scenes. Gordon Griffith appears as the boy, Alfred Allen as the father and Virginia Southern as Mina.

Director Cal Le Vinoss, of the American Mutual forces, has finished work on the two part drama, "The Counterfeit Earl," presenting George Periolet in a dual role. Vivian Rich, Louise Lester, Marie Van Tassel, Alfred Vosburgh and Al Fordyce appear in his support. The story is from the pen of William Barker.

in the scheme for turning the tables on the swindlers, and the operations of the two lady defeaters of trickery and wicked plots in this instalment of the Kalem serial, again end in the downfall of a new set of Social Pirates.

Harry, the Hun, an oil painting thief of international reputation and a talented artist besides, enters into an agreement with an art dealer named Melnotte, to steal from an art exhibition a celebrated painting known as the "Mona Vanna." The plot is an ingenious one, but Mona and Mary go it one better and earn a handsome reward for preventing the loss of the picture. When the "Mona Vanna" is cut from its frame and brought to the dealer, the girls substitute a copy for it, and the wealthy art patron pays over his money and then finds himself the laughing stock of the man he had hoped to astonish by the merit of his purchase.

George Bronson Howard, aided by Director James W. Horne, has made a screen drama of "The Master Swindlers" that is plentifully supplied with dramatic situations and spiced with touches of humor. The production is marked by a liberal and judicious expenditure of money and the display of skill and judgment on the part of the director. Marin Sais and Ollie Kirkby again vindicate the wisdom of their choice for the star roles, and Thomas Lingham, B. Furey, Edward Clisbee and Frank Jonasson have been intrusted with the remaining characters.

Balshofer Producing "The Night Rider."

Harold Lockwood and May Allison, who made their debut on the Metro program recently in "The Come-Back," have gone to the mountains of North Carolina, where they are now at work on "The Night Rider," a thrilling five-part screen production. The company is located in the picturesque locality near Bat Cave, Hickory Nut Gap, where the world-famous Vanderbilt estate, "Biltmore," is located. Fred J. Balshofer is directing "The Night Rider," and is assisted by Howard Truesdell. Mr. Truesdell is also playing an important role in the production. Lester Cuneo, the noted heavy leading man, is another prominent member of a strong supporting cast.

Lord Chief Justice a Director.

Spectacular scenes in an English court form a striking part of the narrative in "Spellbound," the five reel Knickerbocker Star Feature in which Lois Meredith is starred. Lord Chief Justice Howell of Canada, a friend of H. M. Horkheimer, under whose direction the picture was produced, was visiting the studios at the time these scenes were being set, and kindly consented to supervise the details of court procedure and the settings. The result of his labors is manifest in the film, comprising about 200 feet of trial scenes produced under the highest possible authority.

daughter Lucy, he is dignified and haughty as becomes his station. As the "Banjo-eyed Kid," a notorious crook, he is merry as well as cunning, and for the sake of the story makes a mess of things at its close, when as he fills his pockets with the household jewels and is spied upon and trapped by the ranch woman whose gun is always handy. Should circumstances not have so arranged themselves the real Lord Twombly, whom the crook so splendidly impersonated, might have met with the inconvenience of spending some time in jail.

The picture will be found an enjoyable one. Louise Lester as the ranch woman, Mrs. Bronson, makes an excellent type and carries out the intention of the character in a very amusing way. Vivian Rich plays the role of Lucy, her daughter, and Alfred Vosburgh is the handsome lover who wins out in the end when Lord Twombly calmly informs the ambitious mother that he would be most happy to grant her request and make her daughter his wife but for the fact that he is already engaged to the daughter of Lord Cavendish. The mother wilts while the lovers rejoice.

Elaborate Knickerbocker Press Sheets.

Supplementary to the regular monthly bulletin issued to exhibitors by Knickerbocker Star Features is a new and elaborate series of press sheets designed as part of the big purlicity campaign for the five reel Knickerbocker features. The first of these press sheets will be issued this week in advance of the Lois Meredith feature "Spellbound," scheduled for release on May 17th.

Several novel ideas of arrangement and subject matter give distinction to the press sheet and enhance its value to the exhibitor. While no pains have been spared to cover the subject from all angles of trade and popular interest, brevity and conciseness have been borne in mind, with the result that all the necessary information is contained in four pages. The bulletin is printed in colors and makes a handsome appearance.

Novel forms of heralds have also been adopted for the five reel Knickerbocker Star Features, combining the utmost of artistic effect with the minimum of cost in a first edition of one million copies.

General Film Company.

A CRY FOR HELP (Biograph), April 17.—A one-reel reissue in which Lillian and Dorothy Gish, Lionel Barrymore, Robert Harron, Harry Cary and Walter Miller are members of the cast. A good example of the photoplays that made the Biograph one-reelers famous.

FROCKS AND FRILLS (Lubin), April 17.—In this one-reel comedy D. L. Don repeats his clever impersonation of a member of the gentler sex. As a rich widow who is courted by a bogus count, the star succeeds in being funny without being vulgar and makes an amusing reel out of quite ordinary material. George Egan, Florence Williams and Patsey De Forest are members of the cast. The picture was written and directed by Edwin McKim..

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE NO. 31, 1916 (Selig), April 17.—Baptising colored brothers at St. Petersburg, Fla.; young girl cops, New York; opening of ball season, San Francisco; boat race, Seattle, Wash.; David R. Francis sails for Russia; French regiment sent to the front, Saloniki, Greece; Circus Day at Golden Gate Park, San Francisco; opening of baseball season, Chicago; Apache "War hop," Columbus, N. M.; enrolling for summer military camp, El Paso; Eva Lane, of Chicago, reducing; artillery drill, Nogales, Ariz.

LIFE AND TRAINING IN U. S. NAVY (Vitagraph), April 17.—This educational film, taken in co-operation with the United States Navy, gives a comprehensive idea of the method by which young men are trained as sailors. The making of officers at the Naval Academy is also shown. The picture was directed by Col. J. E. Brady.

HAM AND PREPAREDNESS (Kalem), April 18.—War is not always what Sherman claimed for it, if this one-reel comedy is to be believed. Ham himself does not have a very merry time during the progress of the action, but his efforts to dodge cannon balls will amuse the spectator. The stunt which Ham and Bud perform with a buoy, is both novel and diverting. Norma Nicholls and Juanita Sponsler are members of the cast.

CANIMATED NOOZ PICTORIAL NO. 9 (Essanay), April 19.—Gen. Runtobeat Debandski is the most famous person shown in this number of Wallace A. Carlson's exclusive news items. The General's adventures with a cannonball add a new terror to war. The other items are equally interesting. The latter half of the reel shows scenes in the Grand Canyon of the Colorado.

THEIR TAKING WAYS (Kalem), April 19.—Paul Arlington is the author of this one-reel comedy and Ethel Teare and Jack MacDermott have the leads. They appear as a pair of crooks, and prove, by robbing each other, that the old saw about "honor among thieves" does not always hold good. An amusing farce. Victor Rottman and Lillian Clark are in the cast.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE NO. 32, 1916 (Selig), April 20.—Opening of baseball season at Polo Grounds, New York; dance festival, Berkeley, Cal.; cavalry drill Fort Bliss, Texas; officers of the 8th U. S. Cavalry; herd of seals on Ano Neuvo Islands; war scenes at Lake Dorian, Greece; market fete, San Francisco; new autochair, Chicago; Eva Lane taking second lesson in reducing, Chicago; with the U. S. troops in Mexico.

ALL FOR A GIRL (Vim), April 20.—Plump and Runt are rival suitors for the same young lady and Plump wins her, although he is obliged to press his suit while wearing the latest style in flour barrels. A good knockabout comedy.

A DOUBLE-BARRELED COURTSHIP (Kalem), April 21.—Sis Hopkins is the "loud noise" in this one-reel screen comedy. The offering follows the model that has been chosen for the series of motion pictures in which Miss Rose Melville is the star, and has the entertaining qualities of its predecessors.

HIS LUCKY DAY (Vitagraph), April 21.—Another of the one-act comedies with William Dangman as the happy-go-lucky Freddy, that young gentleman gets in and out of trouble at a rapid rate and winds up the day by sharing in a reward for the capture of an escaped lunatic. The reel is amusing, and William Lytell, Jr., George O'Donnell, Harry Mayo, Lucille Crane and Florence Natol are members of the cast. Produced by Frank Currier.

MILLIONAIRE BILLIE (Lubin), April 22.—Billie Reeves in a new tramp outfit is the novelty of this one-reel comedy, written and produced by Clay M. Greene. The plot hinges on a wager and Billie is mistaken for a millionaire, and is wined and dined and finally ends behind the bars. The picture supplies Mr. Reeves with a congenial role, and he is supported by Francis Joyner, Eleanor Blanchard, June Daye, Mary Rowland, Margaret Moore, Kempton Greene and Alice Mann.

TOO MANY CHEFS (Selig), April 22.—A French chef for a range outfit suggests comedy possibilities, and Tom Mix has succeeded in making the subject pan out considerable fun. The scenes of western life are the real thing, and Tom Mix, Victoria Forde and Joe Ryan give spirited performances of their respective roles.

General Film Company Specials.

THE THREE WISE MEN (Selig), April 17.—Anthony McGuire, the author of this three-reel photoplay, has conceived an excellent story and introduced many contrasting scenes of poverty and wealth, most of the action taking place on Christmas Eve. The vision of the birth of Christ is too long and would be much more effective if the manager scene was not shown so many times. The scene in itself has been handled reverently and with artistic feeling. Bessie Eyton is sympathetic and earnest as a Salvation Army lassie. Thomas Santschi, Guy Oliver and Edith Johnson also have important roles. Colin Campbell directed the picture.

A WAR OF WITS (No. 4 of the "Social Pirates") (Kalem), April 17.—This installment of the George Bronson Howard serial is quite as interesting as the other numbers, and has been produced in the same thorough manner. A review of the picture was printed in the issue of April 22, page 1916.

THE STRANGE CASE OF MARY PAGE, NO. 13 ("Dawning Hope") (Essanay), April 17.—The action of this installment of the Essanay serial shifts from the trial and shows Langdon on a still hunt after the gambler, Jim Bates. The lawyer locates him in a saloon and Bates tries to get away. Langdon follows the gambler to his lodgings, is made a prisoner, escapes, and chases Bates into a freight car as the gambler boards a western bound train. The two reels are highly dramatic.

ONE OF THE PACK (Lubin), April 18.—Tom Gibson is the author of this two-reel photoplay, which touches upon the same theme as "Damaged Goods." A review of the picture was printed in the issue of April 29, page 822.

THE ELDER BROTHER (Essanay), April 18.—Francis X. Bushman has the leading role in this two-reel reissue, and Bryant Washburn, John H. Cossar and Gerda Holmes are the other principals. The story deals with the love affair of two brothers with the same woman, a cabaret dancer, and is worked out along dramatic lines.

THE LARRIMORE CASE (Biograph), April 19.—Love and revenge, which leads to a murder, furnish the motive of this three-reel drama. The story is well put together and involves a trial scene that ends in a strongly dramatic climax. The acting of Vera Sisson, Chas. H. Mailes, Jose Ruben and Gretchen Hartman is of material assistance to the success of the photoplay.

THE HEART'S TRIBUTE (Lubin), April 20.—A review of this three-reel drama is printed on another page of this issue.

HER NAKED SOUL (Essanay), April 22.—The story of a woman who strays from the straight and narrow path and then finds a man whose love is great enough to forgive her transgression, H. Tipton Steck, the author, has built his three-reel drama with skill, and it has been given the benefit of a capable cast. Nell Craig is the woman and is always convincing. Darwin Kerr, Hugh Thompson and Edmund F. Cobb have the other important roles.

A CALIPH OF NEW BAGDAD (Vitagraph), April 22.—A Broadway Star Feature, this three-reel photoplay was written by William Addison Lathrop and directed by Van Dyke Brooke. The picture shows the author's familiarity with the every-day life of actor folk, and unwinds a story that leaves a pleasant recollection at the finish. A well-chosen cast includes Van Dyke Brooke, Leah Baird, Templer Saxe, Edward Elkas, E. A. Turner, Charles Edwards and Joe Tucker. The comedy is written in the whimsical, O. Henry vein, and its humor is of excellent quality.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

THE GILDED SPIDER.—A five-part production featuring Louise Lovely and Lon Chaney. The story has not been well constructed, but in many ways the production is attractive. It treats of the vengeance of an Italian image maker whose wife has been kidnapped by a rich American. She jumps into the water and is drowned and the Italian afterward follows him up and tries in later years to kill him. Foiled in his attempt to do away with the man who wronged him, he ends his own life by jumping off a roof.

International Film Service.

THE MYSTERIES OF MYRA, April 24 (No. 1), May 1 (No. 2).—A review of the first two episodes of this new serial, written by Hereward Carrington and Charles W. Goddard and produced by Wharton, Inc., appears on another page. The picture is original in tone and of superior quality in story, production and acting. It bids fair to be one of the most popular serials on the market.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

THE KISS OF HATE (Columbia), April 3.—A story of the persecution of Jews in Russia, starring Ethel Barrymore as the daughter of a Russian count. The picture was given a strongly dramatic production by William Nigh.

THE HALF MILLION BRIBE (Columbia-Metro), April 10.—Reviewed elsewhere in this issue, these five reels are classed as exciting melodrama introducing an ingeniously contrived trial scene. Hamilton Revelle and Marguerite Snow are the featured players. The picture was suggested by William Hamilton Osborne's "The Red Mouse."

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, N. 68 (Gaumont), April 19.—This diversified number includes views of Lieut. Sanfley breaking the world's altitude record, college games and military drills, Paris fashions, war scenes from Mexico and glimpses of baseball openings.

THE CONQUERING HERO (Cub), April 21.—The opening of this one-reel comedy featuring George Ovey is not any different from other comedies we have seen from the same source, but the development of the plot certainly has some originality. The types will also be found pleasing. Ginger, impersonated by Louise Horning, is exceptionally well done. Jerry in trying to escape the police gets into a fashionable dressmaking establishment and placing himself under the skirts of a dressed up judy, walks out of the place under the very noses of the police. This is very amusing.

SLIPPING IT OVER ON FATHER (Vogue), April 23.—A comic number, by Robert A. Dillon, showing how a young man elopes with a girl from a seminary and marries her in spite of the father's opposition. The action is good, but the plot a familiar one. It makes a very fair subject of the conventional sort.

DAD'S DARLING DAUGHTERS (Falstaff), April 24.—Riley Chamberlain is featured in this as the father of five girls. He sets their lovers to sawing wood, while he sits on the porch. After they are married the various sons-in-law get even by making the old man work when he visits them. The plot is nonsensical, but contains a good idea of the quietly amusing sort.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 33 (Gaumont), April 26.—This gives some comprehensive views taken in and about Charleston, S. C. Many spots of historical interest are pictured.

NOSEY NED (Gaumont), April 26.—Some amusing animated drawings picturing the adventures of Nosey Ned. On same reel with above.

THE TRAITOR (Cub), April 28.—In this farce comedy, which features George Ovey, a Hindoo, who is wanted by the government for certain offensive actions takes advantage of the presence of Jerry in his haunts, puts him to sleep and changes clothes with him. Jerry is arrested and transported to India, from whence he later escapes and arrives in his own country in a stolen aeroplane.

WILLING WENDY TO WILLIE (Falstaff), April 29.—Rather an amusing comedy in which a rich man pretends that he is dead and leaves a will stating that the spinster next door, who has persecuted him on the matter of matrimony, and another enemy, who tricked him in a horse trade, shall inherit the money on condition that they marry. The ceremony is performed, the owner of the wealth appears on the scene, when the bride promptly fades away.

TWO BEDS AND NO SLEEP (Beauty), April 30.—Although this might be found intensely amusing by some, its appeal to the majority would not be as large as some others we have seen. Orral Humphrey plays the role of a dealer in snuff. On his way to make a delivery in a distant town he stops at the same hotel with an eloping couple. By accident, and being somewhat the worse of liquor, he gets into the lady's room, and lands in the second of the twin beds in which repose her cat and dog. Some of the scenes relative to this situation, although very funny, might well be eliminated.

THE DASHING DRUGGIST'S DILEMMA (Falstaff), May 1.—This is a genuine leap-year offering in which two sisters, one thin and the other fleshy, are promised by their rich uncle $10,000 each if they are married within the week. They both have an eye on a dashing young druggist, who is kidnapped in the night by the one who has had foresight enough to buy her license beforehand. The other tries to overcome the situation by stealing her sister's auto and arriving at the ministers with the man. In the time consumed in a return trip for the license the man's wife, who was not known to exist, appears on the scene.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

THE CONSCIENCE OF JOHN DAVID (Mutual Masterpicture de luxe), April 24.—A five-part production from the Centaur studios featuring Crane Wilbur. The production is clean and wholesome on the whole and gives material glimpses of John David's conscience appearing at his side as a raggedly dressed man always trying to dissuade him from wrong doing. The plot of the story concerns itself with the murder of a libertine. John David in the act of choking the man sees the body fall lifeless from his hands, and believes that he has killed him. The audience, however, is let into the real secret of the murder, which was committed by a Japanese who from his hiding place beneath the couch upon which the libertine was pinned by John David, pierces the neck of the man with a poison needle. The production will be found interesting; but it will be also discovered that the subject has not been worked to bed rock.

THE STAIN IN THE BLOOD (Mutual Masterpicture de luxe), April 27.—A five-part production made by the Signal Film Corporation featuring Norbert A. Myles and Edythe Sterling. The story treats of the fate of two orphans whose parents were killed on the plains by Indians. The boy, grown to manhood, becomes a bandit, serves a term in prison and later resumes his criminal ways in the city. The girl marries an inventor whose affections are stolen from her by a cabaret singer. The story is not particularly well-balanced, and there is nothing shown in the picture which points to prenatal influences.

THE CARRIAGE OF DEATH (Thanhouser), April 29.—A three-reel subject, by Clinton H. Stagg. The story concerns a Mexican girl, beloved by a young farmer, who helps her in the fields when her lazy father is drinking at the Inn. The settings and costuming are good, but the characterizations, while pleasing enough, are hardly of the Mexican type. The plot is well worth while, as it comes up to a strong climax. The father has given orders to shoot the daughter and Senorita if they try to escape in the carriage. Later he himself becomes the victim of his own assassins. The subject is stronger than the average offering, in spite of some faults of presentation.

THE RETURN (Mustang), April 21.—This two-part production is very slight of plot, but clean and wholesome withal. Art Acord and Nita Davis play the principal roles. The story treats of the loyalty of a son who believes his father to have appropriated some money entrusted to him. He leaves home in the night and, after riding a long distance, falls in with a friendly prospector who employs him to help him for a half interest in what gold they can clean up. The desired amount of money acquired, the young man returns to his home and his sweetheart to find that a dog has been the thief instead of his father.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

THE RACE (Lasky), April 6.—Anita King, better known as the Paramount girl, and Victor Moore are presented in this thrilling production. The work of Victor Moore in this subject is most entertaining and productive of many laughs. The story, like most successful films, is quite simple and enables the comedian to fulfill his task, which he does in a capable manner. The scenes and lighting effects are well handled. For an extended review see page 639 of the April 22 issue.

THE LOVE MASK (Lasky), April 13.—The story of "The Love Mask," a western subject, is rather weak in plot and lacks adequate conviction. The stars, Cleo Ridgely and Wallace Reid, portray their characters in high-class order. Most picturesque and suitable to the story are the remarkable settings of western life; the photography as well is noticeably good. This film was reviewed on page 819 of the April 29th issue.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE NEWS NO. 29, 1916 (Pathe), April 8.—Interesting items of this number are the annual tug of war at the Maryland State Agriculture College; review of troops at Fort Winfield, Cal.; new army searchlight tested at the War College, Washington, D. C.; a new type of water craft driven by an aerial propeller, built to overcome the difficulty of navigating Alaska's shallow streams, and colored troops of the 24th infantry in Mexico.

PATHE NEWS NO. 30, 1916 (Pathe), April 12.—Some of the interesting items of this number show the training of the pupils of the Institute of Technology at Boston in preparedness; David R. Francis, new ambassador to Russia, bidding adieu to friends as he sails to take up his duties abroad; a new 1,600 ton barge in the Mississippi River at Louisville, Ky., and some views from the European battlefields.

TEDDY AND THE ANGEL CAKE (Pathe), April 15.—The clever cartoon comedy is from the pen of Earl Hurd. A naughty little boy trying to hide the theft of an angel cake from his fat mamma is interfered with by a bulldog, a funny chase over a fence and up a ladder into a loft by all concerned takes place, and little Teddy finally collared by his mamma on the far side of a stream of water is thoroughly chastised. On the same reel with "Algeria New and Old."

ALGERIA NEW AND OLD (Pathe), April 15.—An interesting journey through this portion of Northern Africa, showing many beautiful scenes along its waterways. On the same reel with the above.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

THE IRON CLAW, NO. 8 (Pathe), April 17.—"The Stroke of Twelve" proves to be a thrilling episode in which Margery Golden's well-being is twice jeopardized. Once she is rescued by Davy, and once by the laughing mask. Da Espares, a confederate of Legar's, carries his side of the scheme out so successfully that Margery is all but betrothed to him when the blowing up of the Golden safe causes his death. This episode will be enjoyed.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 16 (Universal), April 19.—Sousa's band on parade; American ambulances for Russia; baseball stars in action, and views from Mexico are included in this interesting number.

THEIR ANNIVERSARY (Rex), April 30.—A clever little domestic comedy, by Samuel Greiner, featuring Ben Wilson and Dorothy Phillips. The plot is slight, but prettily worked out, picturing the way in which each of the married couple held back the presents waiting for the other to make first advances. A quarrel ensues, followed by a reconciliation. Good domestic comedy.

HER HERO MAID (Nestor), May 1.—A comedy, by A. E. Franklin, featuring Lee Moran, Billie Rhodes and others. The young actor dresses as a woman and hires out as a maid at the girl's home. Some amusing situations result. Not very novel in plot, but pleasingly presented.

WHEN SLIM WAS HOME CURED (Imp), May 2.—An old comedy favorite revived, with Victor Potel in the cast. He smokes incessantly and, when his wife objects, pretends to have amnesia. She learns that a blow on the head will cure this trouble and brings him around speedily. This is amusing.

WON WITH A MAKEUP (Imp), May 4.—A comedy number, by

Elliot H. Robinson, featuring King Baggot and Edna Hunter. It shows a moving picture company invading a small town in the dead of winter. The deacon's daughter falls in love with the leading man and elopes under difficulties. This is simple in plot, but enjoyable and well presented.

JUST KITTY (Imp), May 5.—A domestic story, in which an orphan girl, adopted by a wealthy man, saves first his money and later his life. The nephew and his lady friend, who poses as a governess, are back of both attempts. This carries the interest well and has a touch of fairly strong drama toward the close.

A PERFECT MATCH (Joker), May 6.—Gale Henry is featured in this eccentric comedy as the daughter of an oatmeal manufacturer. Her rival wooers form an amusing diversity of types. Herman wins her by enlisting the aid of a fortune teller. This is entertaining and amusing.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials.

DOCTOR NEIGHBOR (Red Feather Photoplay), May 1.—A five-reel subject, dealing with the question of whether a doctor ever has the right to take the life of his patient, when death is imminent or a darkened mind a certainty in case of recovery. The subject is handled in a convincing way by a competent cast, including Hobart Bosworth, Dorothy Davenport, Gretchen Lederer and others. There are many scenes in this picturing human suffering, but nothing unnecessarily sordid or depressing. It is a good screen presentation of a mooted problem in medical ethics. As a story, the action is slow at first, but becomes absorbing in the later reels.

THE PURPLE MAZE (Gold Seal), May 2.—A good example of the "sex" story, by Olga Printzlau. It deals with the lives of two girls in business, one of whom is virtuous and the other follows the easiest way. This handles delicate situations frankly but sincerely and the tragedy at the close points the obvious moral. The girl who has lived her life too freely kills herself; the other girl, on the verge of following the butterfly life herself, takes warning and marries her employer. Stella Razetto and Gladys Brockwell do fine work as the two girls. A strong number of this type.

THE GIRL WHO FEARED DAYLIGHT (Victor), May 3.—A two-reel offering, with a novel theme, featuring Mary Fuller, Wm. J. Welsh, Curtis Benton, Edna Pendleton and Clifford Grey. It concerns a girl, reared by her scheming uncle in a mountain cabin. He teaches her to shut herself entirely away from daylight, holding over her the fear of blindness and her mother's unhappy fate. A young man, wounded on a hunting trip, comes to the cabin and fate works out a pretty love story for them. The winter scenes at the close are full of exciting action and the photography is good. A pleasing subject.

THE BELOVED LIAR (Big U), May 4.—A three-reel number, featuring Thomas Jefferson as an old violinist who befriends two children. He loses his job and his opera fails to find a producer. He becomes a wanderer. The children grow up and at the close all meet in the old attic they loved so well. This is obvious in plot, but full of appealing sentiment and enjoyable throughout. Mr. Jefferson gets a great deal of pathos out of the leading role, and Zoe Bech and Buddie McQuaid are pleasing juveniles.

LEM'S COLLEGE CAREER (Nestor), May 5.—A two-reel comedy drama, by Al E. Christie, featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Betty Compson. The college chap visits the ranch and is made sport of by the cowboys. Later he has his revenge when the young ranchman comes to college. The number is full of all sorts of youthful pranks and contains a love story also. None of the scenes are exceptionally funny, but all are amusing and enjoyable. The ranchman is glad to return home by a freight train after his college experiences.

HEARST-VITAGRAPH NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 32 (Vitagraph), April 21.—Sending supplies into Mexico; athletic meet, Oakland, Cal.; Insurance men of New York at drill; raising chickens, Van Nuys, Cal.; Palm Sunday procession, Baltimore; Palm Sunday procession, Brooklyn; movement of troops, Fort Riley; New York aquarium; railroad wreck, Bradford, R. I.; President Wilson goes to the Capitol; German and Austrian ambassadors, Washington; German liners, Hoboken; battleship Texas passing under Brooklyn Bridge.

World-Equitable.

THE CHAIN INVISIBLE (Equitable), April 24.—Scenes on a desert island, where a man and a woman find refuge, are the most picturesque and the strongest in this five-part production, directed by Frank E. Powell from a scenario by Roy L. McCardell. Bruce McRae and Gerda Holmes are the principal players in an offering of fair quality.

THE CLOSED ROAD (Paragon), April 24.—An exceptional story was given a remarkably impressive production by Maurice Tourneur in this five-part drama featuring House Peters and Barbara Tennant. It is a long while since World Film offered a picture more certain to please all types of audiences.

V-L-S-E, Inc.

HEARST-VITAGRAPH NEWS PICTORIAL NO. 31, 1916 (Vitagraph), April 18.—Floods in the West; Bob Burman killed in auto race; Eddie O'Donnel, winner of the race; bodies of war prisoners leaving Portsmouth, Eng.; fashions; life saving suit, Washington; trial of fire extinguisher, New York; return of U. S. Cruiser Chester, Charleston, Mass.; Tigers defeat White Sox, Chicago; herd of seals at Ano Neuvo Islands; Carranza troops at Los Vacas, Mexico; Apache Indian scouts, Columbus, N. M.

THE LAW DECIDES (Vitagraph), April 24.—This is a splendid seven-part production, the story of which was written by Marguerite Bertsch and directed by Wm. P. S. Earle. The cast employed in this picture is one of the best of Vitagraph groups, embodying the names of Donald Hall, Dorothy Kelly, Harry Morey, Bobby Connelly, Louise Beaudet, Adele Kelly and Bonnie Taylor. The story which treats of a domestic tangle which is kept moving by a wicked stepmother whose desire in life has been to bring about the marriage of her own daughter to her stepson, and who stops at nothing to accomplish her purpose, even to causing him to divorce the wife whom he has brought home without her consent. The play has been given the most delicate treatment, but is suitable especially to adult audiences. A full review of this production will be found on another page of this issue.

GOD'S COUNTRY AND THE WOMAN (Vitagraph), May 1.—An eight-part drama produced by Rollin S. Sturgeon in the San Bernardino mountains of Southern California. The picture is finely picturesque and tells an interesting dramatic story, the principal roles being played by Nell Shipman, William Duncan and George Holt. A review appears on another page of this issue.

"THE SCARLET WOMAN" STARRING MME. PETROVA.

"The Scarlet Woman," with Mme. Petrova in the stellar role, will be released on the Metro program May 22. This five part feature was produced by the Popular Plays and Players for Metro, and is one of the strongest productions in which Mme. Petrova has yet appeared. The story was written by Aaron Hoffman and produced under the direction of Edward Lawrence. Mme. Petrova is surrounded by a strong cast which includes Arthur Hoops, Edward Martindell, Eugene O'Brien and Frances Gordon.

There are scores of interesting scenes in "The Scarlet Woman," produced on an elaborate scale, among many colorful scenes of New York night life. The story is handled in a manner that does not give offense, and the most delicate situations are presented in a highly artistic way. Mme. Petrova wears several new gowns, which represent a large outlay of money, and which were fashioned especially for this production.

TRIANGLE HAS INFORMATION BUREAU.

The Triangle Film Corporation, by the popularity of its own service, has been forced to make an expensive and troublesome innovation. This is a bureau of information for the convenience of patrons of motion picture theatres. Thus the producer comes in direct touch with the consumer over the head of the exhibitor or middleman. A wire into the new offices of the Triangle in the Brokaw Building, at 42d street and Broadway, New York, has been turned over to this new department and now all day long one may be informed that William S. Hart's newest picture may be seen at such-and-such Theater or that Douglas Fairbanks in an old release is just reaching the screen at this-and-that Theater.

S. Eckman, Jr., manager of the New York branch, is in supervisory charge of the new service bureau of cooperation with his customers. His big booking records show just where his features are at all times. And when some admirer of Fairbanks, Hart, Lillian and Dorothy Gish, Hopper, Bessie Bariscale, Frank Keenan, Mae Marsh or the stars at Keystone want to know where the special favorite may be seen, the Triangle's bureau is there working overtime to supply the information.

"THE NE'ER-DO-WELL" AND "THE CHRISTIAN" IN CANADA.

Reports from the V-L-S-E exchanges in Canada indicates that those two stellar features, "The Christian," and "The Ne'er-Do-Well," which the V-L-S-E recently released in that country, are finding a ready market.

"The Christian" is one of the most popular of the Vitagraph offerings to the screen world. "The Ne'er-Do-Well," Selig's dramatization of Rex Beach's novel, is being so well received in Canadian circles that it bids fair to rival its tremendous popularity in the States.

The success in Canada of these two productions furnishes clear evidence that the clean photoplay alive with action, and presenting stories replete with human interest is the best drawing magnet from a box office standpoint.

FINAL SCENES IN "A MILLION A MINUTE" ARE DELAYED.

The final scenes for "A Million a Minute," a forthcoming Metro wonderplay in which Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are starred, have just been completed after considerable delay. The delay was caused on account of the European war, which has almost brought trans-Atlantic shipping to a standstill, and the conditions which obtain make it almost impossible to use a steamship under any circumstances.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"WHEN A WIFE WORRIES" (Universal).

Motor accidents are increasing daily. In the picture reproduced herewith is shown a deplorable accident which occurred on Laemmle Boulevard, Universal City. Victor Potel was out looking for the wishbone of a cuckoo which Willie Wise and Harry Pepper, his intimate friends, had told him was an ideal thing for the baby to chew upon in said infant's idle moments.

Vic's baby has just cut a tooth and from the way baby hollered the proud papa decided that he must get a rubber ring, a torpedo fragment or the like for his first-born eugenic to chew upon. Wise and Pepper convince him, however, that the wishbone of a cuckoo is just the proper thing to present baby. Vic's adventures getting the wishbone would make a young serial if they were padded out the way the Bunk & Bushwoir Film Company is in the habit of doing with flivver features.

Potel shares honors in "When a Wife Worries" with Jane Bernoudy, and both are supported by Doris Fellows, Eddie Boland and Harry Mann, under Hal Clotworthy's direction. The photograph reproduced herewith depicts Vic under the wheels of his own car. He had been chasing a cuckoo when the backspacer on the car which closely followed him uprose and smote him between the posterior and the anterior and severely flattened him out athwart the whiffenpoof. It was a very serious case, the ambulance surgeon said, but Vic undoubtedly will recover in time to appear in another of his inimitable comedies in the near future.

"A WOMAN WILLS" (Sun).

Of unusual worth, it is said, is the big and costly production which the Sun Photoplay Company adds this week to the list of pictures that are offered by this concern on the state-rights block, entitled "A Woman Wills," and starring the fascinating Elsie LeClaire. This new release tells a stirring tale of international espionage, starting as a nameless European state is engulfed in the present world-sweeping war, rousing even women and children to a fervor of patriotic activity, and continuing its course through gay settings in an old-world metropolis, in which the underground workers of the wonderful system of the international secret service find their haunts. In this film Miss LeClaire is temporarily enlisted in the ranks of those picture actresses characterized as "Dare-devil heroines," for the action of the play leads her into many a tight situation, demanding real pluck, though it is emphatically stated that the sustained dramatic interest of the play lifts it above the level of the conventional thriller. James Maguard, Joseph Morris and Suzanne Armelle, the latter in the role of an adventuress, constitute the more important members of Miss LeClaire's supporting cast. The other parts are all adequately fillled by players of experience.

F. F. PROCTOR NOW USING JUVENILE KID COMEDIES.

Exclusive Features, Inc., report that the demand for the Juvenile Kid Comedies is very large and bookings are coming in from all leading theaters. J. M. Goldstein, president of the company, is arranging with a number of leading vaudeville theaters who are desirous of showing the only pictures that are entirely acted by children. Joseph Monahan, impersonating Charlie Chaplin, played at the Schuyler theater, Eighty-second street and Broadway, at a matinee for children, and it was so pleasing that most of the children who witnessed the first performance, insisted that their parents take them in the afternoon to see the second performance of this picture.

NOVELTY SLIDE COMPANY AT EXHIBITORS' EXPOSITION.

The Novelty Slide Company, who have recently entered into new, magnificent premises at 115 East 23d street, New York, are evincing every possible sign of enterprise in other directions. They are among the first to signify their intention to take a large space at the Grand Central Palace Exposition promoted by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, which opens May 1st. The Novelty Slide Company will have a large display drawn from their stock of motion picture and advertising slides, together with many other articles of supply for the motion picture theatre. They will make a specialty of an original, educational demonstration, they will show the making and coloring of lantern slides from the moment when the camera is turned upon the picture to be copied, to that when the finished and colored transparency is neatly bound up and is ready for projection. In order to carry out this demonstration with the utmost effect, the Novelty Slide Company will have present a staff of photographers, colorists, and others constantly at work.

Every motion picture exhibitor whom the league endorses will have his photograph taken in the Novelty booth and from that photograph a hand-colored slide or transparency will be made and presented to the exhibitor.

"THE DANGER LINE" (Essanay).

This three-act release is well fitted to the talents of Elizabeth Burbridge and Edward Arnold. It depicts the fight of a school girl who is frustrated in attaining her ambition to be a stage star by family reverses. How she wins her chance through the help of a real star and falls in love with him, and he with her, makes up the plot. It is a quite plain exposition of the obstacles in the way of stage fame. It contains enough tense situations to enable the stage star to be a hero in reel life and to hold the interest of the spectators throughout. As a large number of the scenes are theatrical an opportunity was offered for exceptional settings, which Essanay did not overlook. A strong supporting cast, in keeping with Essanay's plan to supply its most capable actors in plays of every length, has been provided.

FAMOUS FOURTEENTH CAVALRY IN "BRITTON OF THE SEVENTH" (Vitagraph).

"Britton of the Seventh," Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, announced for release on Monday, May 8, a five-part military drama written by Cyrus Townsend Brady. This feature was filmed along the border line and the famous Seventh and Fourteenth Cavalries, now engaged in the man-hunt in the wilds of Mexico, are seen in action.

"Custer's Last Stand" is vividly pictured with regular United Scene from "Britton of the Seventh" (Vitagraph).

States troops and a number of Indians that were brought from the Reservations in Oklahoma, especially for this picture. The cast includes Charles Kent, Bobby Connelly, Eulalie Jensen, Harry Northrup and Ned Finley as General Custer.

"THE JUNGLE OUTCASTS" (Horsley).

"The Jungle Outcasts," a forthcoming two-reel David Horsley production, is a vehicle co-starring Margaret Gibson and William Clifford in a new type of photoplay. It is by Miss Thedosia Harris, who has worked up very strong parts for both the Horsley stars and is filled with numerous thrills.

Miss Gibson will be seen as a young wife, the mother of an infant child, and Mr. Clifford the wealthy husband. A greater part of the action is laid in Southern waters and following the wreck of a yacht on which the little family is cruising, there is plenty of opportunity for the co-stars to show their knowledge of swimming.

Through the courtesy of a Southern California picture fan, who is very wealthy, a beautiful yacht has been secured for the purpose of the cruise. All of the water scenes are taken in the Los Angeles Harbor and close to Catalina Island, a beautiful resort of the Pacific Ocean, some twenty odd miles off the entrance to the harbor.

The picture is being taken under the direction of Mr. Charles Swickard, who was lately signed to a Horsley contract, following his discontinuance at the New York Motion Picture Corporation at Inceville, California.

Some very elaborate interiors will be used in picturing the spacious interior of the yacht and there are also a number of elaborate jungle scenes in which the famous Bostock lions will be used. In all, the picture will be one of a novel and new type.

ZANGWILL'S "THE MOMENT BEFORE."

Though Pauline Frederick long ago established her claim to versatility by her interpretation of such roles as "Zaza," "Bella Donna," and "Audrey," perhaps she has never had quite so many opportunities of displaying her talents in any one production as in the Famous Players' adaptation of Israel Zangwill's "The Moment Before," which will be released on the Paramount program April 27th.

The Duchess of Maldon, which characterization Miss Frederick first appears in the photoplay, is a white-haired woman of fifty-five. When she falls dying in the church, there arises before her the vision of her youth. Then the scene fades out and Miss Frederick appears as the vivacious, splendid young creature, the gypsy for whom two men are found in desperate combat.

The greater part of the picture was staged in Florida by Director Robert G. Vignola, where the tropical foliage is especially susceptible conversion into "Australia." In support of the star there appear Thomas Holding, J. W. Johnston, Frank Losee, Edward Sturgis and others who have won distinction in previous Famous Players productions.

The powerful story which Zangwill wove into his play has been augmented by the latitude that the mobility of the camera affords the director in staging a photoplay, and it is a safe prediction that the adaptation will prove even more effective than the original which was constricted by the narrow bounds of the theater.

HELEN GIBSON MAKES QUARTER MILE SLIDE.

Helen Gibson contributes something new in the way of thrills to "The Human Telegram," a forthcoming Kalem release in the "Hazards of Helen" series. No mere drop from a bridge to a train or leap from horseback to an engine for this episode. The climax of "The Human Telegram" finds Helen taking a daring quarter-mile slide along a telegraphic wire which stretches down the side of a mountain and across a precipice. It required a battery of four cameras to catch the different parts of the thrill. Perfect atmospheric conditions which beautifully outlined the mountains against the clear sky enabled the cameras to get the scene without a photographic flaw.

Saturday, May 6th, is the release date for "The Human Telegram," which tells a story of railroad construction work in the mountain wilderness. To prevent a three-mile trip around the mountain the telegraph wires have been strung over the precipice and Helen's temporary headquarters are in a shack at the mountain top. Besides an unusually strong story and plenty of daring thrills the picture also boasts of an unusually beautiful scenic setting.

BIG SET IN "THE MADCAP."

In the picturization of "The Madcap" by Director William C. Dowlan, in which film play Miss Flora Parker De Haven is playing the featured lead, a wonderful set was erected in the electric light studio, and where some wonderful photography was secured. In this set two large rooms, a ballroom, art gallery and general reception room were shown at the rear of which was shown a regular stage with all of the performers. It is considered one of the most elaborate sets which has been used in a long time at Universal City. Seventy-five people were used in the cast.

"ELUSIVE ISABEL" (Bluebird).

Timeliness has marked the arrival of several Bluebird productions; films carrying topics that were of immedite public interest have been released on the Bluebird program with a regularity that maintained an average of about one in four.

"Elusive Isabel," the release set for May 15, is another feature that hits the nail of public timeliness immediately upon the head. Florence Lawrence, who returns to the screen in this five-reeler, plays the role of a diplomatic spy, sent to this country by a foreign Government to do nothing less than connive, plot and scheme to disdain American neutrality and jeopardise the position of the United States Government in its attitude of neutrality in Governmental and militaristic policies.

The basis of the plot is this connivance among a score of foreign diplomats to have signed on American soil a compact that would give control to the Latin nations of the political, scientific and economical attributes of the whole world. The counter plot is formulated by this woman spy in love with the Government Secret Service operator, who has been commissioned to catch her and thwart her own plans and the schemes of her employers and confederates.

Originally filmed in eight reels, "Elusive Isabel" has been reduced by the process of editing to five reels, retaining in more condensed scope the many and various sensations that were embodied in the orginal length. In producing these exciting episodes many novel methods have been employed, and a play of uncommon originality is developed.

Supporting Miss Lawrence are some of the most skillful of Bluebird players, including Sydney Bracey, Wallace Clarke, William Welsh, Paul Panzer, Sonia Marcel, with the leading male role entrusted to Harry Millarde, who plays the role of a Government secret service operator.

"THE WOMAN WHO DID NOT CARE" (Selig).

How Mrs. Boyd, prominent in society circles, and secretly the author of "Madame Gossip's" column in a prominent newspaper, finally realizes the evil of unsavory gossip, and reunites a young man and a young woman, is in brief the plot germ in the Selig multiple-reel drama, "The Woman Who Did Not Care," released through General Film Service Monday, April 24.

"The Woman Who Did Not Care" was produced by Frank

Scene from "The Woman Who Did Not Care" (Selig).

Beal from the story written by Chas. J. Buckley, and features Eugenie Besserer and Edith Johnson, supported by a capable cast. While this unusual drama is in one sense a story of high society, yet it contains much true-to-life newspaper atmosphere. Miss Eugenie Besserer, who has been called by critics the "Ellen Terry" of the animated screen, has many and varied opportunities for emotional work. The scenic backgrounds have been chosen with unusual care and every member of the supporting cast has been selected for convincing types.

"The Woman Who Did Not Care" will uphold the noteworthy standard of Selig plays being released through General Film Company. Wm. N. Selig, president of the Selig Company, has faithfully followed the policy of having each General Film release as perfect as possible. No expense has been spared to make "The Woman Who Did Not Care" an unusual production in every detail. It will be noticed that the foremost stars of the Selig Company, the best photoplay authors, and the leading Selig directors are all united in contributing the best releases for the General Film program.

BIG SCENES IN LAST OF "GRAFT."

Director Richard Stanton makes a declaration that the twentieth episode of the "Graft" serial which has been produced by him and in which he also played the leading role, will excel all others in acting and thrilling situations.

He has staged a fight in a real gas plant, between Robert Harding, played by Stanton, and Stanford Stone, portrayed by Glen White, which is really not mere acting. It shows the effects of a life or death battle between Harding, who has been partially numbed by a blow in the head, and Stone, who is intoxicated up to a point of frenzy.

In another part of this episode some wonderful photography has been done when the figure of Harding rises out of a cocktail glass in the hands of Stone and when the latter dashes it to the ground in fear, both Harding and Dorothy Maxwell, played by Miss Jane Novak, appear before his eyes from the broken glass.

This episode, which is entitled "The Final Conquest," is written around the crooked gas trust and serves to bring to a happy end the various vicissitudes of Harding and Dorothy.

TWO SELIG RELEASES.

"The Hard Way" is a Selig multiple reel feature to be released through General Film Service on Monday, May 15. Jack Pickford enacts a character role that is peculiarly adaptable to his unusual talents. The drama written by Russell E. Smith and produced by T. N. Heffron, presents the story of a high school boy who is tempted to the bright lights by boon companions. How realization came to him is developed in an extraordinary climax. Mr. Pickford is ably supported by Sidney Smith, Harry Lonsdale, Lillian Hayward, Vivian Reed and others. There is a thrilling automobile accident presented during the action of the drama.

On Saturday, May 20, a rollicking comedy, "A Boarding House Ham," will be released by the Selig Company through General Film Service. The action takes place in a theatrical boarding house. Among the characters presented are, The Street Faker, The Animal Trainer, The Property Man, The Strong Man and The Lightning Sketch Artist. There is a lot of fun in this comedy and the sub-titles are carried in clever verse.

FRANCELIA BILLINGTON STAR IN "THE IRON GRIP OF CRIME."

Francelia Billington of the Universal City players, who aptly fits Tennyson's line in being "a daughter of the Gods, tall and most divinely fair," is the star in a five-reel feature entitled "The Iron Grip of Crime," now being produced under the direction of Jay Hunt. In this production Miss Billington enacts the role of a New York school teacher who later becomes the wife of a "rough-neck" detective who in his work on a mysterious tragedy, causes his intellectual, spiritual wife an emotional stress that eventually impels her to fling discretion to the winds and make sacrifices and confessions that astound all who know her.

The photo-drama was written by Frank M. Wiltermood, staff author at Universal City, and he considers the "Iron Grip of Crime" his best literary creation in years of experience as a writer.

Playing opposite Miss Billington in leading roles are Gilmore Hammond, as the detective, and Jack Holt, the latter enacting the part of a rich man's son who is in peril of being sent to the electric chair for a crime of which he is innocent. Hammond was especially chosen for the sleuth's role because of his massive proportions and ability to enact the highly dramatic work this big character part demands. Another popular actor, Paul Byron, is cast as a college student who later becomes a crook.

One of the features of this production is a series of scenes showing the automobile races at Corona, Cal., in which "wild Bob" Burman and two other men met death.

SOMETHING NEW IN SERIALS.

The one fundamental feature which made "The Exploits of Elaine" a tremendously popular serial was the universal appeal of science. Craig Kennedy and his scientfiic methods of investigation was a new thought in motion picture production which aroused world-wide curiosity. Since then, this same appeal has been utilized many times but never with the same result. The more common branches of scientific learning have been seemingly used to the limit.

"The Mysteries of Myra" is evoking a repetition of this former interest because it has struck a scientific note hitherto untouched. The basic theme of this splendid continuous feature is the science of psychology and psychics. A more perfect medium of displaying screen possibilities cannot be found. This different and yet absorbingly interesting subject has been handled in such a way as to make it a real contribution to the motion picture art.

Without the semblance of a doubt, the psychic investigator in "The Mysteries of Myra" will equal, if not surpass, the scientific detective of Elaine.

MARY FULLER IN "THE HUNTRESS OF MEN."

Mary Fuller has not presented such a charming picture in a twelve-month as she does in "The Huntress of Men," a five-reel Universal drama adapted by Catherine Carr from a story by G. Vera Tyler and produced at the New Universal studios at Fort Lee by Lucius Henderson Miss Fuller, who is supported by Joseph W. Girard and Sydney Bracy, wears a gorgeous crystal and jet beaded gown and, with her hair piled high above her charming face and figure, she makes a picture of unusual beauty. Miss Fuller devoted a great deal of care to her costuming in this picture which will be released as a Red Feather feature by the Universal.

Scene from "The Huntress of Men" (Universal).

"The Huntress of Men" is a type of woman midway between a vampire and a flirt. No "straight" actor could be found on the Universal payroll who possessed the proper cast of features to play the role of the man whom the playwright chose to break the spirit of "The Huntress." So recourse was had to Joseph W. Girard, the Universal "villain," was was exactly the type to enact the part of Fleming Harcourt, a dominant figure both physically and mentally. Harcourt brings "The Huntress" to his feet in a clever manner.

"A MILLION A MINUTE" (Metro).

"A Million A Minute," with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in the stellar roles, will be released on the Metro program May 15. This elaborate five-part feature, which is now being completed by the Quality Pictures Corporation for the Metro program, was picturized by Howard Irving Young from the novel of the same name written by Hudson Douglas. John W. Noble, who is directing all the Bushman-Bayne features, produced "A Million A Minute" and was assisted by William ("Bill") Bailey.

Scene from "A Million a Minute" (Quality-Metro).

"A Million A Minute" is a fast-moving story of romance, mystery, intrigue and adventure, with some excellent touches of comedy relief. There are scores of pretentious scenes in "A Million A Minute," showing cafe life in both New York and Paris, in and around the picturesque New York Harbor, and other interesting glimpses of New York. The supporting cast includes Helen Dunbar, Robert Cummings, John Davidson, Charles Prince, Mrs. Walker, Carl Brickert, William Bailey, Mary Moore and Jerome Wilson.

PATHE'S "IRON CLAW" TO BE IN TWENTY EPISODES.

The announcement by J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, that "The Iron Claw" will be continued to twenty episodes is more strongly indicative than anything else could be of the great success with which this seriol has met. Mr. Berst in his statement strongly emphasizes the fact that the exhibitors themselves have extended the serial, for it was through numerous letters received from representative exhibitors all over the country requesting the extension that the idea of making such a departure from the original plans was first considered.

When "The Iron Claw" was first decided upon and the announcement of the cast made, it was soon apparent that the exhibitors took an extraordinary interest in the new serial. Pearl White had always proven to be a big attraction in their houses, and with the addition of Creighton Hale and Sheldon Lewis the proposition looked good to them. When the first two episodes were screened it was seen at once that the serial possessed all the elements that go to make a picture great. Mystery, thrills, suspense, excellent acting and careful workmanship were most evident. The serial has more than lived up to the promise of the first episode. The mystery and suspense have been well sustained and it is a fact that the more recent episodes have been even stronger than at first. Edward Jose, the producer, has spared neither pains nor money to make his pictures the very best possible.

"THE END OF THE WORLD" (Great Northern).

The forthcoming release of the Great Northern Film Company, New York, entitled "The End of the World," is a stupendous production, the cost of which involved a great sum of money. The subject is most unusual and interesting, dealing as it does with the probable havoc and destruction wrought by a fiery comet in the earth's atmosphere.

Hundreds of people were employed to take part in the scenes of devastation, where a whole village was set afire by flames descending from the skies, and which was entirely consumed; a shipwreck on a blazing sea; an awe-inspiring electrical storm of great violence rages, and a real flood of great magnitude in the midst of its work of tremendous destruction is vividly pictured. Throughout these scenes and those less thrilling a story of human emotion winds, the whole composing a unique, absorbing and magnificent spectacle.

ADELE FARRINGTON IN "WHEELS OF POWER."

Adele Farrington plays a typical newspaper woman in "Wheels of Power," a five-reel drama which Director Jay Hunt has just finished at Universal City. Miss Farrington's work is consistent throughout the production and her acting of the role of a woman torn by conflicting emotions indicates her complete knowledge of the requirements of the screen. Especially is this noticeable in the last reels of the play where the action is fast.

Not far behind Miss Farrington in excellent acting in "Wheels of Power" is Orrin G. Jackson, who plays the part of John Morris, the city editor of the newspaper upon which Lil Magill (Miss Farrington) is employed. Jackson is at home as John Morris and gives a performance that compels more than usual attention.

C. N. Hammond has the role of Calvert Paige, the newspaper owner; Kingsley Benedict plays Brad Hamilton, a young attorney, and Mina Jeffries is Johnnie Paige, daughter of Calvert. All of these roles are well sustained.

"THE CITY OF ILLUSION" IS CLEANING UP.

At this early date, actually less than two weeks since its release, "The City of Illusion," the Ivan feature current for April, is reported as doing tremendous business. The exchangemen are delighted with the result so far attained and several have ordered additional prints of this feature for immediate delivery. Nearly every exhibitor who has played "The City of Illusion" has come back for more time and many of them have offered 25 per cent. above the regular rental so as to continue the run of phenomenal business for two, three and four days beyond contract period.

FIRST FIVE-REEL KNICKERBOCKER MAY 17.

May 17th is the date decided upon for the release of the first five-reel Knickerbocker Star Feature, starring Lois Meredith. "Spellbound" is the title of the subject, presenting in elaborate sets and magnificent locations a story which may safely be termed noval and original. The exteriors showing the ancestral home of Elsie Yorke, the English heiress played by Miss Meredith, were filmed by special permission of a wealthy Californian whose great country estate, modeled after a famous English homestead, has never before been invaded by the motion picture camera. The interiors are in keeping with the standard thus established, all the rooms shown having been reproduced from photographs of interiors. Even the foliage and glimpses of parks and driveways, shown through open windows, have been reproduced as closely as possible. The principal set in the first two reels of the picture, representing the great hall of the manor, is sixty feet deep, and shows through long French windows perspective of more than three hundred yards.

In the third reel, during the procedure of Harrington Graeme's trial for the murder of Major Cavendish, an East Indian takes the stand and narrates, briefly but dramatically, the circumstances attending the disappearance of a Hindoo idol from the temple of Karsinovoh. The interior of the temple is an exact reproduction of the great temple of Prithi-Devi at Benaros, which Kipling used in his story of "The Incarnation of Krishna Mulvaney."

Spectacular fire scenes furnish the climax of the picture. They have been staged with all the artistry and detail so favorably associated with the direction of H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer. Several unique lighting effects stand out in the consistently good camera work, especially in the gambling-house scenes and in the remarkable ballroom interior at the end of the fourth reel.

LOCATION AND DESIGN OF THE TICKET BOOTH.

By A. F. Powers, Designer for the Decorators Supply Co.

The location, size and design of the ticket selling booth of the picture theater is a matter worthy of careful consideration. In the legitimate theaters, this is not a matter of such importance and the box office is often located inside the lobby, far back from the street line.

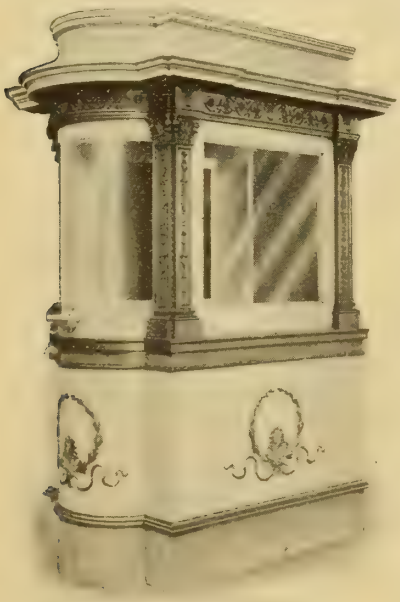
World Theater, Chicago.

With a motion picture theater, however, such an arrangement, especially if the house be located on a busy thoroughfare, would lose a large percentage of its patrons, as every exhibitor realizes the "power of suggestion" in influencing many of his patrons to enter.

There is no better "bally-hoo" for a picture theater than an artistic ticket booth located close to the front of the lobby with the cashier ready to hand out the tickets to the passers by. With this arrangement a "Now Open" sign is hardly needed.

Princess Theater, Joliet, Ill.

The exhibitor should always have the ticket selling booth in plain sight of passers-by, and in busy "down-town" locations as near the edge of the sidewalk as possible. The illustration of the World theater, in Chicago, located on a busy thoroughfare, shows an arrangement of the booth extending to the edge of the sidewalk, which is a very good arrangement, as this theater depends greatly on "getting them as they go by."



Booth Built by Decorators' Supply Company.

The illustration of the Princess theater of Joliet, Illinois, shows a good arrangement for a theater in a smaller city or a neighborhood house as the ticket booth is located just far enough back from the sidewalk to allow for storm doors which are installed in the winter.

The booth need not be large, but should be carefully and artistically designed, and should not be considered as a part of the building, but more as a fixture or piece of furniture; a booth which stands alone in a lobby, free from the wall, should, if square or octagonal, not exceed four feet in width and depth.

The ticket booth shown is two feet eight inches wide by four feet eight inches deep, which gives just sufficient room for the cashier.

Such booth can be purchased complete with glass, marble base, brass shelf and decorated to suit the taste of the purchaser, and built to fit the slope of the floor. It is always best to have the booth decorated by the manufacturer at the factory, as the decorating of the booth at the theater is always a problem.

FORD BEEBE WITH SIGNAL.

Ford Beebe is a new arrival at the studios of the Signal (Mutual) company. He is an experienced publicity man and free lance writer, and he will assist with the scenarios, as well as with the advertising.

COMEDIES OF A CARTOONIST.

Comedians who do a St. Vitus dance on the motion picture screen, when they should be as sedate as deacons, and brickbats and skillets which float with lackadaisical ease, when they should have the velocity of cannon balls, are the flies-in-the-ointment of the animated cartoonist's existence. So thinks Earl Hurd of Los Angeles, one of the artists of the Bray Studios. Mr. Hurd is the creator of "Bobby Bumps and His Goatmobile," the eighteenth release of the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoons.

Bobby and the Goatmobile.

"The drawing and timing of an action is a brand new science and any artist who is willing to spoil a few hundred feet of film and some time and patience, will feel amply rewarded if he can see his characters come to life before his eyes and act in an almost rational manner," declares Mr. Hurd. "The animated cartoon is an entirely different proposition from any other kind of drawing. My first attempts on the screen could only be looked at through smoked glasses. Characters that I had expected to walk sedately into a picture, volplaned in, and other objects that I had drawn to move with speed were simply wafted along."

The story of "Bobby Bumps and His Goatmobile" concerns Bobby, a pinafored maiden, and a rival playmate. Bobby, out riding in his car, propelled by goat power and a treadmill affair, meets the other youngster towing the tiny Miss in his coaster. The maiden prefers goatmobiles and changes vehicles, whereupon the disappointed rival plans revenge, steals Bobby's engine and effects his downfall, but not until after a joy ride in which Bobby breaks speed laws and numerous other things.

NIGH STARS WITH MISS SNOW.

Director William Nigh, who recently completed the sensational five-part production, "The Kiss of Hate," with Ethel Barrymore in the stellar role, has begun work on a new feature for Metro in which he will be co-starred with Marguerite Snow. "Buttsy's Glory" is the name of the new production, and it was written by Mr. Nigh. Not content with writing it and starring in it, Mr. Nigh is going to go one better in this wonderplay and introduce his wife in a prominent part. She is known on the stage and on the screen as Citta Cameron, but she has never appeared on the Metro program.

"Buttsy's Glory" is a comedy drama. Part of the story is laid on the East Side and along the Great White Way, and the remainder in the West. Mr. Nigh has surrrounded himself and Miss Snow with a strong supporting cast which includes such players as Robert Elliot, Roy Applegate, Julius D. Cowles, R. A. Breese, Lieutenant Victor De Linsky, Martin Faust, Cecilia Griffiths and Frank Montgomery. David Thompson, Mr. Nigh's assistant director, will also have an important role in "Buttsy's Glory." Mr. Thompson formerly played leading roles opposite Miss Snow in Thanhouser productions.

"A DASH OF COURAGE" (Keystone).

Speeding automobiles and stout stone walls combine to produce some laughable thrills in "A Dash of Courage," a current farce from Mack Sennett's studios destined for release on the Triangle programme. Harry Gribbon and his fellow funmakers happily survived situations in which they were spilled rather promiscuously over the landscape.

The trouble all started when Harry and his crook band got hold of a telegram delegating a police commissioner to make collections for the Old Cops' Home. Harry takes his place and begins to collect by wholesale from the safe of the richest man in town. As his men have chloroformed the police force and taken their uniforms it is a motley crew that responds to the victim's call for help. The supposed police suggest that he wait until the robber has got the money, which can be produced as evidence. After the success of this ruse they start to make their escape.

Scene from "A Dash of Courage" (Keystone).

Meanwhile the regular police have been revived and lead the chase when a second call for help comes. New automobiles will be needed if Sennett wants to repeat the chase, but the stone wall still stands to test the mettle of any venturesome Keystoner who wants to match his skull against the rock.

RISKS LIFE FOR REALISM.

Driving an automobile across a thirty-five-foot chasm at a sixty-mile-an-hour clip, is a feat performed by Thomas Chatterton in "The Secret of the Submarine," the big Mutual-American film play which has its first chapter release on May 8.

To do the stunt, Mr. Chatterton, who essays the role of Lieut. Jarvis Hope, U. S. N., in the big picture, overcame objections of directors and managers, who had employed Al Thompson, a professional dare-devil, to make the mad ride, and mad ride it was.

The scene was taken on the road between Los Angeles and Tom Chatterton Driving Across 35-Foot Chasm.

Santa Barbara, at a spot where a bridge had actually been washed out by the spring rains. Three cameras were trained on the flying car, catching it as it left the broken side of the bridge as it went through the air and landing on the far side. The accompanying picture shows the car just leaving the bridge for its plunge through the air.

There was no announcement made of their plans by the producing company, but the authorities of Camarillo, a small village nearest the scene, scenting the excitement, dismissed school, so that the pupils could witness the thrill-making.

"Aeroplanes are tame to this," Mr. Chatterton commented as he received the congratulations of Director Sargent. "I was never sure that the machine would stay right side up, and when we landed on the far side I thought my teeth were all jarred loose. But it will give a thrill to the story, and that is what we are after, realism with a big 'R'."

The following day a tourist party ran off the bridge, killing the chauffeur, so the "movie" way of jumping chasms is safest after all.

"LIFE WITHOUT SOUL" (Ocean).

In its new form "Life Without Soul," the Ocean production which is being marketed by the Raver Film Corporation, will tell a slightly different story. While the theme has not been tampered with, a new interest has been added to the production in its re-editing. The idea conveyed in the story is brought out more forcefully and a greater degree of interest has been injected into the entire picture.

In the revision of this picture, Mr. Raver—under whose personal supervision this work was done—had some scientific scenes inserted that not only clarify the story but help materially toward giving the subject a still greater interest. These scientific films show the blood coursing through the veins and arteries, the conjugation of cells and the reproduction of life in the fish world. They lend a more convincing atmosphere to the laboratory scenes and cause the final results of the scientist to appear logical.

A new color scheme is also carried out in the tinting and toning of the picture. The colors are applied so as to accentuate the idea carried in the action and also to add to the atmosphere so as to convey the impression desired. In its new form "Life Without Soul" besides its entertaining value also has an educational worth.

E. L. DAVENPORT METRO ACTOR.

Edgar L. Davenport, of the famous family of Davenports, who have contributed so many notable artists to the speaking stage, is now appearing regularly in Metro productions and will next be seen on the program in "Dorian's Divorce," in which Lionel Barrymore and Grace Valentine are starred. He was last seen on the Metro program in "The Blindness of Love."

Mr. Davenport excels in the roles of middle aged men, and generally appears as a banker, broker or other successful business man. He began his stage career when he was a mere boy, playing the title role in "Peck's Bad Boy." He appeared as leading man for many prominent Broadway stars, including Otis Skinner, Nat Goodwin, James K. Hackett, E. H. Sothern and many other notable players.

NOTES OF THE TRADE

ROBERT CLUGSTON, who was engaged by Gaumont for an important part in "The Haunted Manor," has been assigned a strong role in "The Isle of Love." In this Gaumont five-reel feature Gertrude McCoy is the star. Mr. Clugston impersonates a wealthy clubman who is desperately in love with the heroine. The photoplay will be released May 15.

"Ambrosia," a five-reel comedy drama in which Ella Hall is being featured, is being filmed by Director Robert Leonard, who also wrote the photoplay. In this feature production Miss Hall takes the part of a twelve-year-old girl, the type which has heretofore made her so well known in the photoplay world Others in the cast are: Adele Farrington, Betty Schade, Harry Depp and Kingsley Benedict.

"The Heart's Tribute," a three-act drama produced by the Lubin Company and released April 20 through the General Film Company. The story is by Dr. Daniel Carson Goodman, with direction of Rene Plaissetty.

The football teams of the Alhambra, Cal., High School staged an exciting game recently for the benefit of the big scene in the college comedy, "Cupid's Touch-down," featuring Jack Pickford and produced by Frank Beal. The boys played as if the championship game of the year were at stake.

President Samuel S. Hutchinson, of the American Film Company, Inc., is in New York on a business trip, having arrived from Chicago several days ago. Mr. Hutchinson reported everything moving smoothly at the American, Signal and Mustang studios, where a number of important productions are now under way. He expects to remain in New York for some days, during which he will participate in a series of important conferences with President Freuler, of the Mutual.

"The Story of Edwin Baptiste," prepared by Olga Printzlau from Tennyson's poem "Maud," has been completed by Director Rupert Julian, who also played the feature lead. Julian is now engaged in filming "The Fur-Trimmed Coat," from the story of Irene Haere and prepared for the screen by E. J. Clawson. It is a one-reel photoplay, but with an all-star cast including Julian, Miss Elsie Jane Wilson, Miss Francelia Billington, Douglas Gerrard and others of the Universal Stock company.

Gustav Frieling, an attorney, who has been enjoying a good law practice in New York, has been engaged by Director William Nigh to play the role of the District Attorney in "Buttsy's Glory," in which Mr. Nigh and Marguerite Snow are starred.

"Millionaire Billie," one-act comedy, produced by the Lubin Company and released April 22 through the General Film Company. Billie Reeves featured in a story written and directed by Clay M. Greene, in which it is shown that money is a better blanket than even charity for the covering of a multitude of sins.

Anna Little, Frank Borzage and Jack Richardson are the featured players in "Unlucky Luke," a novel Western drama in three acts to be released shortly by the Mutual under the "Mustang" brand. Miss Little appears in the role of a school teacher, while Borzage, who is also directing the picture, essays the role of "Unlucky Luke," a cowboy.

Mabel Taliaferro, the dainty and winsome Metro star, plays the role of a boy in "The Snowbird," a forthcoming five-part wonderplay on the Metro program. Edwin Carewe, who is directing Miss Taliaferro, also has a prominent part in "The Snowbird."

Director Jay Hunt is preparing to film a story of New York politics and underworld life, but the title has not been selected nor has the cast been made up. It is expected Adele Farrington will play the feature lead as she did in "Wheels of Power," a five-reel feature which has just been completed.

Paul M. Bryan, of Denver, Col., a photo-playwright who has written a great many Gaumont dramas, is now visiting in the East. Mr. Bryan devoted himself so closely to his work that his physician advised him to take a vacation. Thinking to combine business with pleasure, he came east to visit the Gaumont studios and confer with General Manager F. G. Bradford and Scenario Editor George D. Proctor.

"One of the Pack," produced by the Lubin Company, and released April 18, through the General Film Company, is a two-act drama written by Tom Gibson and directed by Leon D. Kent.

The strong lights of the studios have temporarily affected Mme. Petrova's eyes and she has been obliged to take a rest. Immediately after completing the final scenes in "The Scarlet Woman," for the Metro program, Mme. Petrova, accompanied by a group of friends, sailed for Bermuda. While there she expects to write the scenario for her next production.

Director Otis Turner has been given a vacation and his company, with J. Warren Kerrigan as the star will be directed by Jack Conway. The name of the first photoplay to be directed by Conway is "The Silent Battle," from a story by George Gibbs and prepared for the screen by F. McGrew Willis. The company will begin work on the new five-reel feature production next week, and in the cast will be Lois Wilson, Madge George and Harry Carter. Turner before leaving completed "The Soil" in which the Misses Wilson and George and Harry Carter appeared.

One of the biggest sets ever erected on a studio stage was put up by James Loy, Balboa's boss carpenter, for the production of a screen version of "Sultana." Ruth Roland and William Conklin are being featured in it. The set was so large that the camera had to be placed two hundred feet away to get all of the construction into the picture. Sherwood Macdonald is the director in charge.

Director George Cochrane and his featured actor, Thomas Jefferson, have completed the picturization of "Corporal Billie's Comeback," a comedy written around the life of an old soldier. It is in two reels, and gives Jefferson an excellent opportunity for his well known character work. A new subject will be taken up by Cochrane next week.

Ed Sedgwick is a recent acquisition to the Vogue-Mutual studios. Ed is known as one of the biggest men, physically speaking, appearing in screen comedies, standing well over six feet and weighing in proportion.

In chapters one and two of the George Kleine motion picture novel, "Gloria's Romance," Billie Burke, the star, wears a Lucile frock, some dainty pajamas, a $275 negligee, a suit of boy's clothes, the garb of a Seminole Indian squaw and another Lucile gown.

"Chinatown Villains," is the title of a laugh-maker now under way at the Vogue-Mutual studios under the direction of Jack Dillon. The comedy presents some remarkable trick photography, one scene in particular depicting a man falling from the roof of a skyscraper followed by a crash through a skylight.

"The Other Woman," a two reel society drama, in which the leads are played by Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnson, has just been finished by Director Lloyd Carleton at Universal City.

New Boston Home of Pathe Is a Show Place—Many Important Changes in Personnel at the Film Distributing Offices—New International Film and Unicorn Companies Getting into the Stride—Other Notes.

By William M. Flynn, Boston Correspondent of the Moving Picture World.

BOSTON, MASS.—The new Boston home of the Pathe is one of the show places of New England from a moving picture standpoint, and Manager Samuel Bernfield has been kept busy escorting visitors through the palatial exchange. Over the door at the entrance to Nos. 7 and 9 Isabella street hangs a gilded rooster with the word "Pathe" emblazoned in gold and the structure is refined and dignified throughout.

The lower floor of the building looks more like a bank than a moving picture exchange. Manager Bernfield's office is on the right as you enter from the street, while on the left, separated from the rest of the room by a long, highly-polished counter, is a battery of stenographers, clerks and office assistants. At the rear of the first floor is the cashier's cage and the rest of the executive offices.

The exhibition room, inspection and shipping departments and vaults are capable of storing more than 1,000 reels of film, are situated on the second floor. The building is so planned that films may be transported by means of the rear fire escapes from the shipping department to teams and automobiles in a yard at the rear, which eliminates the necessity of carrying these films through the office or any other part of the exchange. An elaborate poster department has been established in the basement, the main aisle of which has been christened "Broadway."

Manager Bernfield justly takes considerable pride in his new quarters. The building is absolutely fireproof. It is built of brick and concrete, the interior trimmings are of oak and there is an abundance of light and fresh air. The new location is expected to be a great convenience to the host of New England exhibitors that do business with the Pathe people.

Practically no change has been made in the personnel of the local Pathe staff. John Donnelly will continue covering the Rhode Island territory, Harry Goldman, Connecticut; M. P. O'Flaherty, western Massachusetts; Robert C. Kinney, eastern Massachusetts, and Walter P. Davidson, Maine and New Hampshire. These men at the present time are helping Manager Bernfield prepare the campaign that is soon to be launched to exploit the new Pathe serial release, "Who's Guilty?" This serial is expected to prove even more popular than the "Iron Claw," the episodes of which have been increased from fourteen to twenty at the request of a host of New England exhibitors, including Samuel Wasserman, secretary of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of Massachusetts, Inc. Mr. Wasserman is the proprietor of the Eagle theater in Roxbury.

Former World Man With International.

Boston, Mass.—Edwin H. McCloskey, former Boston correspondent of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD and one of the best-known and popular newspaper men in New England, is now making a name for himself in the local moving picture field. He has joined the road staff of the New England branch of the International Film Service under Manager Frank H. Vine and is traveling through Massachusetts exploiting the "Mysteries of Myra," the big International psychic serial. Mr. Closkey recently returned from the South where he was connected with the Atlanta office of the General Film Company and later exploited the "Social Pirates" serial for Kalem. He is well acquainted with conditions and exhibitors in Massachusetts and should prove a valuable asset to the International Film Service.

Becomes World Film's New England Manager.

Boston, Mass.—Frank A. Grady, former assistant New England branch manager of the V-L-S-E, has been made New England manager of the World Film and since assuming his new duties has been receiving congratulations from exhibitors and friends in and out of the moving picture business throughout the country. Mr. Grady has a pleasing personality and a magnetic character that is bound to increase his popularity in this territory and materially increase the World bookings. He has been connected with the New England office of the V-L-S-E ever since it was opened in Boston, and previous to that time was a road man for the local branch of the General Film ompany for about three years.

J. Lester Reardon, who was formerly a road man for the V-L-S-E, has been made assistant branch manager of that company to fill the place made vacant by the departure of Mr. Grady. Bert Cornell, former shipper of the V-L-S-E, has been made booker for the New England branch of that corporation and Maurice Curran will hereafter do the shipping.

George Balsdon, New England manager of the V-L-S-E, has just returned to Boston after an extended business trip through the cape section of Massachusetts and he reports the outlook very promising.

Local General Film Notes.

Lawrence J. Hacking, former manager of the Boston office of the General Film, has been transferred to New Haven, Conn., to handle the affairs of the company in that territory. E. A. Farrell, who went South the first of the year to direct the destinies of the General Film in that section of the country, has returned to his old position at the head of the New England branch of the same company. From all accounts, Mr. Farrell is mighty glad to get back to little old Boston. The South may be a great place for some people, but he thinks the North is the only place for a Northerner. Samuel Haas, who went to the Dallas, Texas, office of the General early in January, has also returned to the Boston branch and shaken the alkali out of his shoes. Sammie got a peek at the Indians and cowboys in their native haunts and is satisfied.

New Unicorn District Managers.

Boston, Mass.—The Unicorn combination has taken over the United Film Service and Mr. Fred B. Murphy, former proprietor of that service, is now the eastern manager for the new enterprise that is about to launch a 21-reel program for New England exhibitors.

J. A. Eslow, who, up to a short time ago, was New England manager of the Universal, has been made western manager of the Unicorn and has left Boston for San Francisco to take up his new duties.

A. S. Schaller Heads New England Universal.

Boston, Mass.—Albert S. Schaller is the new head of the New England branch of the Universal. He has been prominent in moving picture affairs in New England for several years and is thoroughly acquainted with and eminently fitted to fill his newly-acquired responsibilities. Mr. Schaller was assistant manager under Mr. Eslow ever since the Universal took over the enterprises of Walter Greene in Boston four years ago. Previous to that time he was employed as accountant by Mr. Greene.

The Empire, Maguire & Connery's theater at Salem, Mass., has gone over from stock to pictures and vaudeville, and from reports the change has increased the box office receipts.

IN NEWARK, N. J.

By Jacob Kolter, Newark Correspondent.

Observes First Anniversary.

Newark, N. J.—The Lyric theater, 211 Market street, last week observed its first anniversary under the management of R. G. Tunison. A special program was given.

Lyceum, Orange, to Open.

Orange, N. J.—The Lyceum theater, 508 Main street, will be opened as a first-class moving picture house on May 1, by G. E. Siegel, a well-known exhibitor from New England. Mr. Siegel has completely renovated his place, and has installed all new opera chairs and projection equipment.

Picture Houses Help.

Newark, N. J.—The various moving picture houses of Newark aided the clean-up crusade last week by showing slides of the work and how the city could be improved. The managers of the moving picture houses gladly offered their assistance. The campaign was conducted very vigorously and much credit is due the managers for the publicity given to the crusade.

Assistants to Organize.

Newark, N. J.—The assistant operators of Newark and vicinity are planning an organization in the very near future. The purpose of the association is to secure recognition from the operators' union so that only members of the assistants' organization will be permitted to work with union men. M. R. Heslowitz, assistant operator at the U. S. Palace theater, Orange, is the main backer of the idea. He has already enlisted the support of several other assistants and a meeting is scheduled for the near future.

Buffalo News Letter

Rochester Wants to Be Excepted in the Proposed Christman Censorship Law—Ford Cars on the Stage at the Academy—The Allendale's New Policy—Exchange Notes and News of Exhibitors.

By Joseph McGuire, Special Correspondent, 611 Erie County Bank Bldg., Buffalo.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—In behalf of moving picture theater owners in Rochester, N. Y., Attorney John J. McInerney of that city has asked that an amendment be made to the Christman bill, introduced at Albany, N. Y., providing for the naming of three moving picture censors by the Regents. The amendment would except Rochester from the provisions of the measure.

"Rochester has passed an ordinance," said Mr. McInerney, "which provides for adequate censorship for moving pictures. The morals of a community must be judged locally. Every week in Rochester the number of persons equal to the population of this city attend moving picture theaters. Is it wise to disregard their interests and attack unduly their means of education and recreation?"

ACADEMY PROFIT-SHARING.

A Ford Car a Month to Patrons—Assembling Fords on Stage.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Manager Michaels of the Academy theater, Buffalo, has introduced Academy profit-sharing coupons among his patrons, and is giving away a Ford car each month. The coupons are deposited in a box in the lobby and the holder of the fortunate coupon wins the car, which is exhibited in the lobby.

"There are no blanks in these contests," said Mr. Michaels, "because, even if a patron fails to win an automobile, he may present five of the Academy profit-sharing coupons at our box office and receive free a ten cent admission to the theater."

With the distribution of autos, Mr. Michaels holds two contests a month in connection with the assembling of Ford cars on his stage in full view of the audience. Twelve men comprise each crew. Unless a crew can set up a Ford car inside of five minutes the team is disqualified from getting a share of the first prize, consisting of $50 in cash. Different crews show their skill on different nights, so that the interest is prolonged. The car won in the profit-sharing contest is the one used in the assembling contest. The car is run onto the stage and is then "all knocked down," according to the words of Mr. Michaels. Each crew must be composed of experts, such as "body men," "motor men," "fender men," etc. So far these contestants have shown remarkable speed and skill, and four minutes is the customary time used in assembling a machine and running it across the stage.

The Allendale's New Policy.

Buffalo, N. Y., April 18.—"Our attractions will be a revelation," was the title of a large sign which Charles Bowe, manager of the Allendale moving picture theater, Buffalo, recently placed at the front of his house. The sign announced a new policy which Mr. Bowe has begun at the Allendale.

"A feature and a two-reel comedy are offered every night, the prices being ten and fifteen cents. A recent Monday evening, before Holy Week, broke all records for attendance and good houses have been the rule ever since. The increased orchestra is now under the direction of Bertram S. Forbes, who also plays our new $10,000 organ. The house has been renovated throughout."

Mr. Bowe received flowers and many telephone messages, congratulating him.

New Theater in Perry.

Perry, N. Y.—Clayton Wood, of Hornell, N. Y., will build a modern moving picture theater in Perry, N. Y., at a cost of $15,000. The house will have a depth of 100 feet and a frontage of 77 feet. Work will begin at once, so the building will be opened by fall. The theater will be equipped with a large stage. Mr. Wood has been in the amusement business for years.

H. E. Hughes to Head Local Unicorn.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The Buffalo offices of the Unicorn Film Service Corporation will be located at 23 West Swan street. H. E. Hughes will be in charge of the Buffalo headquarters, where the United Film Service was formerly located.

S. C. Allen to Manage the Millard Fillmore.

East Aurora, N. Y.—S. C. Allen is manager of the Millard Fillmore moving picture theater, East Aurora, N. Y. The building was formerly the home of Millard Fillmore, late president of the United States.

Buffalo Exchange Notes.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Al Botham has been appointed advertising manager of the Buffalo branch of the William L. Sherry Feature Film Co. Daniel J. Savage, general manager of the Buffalo and Syracuse offices of this company, recently visited the company's headquarters in New York. Recent callers at the Buffalo branch were L. C. Babcock, Lyric theater, Wellsville, and Mr. Woods, Winter Garden theater, Jamestown.

Rochester, N. Y.—C. J. Rose has opened the attractive offices of the General Film at 90 West Main street, Rochester.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Hunter Bennett, sales manager of the Mutual, called Monday on W. H. Christoffers, manager of the Buffalo offices of the company. Mr. Bennett gave an effective sales talk to the road representatives of the Buffalo branch. He was on his way to Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Detroit and other offices of the company.

"The exhibitors in the Buffalo territory are all anxious to book 'The million dollar Charlie Chaplin pictures,'" said J. M. Gorchof, Mutual road man. "Many of them are planning also to attend the coming ball of the Buffalo Screen Club."

Buffalo, N. Y.—Many stickers announcing the motion picture ball, Elmwood Music Hall, Baffalo, N. Y., Monday evening, May 15, under the auspices of the Buffalo Screen Club, are being distributed throughout the Buffalo territory. Each sticker carries the announcement: "See your favorite screen stars."

Fredonia, N. Y.—Charles Landers, proprietor of the Fredonia, N. Y., opera house, recently visited the Buffalo offices of the Triangle Film Corporation.

"Saturday was the biggest night in the history of our house," said Mr. Landers. "The feature was 'The Coward,' a Triangle production."

Crystal Beach, N. Y.—Henry S. Fisher is general manager of Crystal Beach, a Lake Erie summer resort near Buffalo. Mr. Fisher will have a moving picture theater among his season's attractions.

MAINE NEWS LETTER.

By John P. Flanagan, Special Correspondent, 147 Park View Ave., Bangor, Me.

Eastern Co-operative Amusement Co. Forms.

KITTERY, Me.—The Eastern Co-operative Amusement Co., of Kittery, has been organized with $500,000 capital for the purpose of manufacturing, operating and dealing in amusement enterprises and coin-operated machines of all kinds and descriptions, also to own and operate theaters. Horace Mitchell, of Kittery, is president and clerk; H. A. Paul, of Kittery, treasurer; directors the same and M. G. Metcalfe, Benjamin F. Bunker and Frank O. Keene, all of Kittery.

Harry E. Jones a Bankrupt.

Lewiston, Me.—Notice has been received in this city that Hary E. Jones, one of the original proprietors of the Union Square theater, formerly the Lewiston theater, was recently adjudged a bankrupt in Boston. Mr. Jones, with Sam Barabee, in 1914 erected the Union Square theater and opened it on the 31st day of December. At first it was vaudeville and moving pictures, then stock, and in the fall of 1915 became a moving picture house exclusively. Then the Keith Company acquired the house, making it a vaudeville theater, and making Music Hall, its former vaudeville theater, a straight picture house. It is understood that Mr. Jones' financial troubles have arisen as a result of his investment with the Lewiston theater.

We May Go Clam Shooting.

Freeport, Me.—Manager Mortimer, of the Nordica theater, reports that business is booming at his house, and he is looking for a great summer. He has been waiting for the weather to get warmer so he can decorate the front of the house. He has put in Metro pictures and business is picking up. Thanks for the invitation to visit Freeport and go clam shooting, Brother Mortimer.

Censors Get Decision

In Pennsylvania, Supreme Court Justice von Moschzisker Decides That Court of Common Pleas Is Not Called Upon to Act as Super-Censors—It Can Only Reverse Ruling of Censor Board When Latter Is Oppressive.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—The practice of having judges of the common pleas court act as moving picture consors was recently condemned by Justice von Moschzisker, of the supreme court, in an opinion reversing the lower court and upholding the state board of moving picture censors.

"A careful reading of the statute," the justice said, "convinces us that it was never contemplated that the courts of common pleas were to be constantly called upon to permit moving picture reels to be reproduced before them, and sit as super-censors thereof, in order to review the decisions of the administrative body created by the act."

The appeal to the supreme court was made in the case of a film entitled "Virtue," certain scenes of which the board of censors eliminated. The film producers appealed to common pleas court No. 2, which, after viewing the film, said the eliminated scenes could be put back. For the board of censors, Deputy Attorney General Kun appealed to the supreme court, which upheld the censors and reversed the decision of the lower court. Justic von Moschzisker tells how far the common pleas court may go in censoring a film.

"The evident intent of the act," he says, "was to grant a right of appeal to the common pleas court, so that tribunal could correct any arbitrary or oppressive orders which the board of censors might make, and nothing more; in other words, that the court might reverse the censors when the latter were guilty of abuse oi discretion. This is the ordinary rule to which on appeal even this court restricts itself in reviewing an exercise of discretion, particularly of administrative officials.

"We do not mean to say that the common pleas court may not review eliminated pictures when necessary so to do in order properly to comprehend the matters before them; but such inspection should never be resorted to unless, in their opinion, the ordinary methods of proof are inadequate.

"When, after hearing, the court is convinced in any case that the censors have abused their discretion, the construction just placed upon the act of 1915 leaves ample power in the court of common pleas to see that the public is not denied proper entertaininment, and to protect property rights, a power which they should not hesitate to use when occasion required."

STANLEY THEATER CELEBRATES SECOND ANNIVERSARY.

Remarkable Success of Two Years—Profit-Sharing Scheme and Increases.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The second anniversary of the building and opening of the Stanley theater, 1620 Market street, the splendid modern playhouse which has revolutionized the moving picture industry as far as Philadelphia is concerned, and even had an effect upon the standards of the entertainment world the country over, was celebrated commencing Monday, April 24, immediately following the Easter holidays. During the two years that have elapsed Stanley success and Stanley service have become words to conjure with the theatrical circles, and credit for this lays largely with Stanley V. Mastbaum, president of the company, whose clear science and indomitable energy established the service and made possible the success.

It was Mr. Mastbaum's idea—held at a time when a few agreed with him—that the film drama was due to attract the class of patronage that would demand comforts and even luxuries in their favorite place of evening resort. The net result of that idea and characteristic Mastbaum energy and enterprise, was the erection, at a cost approaching a half a million dollars, of the Stanley theater.

A Profit-Sharing for Employes.

In honor of the remarkable success which the Stanley theater has experienced, a profit-sharing and protecting system has been inaugurated among all the employes of the theater, the terms of which are as follows:

It dates from the anniversary week, beginning April 24th, 1916, to Christmas, and thereafter from Christmas to Christmas:

All in the employ of the Stanley theater for a term of one year shall receive a bonus as follows:

Those receivng twenty-five dollars per week or less, ten per cent. additional salary. Those receiving over twenty-five dollars per week, five per cent. additional salary.

The salary of every employe shall be reviewed every three months so that the management can see that the deserving ones shall have their wages increased in accordance with the business accomplished at the theater and according to the merit of their work.

There shall be a sinking fund providing that all employes should be paid a full salary during a term of illness for any time up to and including eight weeks' duration.

There shall be another fund provided for the payment of all medicines, doctor's fees and all incidentals connected with any illness whatsoever.

There shall be another fund provided for the payment for any vacation which may be necessary for an employe to take to recuperate after illness.

B. F. Dorsheimer, proprietor of the New Opera house theater, Parkesburg, Pa., was a recent visitor to Philadelphia and paid his respects to the various supply houses. Before returning to Parkesburg he purchased some new equipment at the Swaab Film Service, 1327 Vine street, including a new Power 6 B projecting machine.

Bill Wert, of the Calehuff Supply Company, 1301 Race street, Philadelphia, is making an extended trip throughout the State and announces encountering the most prosperous conditions.

Well Aired Theaters

Exhibitors in District of Columbia Take Exception to Remarks on Bad Ventilation in Local Theaters—Inspection Laws of the District Are Strict and No Bad Conditions as Reported Exist.

By Clarence L. Linz, Special Correspondent, 635 Tenth St., N.E., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The exhibitors of Washington are taking exception to the remarks alleged to have been made by one Frank L. Bourne, of New York, a recent guest at the Raleigh Hotel, when interviewed by the representative of a local newspaper, where he asked that "Since there seems to be an effort to make Washington the model city in every way, a city commensurate with the ideas of idealists, when considering the health of its populace, why don't they look after the horrible atmospheric conditions in some of the moving picture theaters it has been my misfortune to visit? A crusade against these theaters should result in immediate and radical changes in the systems of ventilation. Owners of theaters should be compelled to comply with the regulations in force in other cities, namely: Five hundred cubic feet of air an hour for each patron. However, in order to conserve heat during the winter, many of the local proprietors close up openings for the ingress of fresh air.

"The decrease in the number of old-fashioned moving picture theaters, if continued, will remove a menace to public health. In connection with the question of healthful atmospheres in moving picture theaters, the practice in some houses in this city of using a disinfectant and deodorant to disguise the foul air should be discouraged. I am like many another citizen—I would prefer to sit in a chilled atmosphere, knowing it was pure, than be compelled to inhale the atmosphere from a closed-up showhouse."

The local moving picture men take a great deal of pride in their houses and ventilation is a matter which is given a great deal of attention, and is largely featured in the advertising of the houses. The inspection laws of the District of Columbia are very strict and no such condition as he refers to would be allowed to exist. The newspaper is censured for printing such bunk.

FEDERAL RACE HATRED BILL.

Bill Aimed at "Nation" Film—Would Prohibit Interstate Passage of Race Pictures.

Washington, D. C.—Congressman L. C. Dyer, of Missouri, has introduced a bill (H. R. 14668) into the House of Representatives to prohibit the exhibition or use of films or pictorial representations calculated to reflect upon any race or nationality. It is understood that this measure, which has been referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of the House of Representatives, is aimed directly at the exhibition of the "Birth of a Nation." This feature is now to be seen at the National theater despite the protests of the city's colored population. The introduction of the bill follows quite closely the decision of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia that it is without power to deny the right of exhibition of this picture in Washington. The Dyer measure provides "That it shall be unlawful for any person to deposit or cause to be deposited in the United States for mailing or delivery, or to deposit or cause to be deposited with any express company or other common carrier for carriage, or to send or carry from one state or tetrritory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or to bring or cause to be brought into the United States from abroad, any film or other pictorial representation based or founded on any adaptation of any book, play, or publication under whatever name, which is designed to be used or may be used for purposes of public exhibition and which would reflect or tend to reflect on any race or nationality and subject it to unjust and unwarranted criticism of which may disturb the peaceful relations existing in a community.

"Section 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person to take or receive from the mails, or any express company or other common carrier, with intent to sell, distribute, circulate, or exhibit any matter or thing herein forbidden to be deposited for mailing, delivery or carriage in interstate commerce.

"Section 3. That any person violating any of the provisions of this act shall for each offense, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 or sentenced to imprisonment at hard labor for not more than one year, or both, at the discretion of the court."

It is hardly expected that any action will be taken on this measure at the present session of Congress, for the legislative calendars are piled high with other far more important matters than such as this. An effort is being made to have Congress adjourn before July 1. If such is the case, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, unless giving special attention to the Dyer bill, will not have an opportunity of reaching it at this session.

AMERICAN-MADE FIGHT FILM SEIZED.

Collector Ordered to Take Johnson-Willard Films "Shot" Across Border.

Washington, D. C.—Instructions were last week isued by the Treasury Department to the collector of customs at New York to seize the films "made in this country" of the Willard-Johnson fight, which took place in Havana, Cuba, last year. The collector had reported to the Customs Division in Washington that in connection with the photographing of the pictures, a table was erected in front of the boundary post, marking the line between the United States and the Dominion of Canada, and an apparatus containing the film to be photographed was placed on the table on the Canadian side of the line. The apparatus used to produce the photographs was placed on the American side about twelve or fifteen inches from the aparatus on the Canadian side, and the machines on the American side were started and the work continued until the seven reels were photographed.

He gave it as his opinion that the pictures of the prize fight were within the jurisdiction of the Port of New York, and asked whether or not they should be formally seized and the facts reported to the United States Attorney for appropriate action.

The Act of Congress of July 31, 1913, reads in part "That it shall be unlawful for any person * * * to bring or cause to be brought into the United States from abroad, any films or other pictorial representation of any prize fight or encounter of pugilists, under whatever name, which is designed to be used, or may be used for purposes of public exhibition."

The department held that the procedure adopted in the photographing of the films as above described constituted the bringing into the country of the debarred type of films and that these should be seized and the facts reported to the United States attorney as suggested.

Wickhams to Handle One-Reel Films.

Washington, D. C.—It is only a matter of a few days now before the Dixie Film Company will be running full blast at 626 F street, Northwest, where James and W. S. Wickham, who also operate the Dixie theater on H street, at Eighth street, Northeast, the proprietors of the new business, have secured three finely-equipped offices.

The Wickham Brothers propose to handle the films marketed by G. W. Brandenburg, of Philadelphia, Pa., in the Southern territory. At first they will confine their efforts to the District of Columbia, but will gradually extend their activities until they will have taken in Maryland, Virginia, North and South Carolina and other sections, if the business proves a success. Single reels will form the bulk of their output, although they will also have some multiple-reel subjects, but it is on the one-reelers that they are going to specialize.

"We have felt for some time past," said James Wickham in speaking of the new venture to the MOVING PICTURE WORLD correspondent, "that there is a fair field in Washington for an exchange furnishing single-reel subjects. We have been going out and pickng up four and five reels every week and we are told that there are perhaps twenty-five other exhibitors in Washington alone who have to do the same thing. We expect to do a good business once we are properly started. We will feel our way along a bit here in the District, and after that if the business warrants it, we are going to invade the nearby states. We will also carry a side line of accessories and supplies.

Federal Amusement Directors.

Washington, D. C.—The Federal Amusement Company, recently incorporated under the laws of the State of Delaware with a capital stock of $150,000 for the purpose of establishing the Spanish Gardens and motion picture theater on the site now occupied by the Lyric theater in Washington, D. C., has as its president William L. Soleau; Lanier P. McLachlan is vice-president; B. B. Wilson is secretary, and the board of directors includes: Isaac R. Hitt, Congressman Samuel J. Nicholls, R. C. Day, William Hinton Holloway, William L. Soleau, H. C. Grove, Thomas Hampton, B. B. Wilson and Arley B. McGee. Power, Stabler & Co. are the fiscal agents placing the stock of the theater on the market. This information is given to correct an impression given in a recent issue of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD that others than those named above were officers and members of the board of directors. It develops that there are two companies of the same name, the other one being already actively engaged in the motion picture business in this city and incorporated under the laws of the District of Columbia.

"The Home of Charlie."

Washington, D. C.—The Virginia theater, on Ninth street, has practically been renamed the Chaplin Photoplay House, at least it has come to be known as "The Home of Charlie," for John J. Noonan, proprietor of the theater, is a great admirer of the popular comedian and insists upon a daily showing of Chaplin films.

State Rights to Pavlowa Film.

Washington, D. C.—Marcus Notes, who operates the Empress theater on Ninth street, Northwest, and who has recently leased the Casino theater, on F street, near Seventh street, Northwest, has secured state rights privileges to "Pavlowa" for Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia. He will exhibit the feature at the Casino, following which it will go out on the road, bookings probably being obtained through a local booking agency.

They Painted and Cleaned.

Washington, D. C.—Quite a number of exhibitors took advantage of the noise last week of the "Paint Up—Clean Up" campaign to make numerous required improvements in the way of putting on a dab of paint here and there and using the scrubbing brush a little more freely.

NORTH CAROLINA NOTES.

By Clarence L. Linz Special Correspondent, 635 Tenth St., N.E., Washington, D. C.

New Sign Ordinance in Asheville.

ASHEVILLE, N. C.—The Board of Commissioners of Asheville, N. C., have adopted a new regulation which provides that no sign except those electrically illuminated shall extend beyond the building line more than twelve inches nor be less than nine feet above the sidewalk, or extend or project more than three feet beyond the line.

All electrically illuminated signs must be made of metal with incandescent light bulbs. Each sign must have two lamps of four candlepower for each square foot of each side of the sign surface and no sign will be permitted or allowed which has a total number of lamps less than ten and they shall be of four candlepower each. If less than the candlepower specified the number of lamps must be increased proportionately.

Both sides of the sign must be kept illuminated until ten o'clock for not less than six nights each week and must be kept in repair at all times. Signs must not be permitted to obstruct or to be attached to any fire escape. Permits must be secured from the city building commissioner before the signs are erected, and all connections and electrical wiring must be passed by the city electrical inspector.

Little Theater Dark.

Richmond, Va.—The first of the month brought with it the closing of the Little theater in Richmond, Va. This house has been under the management of Corbin Shield, he having been transferred to the New when the Strand theater was closed. Mr. Shield was unable to state what his next move would be, but it is not likely that he will remain unconnected with a theater for very long. He is well liked in this section and has been in the moving picture business for a considerable length of time.

Politic Show.

Norfolk, Va.—The Ghent theater was recently the scene of a stirring political meeting. The house, which is located at Colley avenue, near Olney road, in this city, was filled to overflowing when the members of the Independent and Democratic parties gave the voters of the section and the ladies a motion picture show, a band concert and campaign talks.

Paramount Transferred to Odeon.

Richmond, Va.—Jake Wells, of Richmond, has transferred his Paramount pictures program from the Little theater to the Odeon theater. This was necessitated by the insufficiency of the seating capacity of the former to handle the large audiences that turned out for the various productions.

Theater Changes in Covington.

Covington, Va.—There have been a number of changes in the motion picture business in Covington. The Family and the New theaters have both been converted into store properties. The Masonic theater has been renamed the Strand. It has been fixed up to quite an extent by D. E. Ellis, who also operates the Masonic theater in Hinton, W. Va. The Strand is being managed by H. W. Robertson.

Clarendon, Va.—Housel & Snyder are conducting a motion picture exhibition in Follansbee Hall.

Orange, Va.—W. B. Roberts, manager of the Palace theater here, contemplates replacing the seats now in that theater with new ones. Other improvements are also to be made.

New Pittsburgh House

Rowland & Clark Are Building a Picture Theater in the Bloomfield District at 4765 Liberty Avenue—Will Adjoin the Metropolitan—Over 750 Seats—Will Be Ready to Open Some Time in August.

Special to the Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—Rowland & Clark, prominent exhibitors with offices in the Westinghouse building, Pittsburgh, Pa., are about to add another link to their chain of handsome moving picture theaters in this city and its suburbs. The announcement was issued last week by James B. Clark that work would be started about May 1 on the erection of a new house at 4765 Liberty avenue, in the Bloomfield district. The building located on the site is now being razed to make way for the theater, which will adjoin the Metropolitan. Architect Harry S. Blair, of Pittsburgh, who designed the other theaters operated by Rowland & Clark, is preparing the plans. The structure will be of brick and steel fireproof construction, three stories in height, and will measure 45 by 115 feet. The seating capacity will be about 750 or 800. Building and equipment will entail an expenditure of about $60,000. The new theater will be modern in every particular and up to the high standards that have been set in the past by its builders. The equipment throughout and the policy of the house will be in harmony with that of the Regent, the Strand, the Belmar, the Oakland, the Arsenal, the Belevue. No name has as yet been selected for the latest addition to the Rowland & Clark chain. This detail will be settled before the completion of the theater, some time during the early Autumn.

Johnstown's Nemo Leased.

Johnstown, Pa.—The Nemo theater, Johnstown's beautiful photoplay house, has been leased by its owners, the Thomas & Hager estate, to George Panagotacos, proprietor of the Grand theater. Mr. Panagotacos is a pioneer in the moving picture business in this section, having established the Stadium theater eight years ago and later the Grand, which is being continued as formerly. The Nemo was until recently operated by M. J. Boyle. It has a seating capacity of one thousand and is among the most attractive and up-to-date in the country. It is excellently located in the down-town district and does a big business, showing feature pictures daily. The lease is for a long term of years.

Hatch Film Co. Goes to Newark.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The J. Frank Hatch Film Company, 109 Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., is to be discontinued in the near future, Mr. Hatch announced this week. The business, including the entire stock of films, will be removed to Newark, N. J., where offices were established some time ago. The Hatch exchange is one of the oldest independent concerns in Pittsburgh. J. F. Behan has been in charge.

Remodeling Avenue Theater.

McKeesport, Pa.—H. A. Victor has made arrangements for extensively remodelling the Avenue theater, at 524-526 Fifth avenue, McKeesport, Pa. The improvement will cost about $14,000. The plans call for an almost entirely new building, which will be fitted up attractively. Among other changes a gallery will be put in and the capacity increased to 761. Considerable new equipment will also be installed. Mr. Victor also operates the Savoy theater in McKeesport.

Seventy Exhibitors Take New Serial.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The International Film Service, 804 Penn avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., announces that their first subject, "The Mysteries of Myra," to be released in serial form, has already been booked by over seventy exhibitors in this section. Manager B. F. Lyons states that the International Film Service will remove into the new film building at 938-940 Penn avenue, when it is completed.

Geo. Kyros to Build Theater.

New Kensington, Pa.—The Colonial theater has been closed by George Kyros, who is contemplating the erection of a modern moving picture theater in the near future. As Mr. Kyros' lease on the building occupied by the Colonial expired May 1, he concluded to discontinue for the time being. He closed negotiations recently whereby he secures a 15-year lease on a large lot in New Kensington, and is having plans prepared for the new theater.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

Unicorn Film Opens Office.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Unicorn Film Exchange is the latest concern to open offices in Pittsburgh. Jack Kraemer, formerly manager of the Mutual at Springfield, Mass., has been placed in charge. Quarters have been established temporarily at 113 Fourth avenue and will be occupied until May 1, when the exchange will take possession of the quarters at 124 Fourth avenue, occupied by the Feature Film & Calcium Light Company, who will remove on that datet to 938-940 Penn avenue.

Palace Theater Sold.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Palace theater, 1505 Carson street, South Side, was purchased recently by G. W. and H. A. Hauser from William F. Drake. This house is a cosy one, seating about 300 persons, and is one of the oldest, and also one of the most popular, in that section of the city.

"Who Is Guilty?" Booking Well.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Manager Bradley, of the local Pathe, reports that his firm's new serial, "Who's Guilty?" to be released May 10, is attracting unusual attention and proving an excellent booker throughout this territory. Over sixty contracts have already been signed here. A print of the first episode of "Who's Guilty?" is expected soon at the local offices for private showing.

New Manager at Columbia Theater.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Owen D. Wetherill has been appointed manager of the Columbia theater, Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa. He succeeds Thomas Thompson.

G. A. Monte With Paragon.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Paragon Film Service has added to its road staff G. A. Monte, formerly connected with the film business in New York City. Mr. Monte is an experienced moving picture man and a graduate of the "legitimate" show business, having been at one time with Dillingham and other theatrical producers.

Cleveland Matters

Exhibitors' League to Debate Question of General Closing of Picture Theaters for Month of July—World Film Office Has New Manager—More Trouble With Stink Bomb Jokers—Other Notes of Live Local Interest.

By Hurbert Persons, Cleveland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CLEVELAND, O.—"To close or not to close" for a month this summer is the question which is vexing Cleveland exhibitors. Part of the membership of the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League is in favor of closing all picture theaters from July 3 to July 30.

In order to facilitate reaching a decision on the matter the League is to hold a debate at its clubrooms, a vote of the entire membership to be taken immediately after the arguments for and against the proposition are heard.

C. A. Megown, special representative, Benjamin J. Sawyer, president of the League, and Sam F. Deutsch will uphold the negative side of the question.

Sam Bullock, widely-known censor exterminator, is leader of the affirmative team. He will be assisted by Ernest Schwartz and a dark horse orator who is being kept in the background in order not to discourage the opposition.

P. A. Bloch to Manage World Film.

Cleveland, O.—P. A. Bloch, formerly manager of the Auditorium theater in Dayton, O., is the new manager of the World Film Corporation in Cleveland. He has just assumed charge, succeeding Sam E. Morris, manager for the past eight months. Morris resigned to accept a position with the new Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation.

Employees of the company here gave Morris a surprise party when his resignation was announced, presenting him with a handsome silver cup bearing this inscription:

"Presented to our manager, Samuel E. Morris, by associates and employees as a token of their appreciation and esteem. World Film Corporation, Cleveland, O., branch, April 15, 1916."

Irwin Hirsch of the company made the presentation address.

Benjamin J. Sawyer, president of the Northwestern Ohio Exhibitors' League, delivered an address on behalf of the Cleveland exhibitors, wishing Mr. Morris success in his new venture.

Mr. Bloch, the new manager, is widely known in Ohio. He has been in the motion picture business for seven years.

Unicorn in Belmouth Building.

Cleveland, O.—The Unicorn Film Company will shortly open offices in the Belmont building to buy and sell, but not produce, films. L. C. Gross is manager.

Stink Bomb Atrocities.

Cleveland, O.—Members of the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League are enlisting the aid of members of the city council in framing legislation to reach alleged jokers who have been making a practice of breaking up motion picture theater audiences by dropping so-called "stink bombs." It is sought to make the sale of such articles a felony.

C. E. Hutsenpillar, proprietor of the Virginia theater, 810 East 152nd street, is the latest victim of bomb outrages. He has offered a $200 reward for information leading to the arrest of the persons who broke up his show several nights ago.

To Sleuth for Censored Scenes.

Cleveland, O.—A committee of the Federated Churches, goaded on by Dr. George Hugh Birney, pastor of the Euclid Avenue Methodist Church, is contemplating the employment of a staff of private detectives to watch for films run by Cleveland exhibitors without the "cut-outs" ordered by the state board of censors.

The plan was given impetus recently when C. G. Williams, chairman of the censor board, came here from Columbus for a conference with the ministers.

Benjamin J Sawyer, president of the Exhibitors' League, says the exhibitors are perfectly willing for the ministers to waste their money on such a plan.

Women Will Choose the Saturday Shows

Cleveland, O.—Members of the Garfield School Mothers' Club have arranged with the proprietors of the Melba and Homestead theaters to select all programs to be shown at Saturday matinees at both theaters. A special effort will be made to secure programs adapted to the educational needs of children.

Mrs. F. L. Sessions, president of the Garfield Club, and Mrs. F. I. Wheeler, president of the Franklin Mothers' Club, are leading in the work. They are assisted by Mrs. W. F. Maurer, Mrs. W. B. Kingston, Mrs. Fred Bosworth, Mrs. W. G. Waitt, Miss Nora Edney and Miss Mable Monson, principal of the Garfield school.

Cleveland Notes.

Cleveland, O.—The Duchess theater, Euclid avenue, near East 55th street, is shortly to reopen showing Mutual masterpictures.

Cleveland, O.—Reggie Lyons, formerly photographer for the Vitagraph in New York, has joined the staff of the new Reserve Photoplay Company. He will work on the "Casey" pictures, featuring Johnny and Emma Ray.

Cleveland, O.—Members of the Cleveland and St. Louis baseball teams of the American League were recently guests of the management of the Alhambra theater to see a film of the opening game.

Cleveland, O.—C. W. Deibel, of Youngstown, who has leased the rights to the "Carmen" pictures featuring Chaplin, just shown at the Opera House here, has announced that he is contemplating building a large motion picture house in some northern Ohio town, probably Cleveland.

Cleveland, O.—Many Cleveland picture theater owners have agreed to show films illustrating the work of the American Red Cross Society, to aid its membership campaign which is now on.

Cincinnati's Big Theaters Showing Films

Every Big Theater in City, Save Two Vaudeville Houses, Are Motion Picture Shows—Features at the Grand and Lyric.

By Kenneth C, Crain, Special Correspondent, 610 First. Nat. Bank, Cincinnati, O.

CINCINNATI, O.—Beginning on Sunday, April 16, every big theater in Cincinnati, with the exception of the two vaudeville houses, was devoted to moving pictures; and, inasmuch as this includes the Grand Opera house and the Lyric, not to mention the Walnut, the Strand and other downtown houses which have long been carrying pictures exclusively, it indicates the extent to which the stage is being turned to films, as far as Cincinnati is concerned and especially in summer.

At the Grand, Essanay's Chaplin "Carmen" was continued, with immense success, with a new offering, Beatriz Michelena in "The Unwritten Law," as a companion piece.

Across the street the moving picture season at the Lyric was auspiciously started by the first Ohio showing of Pavlowa's great Universal feature, "The Dumb Girl of Portici," and the same artist and her company in "Diana," a classic subject. McMahon & Jackson, who have the State rights on the Pavlowa films, announce that on Sunday the pictures showed to 3,200 persons, who bought seats at prices ranging from 25 cents to one dollar, the highest yet charged in Cincinnati for a moving picture exhibition. The bulk of the seats at night, however, were sold at 50 cents, the dollar seats being in the boxes.

ILL VENTILATED THEATERS.
Cincinnati Building and Health Departments Watch for Bad Air.

Cincinnati, O.—The investigation which was conducted some time back by chemists and inspectors of the building commissioner's office in Cincinnati has resulted in the announcement by Commissioner Rendigs that he will assist the health department in taking action against houses in which the air is not kept pure. He declared that it has been shown that in many cases there is lack of proper care in this respect, and that unless there is improvement in instances which are called to the attention of exhibitors certain houses will be closed. However, as pointed out heretofore, most of the larger houses and many of the small ones are unexceptionable in this respect, as they are generally equipped with modern ventilating systems.

Swindler of Would-Be Actresses.

Cincinnati, O.—A swindling game which is so plausible and tempting that it found many victims in Cincinnati, and will be practiced often enough here and elsewhere, was detected a short time ago and the perpetrator, who gave the name of Charles Johnson, was arrested. According to the police, he represented himself as the agent of a big and well-known Eastern moving picture company.

Bagshaw Feature Film to Wait.

Cincinnati, O.—A peculiar complication has stopped for the present steps which were being taken toward the formal incorporation of the Bagshaw Feature Film Co., a new local producing company. According to those interested, it was discovered that unauthorized persons were soliciting subscriptions to the company's stock, and it was decided to hold up incorporation for a time, thus rendering such persons guilty of selling stock in a non-existent company.

New Theater on Liberty Street.

Cincinnati, O.—The Liberty Theater Co. has taken out a permit for the construction of a fireproof house at 832-34 Liberty street, to cost about $20,000. The house will have a seating capacity of about 500, and will be modern in every respect. Construction will be pushed through in order to have the theater ready for business by the time the summer is over.

Local V-L-S-E Grows Fast.

Cincinnati, O.—Manager C. E. Holah, in charge of the Cincinnati V-L-S-E office, now has under his immediate direction, in the local office and branches under it, probably the largest force of any exchange in the city—twenty-five people. The run on the several big releases handled recently, including "The Ne'er-Do-Well," Chaplin's "Carmen," "The Battle Cry of Peace," and several others, has crowded the office to such an extent that additional help was absolutely necessary.

Pontiac's Oakland to Be Built at Once.

Detroit, Mich.—Harry Goldstein, of the Oakland Theater Co., of Pontiac, Mich., was a visitor to the World office this week. He informed our correspondent that C. Howard Crane was the architect for the proposed theater, that bids were being asked and that contracts would be let before May 1. He expects that work will start immediately thereafter and that the building will be ready for occupancy about the first of September. The Oakland will cost over $100,000 and will be built by the three incorporators, Messrs. A. I. Marentette, James O'Donnell and Mr. Goldstein. The cash is now in the bank waiting to be spent. There will be no selling of stock to the public.

Michigan Notes and Changes.

Niles, Mich.—A new theater seating 800 people will be erected here by D. S. Scoffern.

Calumet, Mich.—The Star theater, here, is to be enlarged and redecorated.

Muskegon, Mich.—The common council of Muskegon contemplates increasing the license fee for motion picture theaters.

Saginaw, Mich.—The new Palace theater, in Saginaw, opens April 24, in charge of W. V. Newkirk.

Muskegon, Mich.—George E. Murphy will increase the capacity of the Lion theater here and will redecorate.

Ionia, Mich.—A new theater is contemplated by Paul Ferrel, of Grand Rapids, to be erected here, and to be managed by his son, Russell Ferrel. It will seat 1,000.

Re-Editing Pictures

Detroit Exhibitor, Harry I. Garson, of the Broadway-Strand, Carefully Examines Every Scene of His Big Offerings—Writes Better Leaders When Needed—Finds This Worth While—His House Seats 1,500 Persons.

By Jacob Smith, Special Correspondent, 503 Free Press Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, Mich.—"It isn't always the picture that makes people talk and like it," says Harry I. Garson, of the Broadway-Strand, Detroit. "It's the way you put it on and how you build it. Every picture we show is thoroughly gone over, scene by scene, by the leader of the orchestra, the operator and myself. Between us we decide on the music, and oftentimes put in new captions that are more suited to the picture and make it more interesting. The music is an important factor in connection with your picture, and there are no end of details that require close attention if you want to put your picture on right and get the most out of it." The Broadway-Strand is setting a record in its gallery—on Saturdays and Sundays it takes care of from 1,000 to 1,500 people up there at 10 cents. In most theaters the galleries are kept closed, but Mr. Garson finds that people will go up there and pay 10 cents if the show is good.

Watching for Crowded Aisles.

Detroit, Mich.—Some of the large downtown theaters have received notifications from the fire chief to the effect that they must observe the law and keep their aisles clear and keep down the number of standees in the rear of their theaters.

TRIANGLE'S NEW PLANS FOR STATE OF MICHIGAN.

R. & L. Will Open Branch in Detroit—L. W. Foster Will Be in Charge.

Detroit, Mich.—The Triangle Film Corporation of New York City has decided to abandon the idea of selling the Michigan franchise and will open its own office and exchange. At present the Triangle affairs are being conducted from the office at 183 East Jefferson avenue, in charge of L. W. Foster. The company has leased the second floor of the building at 318 Woodward avenue, between Columbia and Montcalm streets, Detroit, and will make this its permanent location. Mr. Foster will be in charge and will handle the bookings of the entire state of Michigan. The new location is just about three blocks north of Grand Circus Park.

It will be about May 1st before the new quarters will be in shape for occupancy. Mr. Foster has been with the Triangle company since last December, having been associated with both the Cleveland and Cincinnati offices. For seven years he had the summer season at the Grand Opera house in Cincinnati, hence has been an exhibitor as well as an exchange man.

The Majestic theater, Woodward and Willis avenues, has entered into a contract which will give them the first run choice of Triangle pictures in Detroit.

Detroit Actors' Fund Committee.

Detroit, Mich.—The following committee chairmen are handling the activities of the fund to be raised in Detroit for the Actors' Home: Active chairman, John H. Kunsky; publicity manager, Howard O. Pierce; A. J. Gilligham, chairman for the theaters; D. Leo Dennison, chairman for film exchanges; C. M. Orth and J. C Ritter, chairmen for the exhibitors.

May Festival in Adrian Theater.

Adrian, Mich.—The Moving Picture World office in Detroit had a visit this week from Elwyn M. Simons, proprietor and manager of the New Family theater, Adrian. Mr. Simons reported that he had absorbed the Star theater, at Adrian and had changed its name to the Garden, placing Ernest Kaiser in charge as manager. He will make extensive improvements. Mr. Simons is making elaborate plans for "May Festival" at the New Family from May 1 to 13. The theater will be appropriately decorated; there will be hundreds of cut flowers; a special advertising and publicity campaign is being planned; there will be a special augmented orchestra; on Sunday there will be a special free concert for invited guests; the program for the festival will be the best that Mr. Simons can secure. In fact he is going to spare no pains in making the "May Festival" an event long to be remembered by the people of Adrian.

"Nation" Film Back for Long Run.

Detroit, Mich.—"The Birth of a Nation," which ran for six weeks early in the year at the Detroit Opera House at prices ranging from 50 cents to $2, returns to that playhouse about the middle of May for an indefinite run—probably until the opening of the regular theatrical season in August. The summer prices will be 25 cents to $1 at night, and popular prices in the afternoons.

Importance of Perfect Ventilation

Head of Michigan Anti-Tuberculosis Movement Says Many Theaters Are Too Poorly Aired for the Good of Their Patrons.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

LANSING, MICH.—There are still numerous photoplay theaters in which the patrons are starved for air and which are unsafe for persons of weak constitution, according to Dr. William De Kleine, who is at the head of the anti-tuberculosis movement in Michigan. His statement was made in connection with praise of the automobile for getting people out into the open air.

"But to some extent the motion picture houses offset the benefit of the automobile," he said. "Like the automobile, the film is the product of the present-day generation, something our fathers and grandfathers knew nothing of. It is a new element in the present-day life and is creating new problems, and one of these problems has to do with public health. An amazingly large proportion of the population spends one, two or three evenings a week in a crowded motion picture theater, some of them not by any means well ventilated, evenings that otherwise would be spent on the front porch or around the home fire. This evening confinement, after a day's work in closed rooms, cannot but help but have its effect upon the less robust, even where the film houses are at their best.

"Of course the automobile offsets some of the harm done. But it must not be forgotten that on the whole the same people do not ride in automobiles who frequent the motion picture houses. The well-to-do ride in automobiles, the poor seek recreation in the film houses. Hence too much cannot be done to make film houses safe."

EXHIBITOR GETS DAMAGES.

Contract Agreement Broken by Man Who Sold Theater.

Paw Paw, Mich.—M. L. Decker, proprietor of the Idle Hour theater in Paw Paw, is entitled to $500 damages from George Pierce, because the latter started the Colonial theater in Paw Paw within five years after he had sold the Idle Hour to Decker. This has been decided by the Michigan Supreme Court.

The point at issue was whether Decker had re-sold the Idle Hour when his son Royal and R. J. Crosbie entered into an agreement with him for the purchase of the theater on a contract. Young Decker and Crosbie operated the house for several months, but nothing was paid on the contract and Decker, senior, took back the property. Pierce had an agreement not to re-enter the photoplay business in Paw Paw for five years unless Decker sold the Idle Hour. Pierce contended the transfer to young Decker and his partner released him from his contract.

When the Pierces sold the Idle Hour in December, 1913, the sale contract included a consideration that if Pierce reentered the business within a specified time he was to pay $500. Six months before two years was up he started the Colonial theater in the Longwell opera house, maintaining that he was at liberty to do so. Decker secured an injunction last April restraining him from giving shows. The circuit court decided Decker was entitled to $500 damages. The court also stipulated that, pending a review of the case by the supreme court, Pierce might operate his show by filing a $500 bond, which was done, but later the Colonial was voluntarily closed. The supreme court upholds the decision of the lower body.

Michigan Theater Changes.

Kalamazoo, Mich.—The Acadia theater at Portage street and Washington avenue, which was closed for two weeks, has been re-opened under new management.

Sandusky, Mich.—Fred Wagner sold the Star theater to James Christensen.

Ionia, Mich.—The Orpheum theater, which was left without a manager by the death of Fred Lauster, Sr., has been purchased by Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Marcussen, formerly of Big Rapids.

Battle Creek, Mich.—Shipment of the wrong lens for the projection machine delayed the opening of the new Park theater for one night.

Tennessee News Notes

Closing of the Theaters on Sunday in Chattanooga, Nashville and Knoxville—Memphis Held Out Till Mid-April—Epidemic of Scarlet Fever in Chattanooga Added to Exhibitors' Troubles.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Special Correspondent, 1404 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN.—Sunday pictures continue to be the big question in the moving picture field in Tennessee, at least in the legal field. Sunday pictures are simply not, as regards Chattanooga, Nashville, Knoxville and some of the smaller cities, although until past the middle of April conspicuously excepting Memphis. Here under the caption "Get What You Want When You Want It," the chain of Majestic theaters advertised in the papers of Saturday, April 15, the program for the week following, with "The Dragon" as the offering for Sunday at the New Majestic No. 1, a Sidney Drew and Paramount Cartoon comedy and others at the Majestic No. 2, and "My Pardner" at Old Majestic No. 1.

This is in the face of the fact that as long ago as March 27 Mayor Ashcroft announced that "moving picture houses must not operate on Sundays in Memphis." It was also stated that the mayor had instructed Commissioner McLain to see that all theaters, including moving picture houses, should be closed on the following Sunday and every Sunday thereafter. He was acting on the strength of the opinion of City Attorney Bryan that this course must be pursued under the finding of the Supreme Court. In Nashville and in Knoxville Sunday is a blank, while Clarksville theaters also carefully refrain from the Sunday shows.

Epidemic in Chattanooga.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—On top of their Sunday closing troubles the exhibitors of this city are having further discomfort on account of an epidemic of scarlet fever which has been raging in the city. Commissioner Huffaker declared that the wilful disregard of quarantine regulations by the parents of children is responsible for the spread of the epidemic. Children with light cases, excluded from school, he asserts, are taken to the moving picture shows by their parents. Much publicity has been given to the commissioners' warning and the newspapers headed their stories with lines like: "Keep Your Children from Moving Picture Shows." Warnings like these, though probably necessary and right, do not help to make up for the loss of one day in the week.

Operators Arrested, But Released.

Nashville, Tenn.—Detectives of this city on April 11 arrested six moving picture operators while they were engaged in handing out cards on uptown streets advising people not to patronize any of the shows operated by the Crescent Amusement Co. They were locked up on the charges of disorderly conduct. Two days later the six men were dismissed in the city court and told that they might continue distributing cards, but that they were not at liberty to annoy pedestrians. The six operators were said to have struck for higher wages and the Crescent Company filled their places with non-union men.

A New Theater in Rockwood.

Rockwood, Tenn.—This city is to have a new moving picture and vaudeville house combined. Walter Howard and Judge J. M. Colvin have the project in charge and will spend $5,000 in remodeling a large brick building on Rockwood avenue. This will have a 50-foot stage and be the biggest theater between Chattanooga and Somerset, Ky.

LOUISVILLE NEWS LETTER.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Special Correspondent, 1404 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

Theaters to Show Base Ball Scores.

LOUISVILLE, Ky.—Now that the moving picture theaters are competing in the afternoons with the baseball games when teams are here, several of the Louisville picture houses have undertaken to draw all the fans they can by means of score boards on which the progress of all important games will be recorded. Johnson Musselman, of the Star theater, was the first to make provision for this service. Immediately thereafter, however, the announcement was made by Lee Goldberg, of the Mary Anderson theater, that the scores will be kept there. In addition to that the returns from the local game will be flashed on the screen. On Sundays this service is expected to do a great deal toward holding up the afternoon attendance, in view of the fact that there is no other means by which the returns of the Sunday games can be ascertained until the Monday morning papers.

James L. Weed Gets Jeweled Token.

Louisville, Ky.—James L. Weed, resident manager since 1908 of the Mary Anderson theater and the National, now Keith's, under the various vaudeville administrations, will return to his former home in Indianapolis, where he will take charge of the B. F. Keith theater at that place. He is changing places with Ned S. Hastings, who comes to Louisville. Employees of the Keith theater presented Mr. Weed with a jeweled Knights Templar watch charm

Special Shows at Opera House.

Georgetown, Ky.—A. B. Barkley, manager of the Georgetown, Ky., opera house, in connection with the local representative of the Federation of Women's Clubs of the state, is making Friday of each week special moving picture day at his house on the "Youth's Companion plan." The special showings are being given hearty support by the papers and ministers and are promising to do well.

New Picture House in Middlesboro.

Middlesboro, Ky.—R. L. Brown and son, Otto Brown, will build and operate a new moving picture theater here. The Manring theater has been closed temporarily by the management and turned over to the St. Mary's Episcopal Church, which is making use of the building as a mission.

Strand's Popularity Contest.

Louisville, Ky.—The popularity contest which is under way at the Strand theater is gaining in interest all the time and the number of candidates increasing. Not only are individuals being entered by their friends but fraternal and other organizations are also making entries if favorite daughters. The theater is making the most of the contest in its advertising and from time to time at the theater the names and standings of the contestants are announced. The winner will be given an automobile.

A Knights Templar Benefit at Walnut.

Louisville, Ky.—For two days recently the Walnut theater handled a benefit run in the interest of the drum and trumpet corps of a local Knights Templar commandery. In addition to the pictures there was a musical program given by Miss Pansy Mottler. The Knights Templar worked loyally in the interest of the picture, which was managed on a percentage basis, and the house was well filled at every showing.

St. Louis to Have New $100,000 Theater

Picture House to Be Built on South Grand Avenue and Miami Street by Melba Amusement Company—Increase in Capital Stock.

By A. H. Giebler, Special Correspondent, 236 Vanol Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—Construction work is to begin this month on a theater to cost about $100,000, to be erected at the southeast corner of Grand and Miami street, by the Melba Amusement Company. The theater will seat about 2,500 persons and have the latest ventilating and lighting systems, and will be completed by the time the airdome season closes. The company declares it will be the best constructed and arranged theater on the South side. The Melba Airdome opened last summer, and did a very encouraging business in spite of the inclement and rainy weather that prevailed in St. Louis all during the airdome season. The capital stock of the Melba Amusement Company has been increased from $10,000 to $50,000, to permit the company to extend its operations to include the building of the new theater. The officials of the Melba company are William C. Neubauer, Mollie Neubauer and Gus Bauer.

UNICORN OFFICE OPENS.

New Concern's Local Exchange Will Be Managed by Sam Werner.

The Unicorn Film Service Corporation have opened a film exchange at 3628 Olive street, under the management of Sam Werner, former manager of the United Film Exchange. The Unicorn will handle only one and two-reel dramas, comedies and westerns, and will release twenty-one reels a week, and have two copies of each subject. One and three-sheet posters can be had with each subject, and the first release will be on April 24. The St. Louis branch is one of twenty-five exchanges which will be operated in all of the large cities. Mr. Werner was formerly connected with the first film exchange in the city, the Swanson-Crawford, and is well known in film circles, having been in the business for several years. Mr. Werner says there is a tendency to return to the program of short stuff. "When a patron sees a long feature that he doesn't like, he doesn't mind the ten cents he has spent near so much as he does the time he has wasted," says Mr. Werner, "whereas if he has seen several short subjects he will have seen one or more to his liking, and will not mind the others in thinking that part of the program was good, at any rate."

Chaplin "Carmen" at the Lyrics.

J. W. Cornelius, manager of the two Lyric theaters, the West End, at Delmar and Euclid, and the house at Sixth and Pine, obtained first-run privileges of Chaplin's "Carmen," and ran two engagements of the film at both theaters, raising the price of admission at the down-town theater from ten to fifteen cents, and crowding the house at all performances. The first engagement ended April 9 and the second on April 16. The West End Lyric is a first-run Paramount theater with ten and twenty-cent admission, and the downtown runs a feature and short subjects, with daily change, at ten cents a seat.

THE TAX MUST BE PAID.

Collector of Internal Revenue Will Make Trouble for Delinquents.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—Peter J. Kruyer, collector of internal revenue tax for the sixth district, comprising fifty-six counties in Indiana, has announced that he will begin formal prosecution in federal court against owners of motion picture houses and kindred amusements who have failed to pay the special war tax imposed recently. Mr. Kruyer is now engaged in checking up the delinquents in the territory over which he has supervision, and it is said that he has found a number who have not made inquiries concerning the tax. Others, numerous others, Mr. Kruyer said, have been informed that they are delinquent and have rushed into the office to pay the taxes when informed that prosecution would be begun in federal court.

The plan of notifying the theater owners and operators, Mr. Kruyer says, is a tedious one and one difficult to carry out. Mr. Kruyer says that the motion picture theater owners and operators should know the law and that none of them will be notified hereafter. They must come in and pay the tax.

Kokomo Musicians Ask Raise.

Kokomo, Ind.—Musicians working in the motion picture houses here have asked for a $3 a week raise, contending that the high cost of living has made it impossible for them to continue their work at the present scale.

Grand at Kokomo Has New Policy.

Kokomo, Ind.—The Grand of this city has changed hands. A deal was recently completed whereby the property passes into the hands of Mrs. Belle Sweeney and Robert Sherwood, of Indianapolis. The theater will hereafter be under the direction of Bob Sherwood and his wife, Mrs. Sherwood. The Sherwoods are entertainers of merit, having, for several years, been the headline motion picture house artists of Indianapolis.

American Theater Sold.

Terre Haute, Ind.—The American theater, of this city, has been sold, for a consideration of $42,000, to the Irving Theater Company of Chicago. Maurice Less, formerly manager of the theater, made the deal. J. S. Herad, representing the Chicago holding company, will be in charge of the American. No changes in the programs have been announced. Less will take charge of the Lyric Film & Supply Company and will devote all his time to the exchange business.

Unicorn Film Branch to Open.

Indianapolis, Ind.—The Unicorn Film Service Corporation of Delaware has qualified to do business in Indiana and, it is said, a branch office, will be soon opened in this city. It is set out in the articles of qualification, filed with the secretary of state, that the company has $16,000 of its capital stock represented in Indiana. R. W. McBride is named in the papers of qualification as the agent of the company.

Becomes the Washington Theater.

Richmond, Ind.—With the completion of improvements, the name of the Gennett theater, of this city, will be changed to the Washington. A new marble front will be put on the theater, together with new interior decorations.

New Court Theater Company.

Auburn, Ind.—The Court Theater Company has filed articles of incorporation and will operate, after remodeling, the Auburn opera house of this city. The summer months will see the installation of a new motion picture house in the theater.

Censors Shown Up

Decatur, Illinois, Exhibitors Are Asking Local Proponents of Federal Censorship a Few Embarrassing Questions—Pictures Condemned by Would-Be Censors Are Praised by Schools and Churches.

By Frank H. Madison, Special Correspondent, 6747 Emerald Ave., Chicago, Ill.

DECATUR, ILL.—Challenges to cite better pictures than are now being shown in certain Decatur theaters have been issued to the Federation of Mothers Clubs by local exhibitors. The Federation has gone on record as wanting a local censorship of films and posters, as endorsing federal censorship and urging Congressman McKinley to work for the federal bill. The resolution states: "Children who attend the average movie are having every ideal shattered by what they see there, and the continued exhibition of harmful, suggestive and inferior films is a most demoralizing influence in a child's development."

Among the exhibitors who believe that the women are unfamiliar with the situation are: A. Sigfried of the Bijou, and Emma J. Stirwing of the Crystal. Sigfried points out that some of Paramount pictures shown on his regular program have been sought by the Decatur high school. "I am ready to give a premium if they can show me where I can get better pictures than the Paramount and Metro for money. The high school also is using pictures that appeared in the regular program at the Crystal theater, and the Presbyterian church showed one that the Crystal had exhibited two years ago. The Crystal theater is willing to pay a forfeit to anyone that finds anything objectionable in our programs," was the offer.

Manager Sigfried of the Bijou says his attendance or children averages about twenty a day and he would not be averse to any move to limit the attendance to adults.

Recently the police officials sent out an order forbidding any bad pictures and the exhibitors think the exercise of police power is sufficient inasmuch as no specific cases of improper films has been cited.

Censors Fail to Agree.

Belleville, Ill.—A self-constituted board of censors here agreed—the verdict was unanimous—that the Bluebird feature "Undine" was not vulgar nor even suggestive. Complaint had been made to the mayor by the Federation of Catholic Societies, the Mothers' Club and individuals. The mayor and the chief of police and representatives from the two complaining organizations were given a special show by Manager Landau of the Washington theater and all agreed that not only was it not suggestive but that it was an artistic production.

Exhibitor Sodini Arrested.

Moline, Ill.—H. A. Sodini, former manager of the Family theater, was arrested at Minneapolis on a charge of securing goods by false pretense. The charge was filed by W. A. Bartz, manager of the American Express Company in Rock Island, who alleged that Sodini gave a worthless check for $308 for motion picture films sent C. O. D. Sodini refused to return to Illinois without extradition papers, and Governor Dunne of Illinois was asked to make a request upon the governor of Minnesota for the prisoner.

Moline Licenses Are $50.

Moline, Ill.—The city council has passed its ordinance raising the license fee for picture houses from $25 to $50 a year without regard to seating capacity. The photoplay men are protesting, but the council feels that the tax is not unfair.

Palm Theater Joins 10-Cent Rank.

Aurora, Ill.—Aurora now has but two five-cent moving picture houses—the Star and the "B" theaters. The Palm has entered the ten-cent ranks and will show Triangle, Metro and Pathe Gold Rooster features.

More Free Films.

Cisco, Ill.—Free motion picture shows on the streets were so successful last summer that the business men have decided to make out a more elaborate program for this summer and are raising a fund of $500.

Acme Feature Film Incorporator.

Springfield, Ill.—Secretary of State Stevenson has granted a charter to the Acme Feature Film Company of 172 West Washington street, Chicago. The company which will have capital stock of $10,000, will purchase, sell, hire and lease moving picture films. The incorporators are David Jacobson, William W. Orr and John B. Robinson.

Illinois Theater Changes.

Pontiac, Ill.—Fred Longnecker, formerly of Cayuga, Ind., has leased the Burke building on Madison street and will remodel it into a moving picture theater.

Lima, Ill.—D. E. Leamon is now operating the Orpheum theater, John Tesmer, proprietor, having gone to Alaska to accept a position with the Booth fisheries company.

Hillsboro, Ill.—C. J. and G. A. Sharrock of Pana, Ill., have purchased the new Colonial theater here. Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Sharrock will have charge of the new property. G. A. Sharrock will manage the Joy theater in Pana. However, the new owners will alternate in the management of both houses.

Elmira, Ill.—Alex Turnbull has opened a moving picture show in the opera house.

Woodriver, Ill.—Charles Wahl and A. W. Worcester of White Hall, Ill., have purchased two lots here and will erect a brick moving picture theater building.

Mahomet, Ill.—Forrest Tanner has opened a moving picture theater here. It will have its own electric power plant.

Moline, Ill.—Felderman & Zabel have opened the Family theater at Fourteenth street and Fifth avenue.

Sterling, Ill.—The Grand theater has started the construction of a 50-foot addition and a new front. It was planned to make all the improvements without missing a performance.

Murrayville, Ill.—Guy Durlin of Chambersburg has opened a moving picture show in Carlson's Hall.

Brief Illinois Notes.

Quincy, Ill.—Spring time patrons of the Star theater will see that the house has blossomed. A garden setting for the screen, a refinished lobby in birch mahogany, a new ventilating system and an indirect lighting scheme are visible signs of the regeneration.

Elkville, Ill.—Four days at the week-end were gala days at the Lyric theater. Local pictures of business houses, schools and mines drew their share of the crowds, a baby show contest with a diamond ring as prize was a further magnet and on Saturday afternoon there was a special matinee for school children with a bag of candy for each visitor.

Champaign, Ill.—S. L. Brownie, local camera man, made a home talent photoplay, "The Curse of Beauty," utilizing the pageant value of the Gala Week festivities.

To Test Power of Screen

Kansas Amusement Association to Try Out Political Value of Screen Publicity This Fall Election—Candidates Who Are Set Against Picture Shows Will Not Be Mentioned—Others Will Enthusiastically Be Advertised.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—According to figures recently compiled by E. R. Pearson, chairman of the executive committee of the Amusement Association of Kansas, that state has collected $21,488 in censorship inspection fees since April 12, 1915, to April 1, 1916. After deducting expenses for the year amounting to $4,643, the net profit to the state remains $16,845. This extraordinary condition is not a new thing to the opponents of the censorship law, but it only strengthens the case those persons have against Kansas censors. Of this net profit, $1,682 must be deducted, as that is the amount of money paid for inspection "under protest"—the new action begun by the exchange men from March 1. The net profit has been turned into the general revenue fund and Kansas has used it in any manner desired. The moving picture men claim this is an unjust taxation and are going to try and stop it.

Their latest move is the beginning of an organization to fight those members of the legislature who oppose moving pictures. The next state legislature will be elected in November, and it is the plan of this association to see each candidate and get him lined up for or against them. If the aspirant for office declares against the shows, his name will not be mentioned in any of the 500 houses in Kansas, while his opponent, who is willing to go halfway with the exhibitors, will be boosted in all possible ways. There will be nothing said of the candidate against pictures; but the case of absolutely ignoring a person will be tried out. The aim of the association is now to get the entire censorship act repealed and in order to do that, it is necessary to get an act through the state legislature authorizing the same. And this, the moving picture men claim, is exactly what they are going to do.

New Adjustment Committee Meets.

The adjustment committee of the Amusement Association of Kansas held its first meeting April 18 at the office of the Universal exchange in Kansas City. This was for the formation of the work of the newly-elected committee which took charge of affairs since the recent Kansas convention. R. C. Cropper, manager of the Universal exchange here, was elected chairman. The members of the committee are as follows: Fred Savage, Hutchinson, Kan.; M. H. Miller, Wichita, Kan.; J. J. Marshall, Manhattan, Kan.; H. A. Berman, manager of the Kansas City Metro office, and R. C. Cropper, manager of the local Universal Company. Nothing of importance was taken up, this merely being the first meeting preliminary to actual work.

UNICORN SERVICE BEGINS.

Under Management of J. W. Morgan New Exchange Opens in Gloyd Bldg.

Kansas City, Mo.—Under the management of J. W. Morgan, the Unicorn Film Service has established headquarters at 602 Gloyd Bldg., opening for business with a staff of twelve employees on April 24. The new exchange will release twenty-one pictures each week. Eight rooms are used for the company, the office, inspection department and shipping rooms, with a combined floor space of 2,000 square feet.

Mr. Morgan is the person who organized and owned the Universal Film & Supply Co., in St. Louis and Kansas City, and he has a wide acquaintance in this territory. Associated with him as travelers will be E. E. Crockett, of Minneapolis, and C. C. Chenoweth. The booker will be G. S. Shumard, who worked with Mr. Morgan when he had the old Universal exchanges.

Manager Cropper's Baby Wins.

Kansas City, Mo.—At the recent baby show contest held here during Baby Week, the fourteen months' old daughter of R. C. Cropper, manager of the local office of the Universal Film & Supply Co., was selected as one of the three perfect maidens in the class of one to two-year-old kiddies. Over one hundred participants were present.

Local Exchange Notes.

Kansas City, Mo.—Although it is not generally known, A. D. Flinton, president of the Kansas City Feature Film Co., is the brother-in-law of the new mayor of this city. The election of George H. Edwards to the position of chief executive of this city was greeted with pleasure by the local moving picture men.

Albert W. Howell of the Metro exchange at Pittsburg, Kan., has been in Kansas City for some time introducing new accounting and booking systems into the local office.

A. A. Chatkin, manager of the Kansas City office of the United Film Service, says that from now on his office will make 21 releases each week, instead of 12, their former capacity. Other changes will come later, Mr. Chatkin reported.

C. S. Edwards, Jr., the jovial manager of the local office of the Pathe exchange, recently came back from a trip over the Oklahoma territory with his two representatives in that vicinity, Howard Jameyson and George P. Meek. According to Mr. Edwards, that state is a second heaven for moving picture exhibitors and exchanges. He said among other things that in Tulsa, Okla., he encountered the best conditions he ever saw in any city in the moving picture industry. Prices there are going up and the people are paying.

H. E. Berman, manager of the local office of the Metro, has recently been to Excelsior Springs, taking a short rest. His place was filled by A. W. Howell, of the Pittsburg branch, who was here temporarily. Immediately after his return from the Springs, Mr. Berman went to St. Louis.

Lee D. Balsley, of the publicity department of the Kansas City Feature Film Co., announces that the name of the publication issued by that office will hereafter be known as "Paramount Pep," instead of "Picture Pep," under which name it gave birth. This was done on recommendation of the New York headquarters, and is just what Mr. Balsley was about to suggest to the latter when they beat him to it.

The Universal Film & Supply Co. announces that M. A. "Marty" Williams will handle the new serial, "Adventures of Peg of the Ring," in this territory. As manager of the Mutual and Metro exchanges and assistant district manager of the Universal, Mr. Williams made numerous acquaintances and is one of the best known travelers in this section.

Theater Changes Hereabouts.

Great Bend, Kan.—The old Fred Savage theater here has been taken over by W. S. Nelson & Son, who are doing some extensive remodeling and altering and will open about May 15. New machinery has been put in, among other things. Fred Savage, former proprietor, is now a very successful exhibitor at Hutchinson, Kan.

Jamesport, Mo.—The theater here has been taken over by I. Malone, a former exhibitor, who is remodeling and redecorating it with the view of opening on May 1.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Rex theater, 39th and Main, has been bought by Donald Frankenberger from B. B. Saunders.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Colonial theater, 39th and Woodland, has been sold by A. W. Walker to J. A. Curtin. Mr. Curtin retires from the local field, moving to Portland immediately. Owing to the excellent condition of the house no improvements were made.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Broadmour theater, 34th and Broadway, located in one of the choice residence districts of the city, has been purchased by C. H. McCann, booker in the local Metro exchange. Mr. McCann, who has been managing the house for D. Donnice for some time, has made many improvements, including some new machinery, and he now has an up-to-date theater in all respects.

Springfield, Mo.—Improvements amounting to $25,000 are contemplated for the Alhambra theater of this city. A new front will be erected and it willl be rearranged so as to have a seating capacity of nearly 1,800, which will make it one of the largest houses in the state.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

Goldbergs Hold Lease to World-Herald Site.

OMAHA, NEB.—Suit for an adjudication of the lease to the old World-Herald building site was brought against Sam and Harry Goldberg by the Princess theater and David Harding. Harding declared a partnership existed between him and the Goldbergs, but the lease to the site, which he values at $25,000, has been made out to the Goldbergs.

Among Nebraska Theaters.

Wymore, Neb.—The Lyric theater advertised the big four days sale of the merchants and the merchants advertised "The Birth of the Nation" at the Lyric. The two events were the same four days.

Greeley, Neb.—A. G. Smith, of Central City, has purchased the Electric theater from Mrs. Hattie Crockett.

IN IOWA.

Theater Changes and New Houses.

DE WITT, IA.—Oscar Sheldon opened a moving picture theater here with a free performance. De Witt now has two photoplay houses.

Manson, Ia.—The Gem theater, owned by H. H. Ling, was damaged by fire.

Atlantic, Ia.—Will Frost, proprietor of the Unique theater, has taken over the Garden theater from Chris Geannacopoulos and will operate both houses, at least for a while. The only change is that the programs have been switched.

Hazelton, Ia.—A moving picture show has been opened in Swartzell's hall by Halbin Holmstrom and Clifford Graham.

Riceville, Ia.—B. W. Shepard, of Manly, Ia., has leased the opera house for one year from Brown & Son.

Independence, Ia.—G. A. Curtis, of Harlan, has purchased the Isis theater from E. Bristol.

Sioux City, Ia.—The U. S. A. theater is the new name Hammitt Brothers have bestowed upon the Isis, which they recently purchased. They make the significant announcement that cheap vaudeville will be a thing of the past and that they aim to make it a high-class moving picture theater.

Oelwein, Ia.—Hanna & Reese sold Dreamland theater to Frank Fertig of New Hampton.

Osage, Ia.—H. E. Baumgartner, who recently sold the Lyric theater, probably will devote his time to the manufacture and sale of his device for cooling theaters, which he patented a few years ago.

Muscatine, Ia.—The Palace theater was selected as the official theater for the delegates to the Royal Arcanum convention and Manager Henle had added numbers on his film program.

Theater Changes in the Dakotas.

Portal, N. D.—The construction of a new opera house here this summer is contemplated.

Tuttle, N. D.—Walter Tuttle will erect an opera house here.

Jamestown, N. D.—S. K. Leen has purchased a moving picture theater here.

New Superior Theater Company.

SUPERIOR, WIS.—The Cook Amusement Company of Superior, which will erect a new $100,000 theater at Tower avenue and Eleventh street, has filed articles of incorporation. The capital stock will be $25,000 and the incorporators are Moses S. Cook, Barnett J. Cook and N. J. Phelps, of Duluth. The structure, which will be of steel, concrete and brick, will be entirely occupied by the theater, no provision being made for stores or offices. Construction will start about June 1. It is hoped to open about November 1. N. J. Phelps will be manager. The seats will be similar to those installed in the Milwaukee Hippodrome. A feature will be a children's playroom with 2,000 feet of floor space.

New House to Be Called American.

Milwaukee, Wis.—The new theater to be housed in the $300,000 building at Third and Wells streets will be known as the American theater and will be leased by J. B. Olinger and Fred A. Landeck. It will seat 1,400.

New Saxe Bros. Theater.

Milwaukee, Wis.—Buildings on the site of the new Miller Hotel are being razed and construction soon will start. This is the structure which will contain the new 2,000-seat theater which will be operated by Saxe Brothers.

Many New Downtown Houses.

Milwaukee, Wis.—Downtown theaters erected in the last year or which are near construction represent an outlay of more than a million dollars.

New Theaters and Changes.

South Kaukauna, Wis.—Frank Ellsworth has purchased the Vaudette theater from William Van Dyke.

Marshfield, Wis.—Contract for the remodeling of the Kliner, Lang & Scharman Building, into a moving picture theater seating 543, has been let and calls for the opening of the house by July 15.

Sparta, Wis.—Otto Bell has had plans drawn by Parkinson & Dockendorff, La Crosse architects, for a 50x110 brick and concrete moving picture theater seating 700 on the saucer-shaped main floor. It will have air-washing, ventilating, indirect lighting and vacuum cleaning systems.

Oconto, Wis.—J. A. Philipp, who formerly operated the Lyric theater at Munising, Mich., has taken charge of the Grand theater here.

Milwaukee, Wis.—I. J. Rosenthal will erect a one-story brick, concrete and steel, 47 x 100, moving picture theater, to cost $20,000, at Seventh and Walnut streets.

New Minneapolis Exchange.

Minneapolis, Minn.—This city's long list of exchanges probably will be added to within a week or ten days, according to word from the East which indicates the Hearst-Vitagraph concern will name a representative to serve this market. Harold P. Brown, who is cameraman with the Hearst company, was in the city to take flood pictures at St. Paul as well as films of the log jam on the government High Dam between St. Paul and Minneapolis.

Twin City Screen Club

Minnesota Organization Will Include Both Minneapolis and St. Paul in Its Membership—Name Changed to Suit—Hospitable to Picture Men Passing Through the City—New Quarters in Radisson Hotel.

By Perry S. Williams, Minneapolis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—The organization of film men here has enlarged its original plan in order to include the men of St. Paul where only a few exchanges are located. The name therefore has been officially made the Twin City Screen Club. The club made an important announcement this week when it made public its agreement with the Radisson hotel of Minneapolis for quarters on the twelfth floor of the hostelry adjoining the roof garden. The club and the hotel agreement is dated April 26. The Screen Club men are expecting to keep open house continuously during the big show of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of the Northwest in the Armory here May 2, 3, 4 and 5. A special initiation fee for out-of-town members has been established at $10, which extends to such a member all the privileges of the club while in Minneapolis. The screen men intend to make their quarters a home to all visiting picture men passing through Minneapolis, and any man connected with the screen business anywhere who does go through the city without stopping off for a howdy will be considered pretty poor stuff. The club has announced it will give a prize to the man obtaining the largest number of members. Just what the prize will be has not leaked out, but the boys are working hard and taking a chance on the "bacon."

FRANKLIN THEATER READY.

Fine New House Seating 1,000 Will Open on May 22.

Minneapolis, Minn.—May 22 will see the opening of the largest one-floor house west of Chicago, the New Franklin theater, 1021 Franklin avenue. The theater will seat 1,000. It is being erected by C. E. Marrs, real estate dealer, at a cost of $40,000. F. H. Coyle, a new figure in the moving picture business, will manage the house.

Fourteen huge drop lights will be used in the theater proper and the lobby will blaze with ornamental side lights and 161 ceiling lamps. The entire interior will be decorated in a soft rose tint as a predominating color note. There will be four aisles. The building is so constructed that if desired a balcony may be put in later. The offices will be on the second floor. The lobby may be entered through five sets of revolving doors.

Particular attention is being paid to the projection room, which will be one of the finest equipped and largest in the country. Two 6A machines have been purchased. The screen is 100 feet from the machine.

Mr. Coyle has obtained advertising for the house in the shape of a neat folder bearing a picture of the theater on the front.

T. P. Grogan Owns Lake City Grand.

Lake City, Minn.—Al Grant has sold his share in the Grand theater here to his partner, T. P. Grogan. Grant is not certain where he will settle, but one thing sure, he says, is that he will not quit the movie business.

Exchanges Asking Advance Payment.

Minneapolis, Minn.—April 17 marked the beginning of the policy of all exchanges in this district of demanding payment for films one week in advance, under a system similar to that adopted in other parts of the country. Despite rather strong opposition to the scheme among the exhibitors they were finally brought around to the exchanges' view of the situation and the matter was amicably settled. The exchanges won their point after their committee had argued their case before the exhibitors who had requested them to appear. Manager Van Meter of the General Film and Manager Meyers of Universal stated the situation for the exchanges. Other managers present were Stafford of Mutual, Sampson of Pathe and Nelson and Moore of the Nelson & Moore Film Exchange.

Theater Loses License.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Because Miss Constance Madison of the Humane Society said J. Barnet's theater, the Crystal, had become a rendezvous for minors and disorderly characters, the city council has tied up the application for a renewal of the license. The Crystal has been operating all night and it also was claimed it worked to the detriment of the curfew law.

New Friedman Film Corporation.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Benjamin Friedman, manager, and I. Friedman, secretary and treasurer of the Western Kriterion Film Company, will head the proposed Friedman Film Corporation which will be formed here, according to reliable reports. The Kriterion concern has taken over the front half of the third floor in the new Film Exchange building, which it will occupy May 1. The company will handle ten to fifteen more reels a week after its removal. The new quarters will be equipped with an entire new lot of apparatus.

H. R. Harrison With Favorite Film.

H. R. Harrison, formerly proprietor of the Harrison Feature Film Company, has joined the salesmen of the Favorite Film Corporation. Harrison has been in the celluloid show business six years.

Business Notes Hereabouts.

Walker, Minn.—F. J. Kinkele has disposed of his furniture business here and opened the Kinkele theater. He purchased his equipment from the Rialto Theater Supply Company of Minneapolis.

Perham, Minn.—The Lux is the name of the remodeled theater here operated by Walz & Eggers.

St. Paul, Minn.—The M. E. T. Film Company, Tunstall and Ermatinger, managers, has obtained the state rights in Michigan, Montana, Washington, Oregon, Indiana and California for "Twilight Sleep." The company will establish a branch at Detroit, Mich., to aid in the distribution of the film. The Southwest will be taken care of by Miss Manzie Robison from Los Angeles. Miss Robison made a success in booking the "Quo Vadis" film in the southern territory for the Kliene offices and it was on account of that record she was chosen for the "Twilight Sleep" agency.

Minneapolis, Minn.—The American theater here has been taken over on a five-year lease by W. S. Deeth, formerly of Brookings, S. D.

St. Paul, Minn.—Wallace D. Coburn, who recently started the film producing company here for the purpose of depicting life as it really is on the Western ranches, has arrived at his 22,000-acre ranch near Malta, Mont., where he was given a great ovation. "Yellowstone Pete's Only Daughter," a scenario written by Coburn, will be the first play filmed by the company.

Winona, Minn.—The B-B Film Producing Company announces it almost has completed its camera work on its four-reel comedy, "Going Some," and expects to put it on the market shortly.

New Orleans Letter

Birmingham, Alabama, Majorities Favor Open Shows on Sundays—Notes on New Picture Theaters in the Local Field—Large New Supply Office—Other Items Heard Along Film Row in New Orleans.

By George M. Cheney, New Orleans Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—"Resolved, That the Moving Picture Houses of Birmingham Should Be Closed on Sunday" was the title of a debate at the Birmingham Y. M. C. A. that attracted wide attention. The affirmatives had their inning, and there was perfunctory handclapping. Then the negatives arose, and, to the tune of deafening applause, won out. Sunday pictures are safe in Birmingham for a while anyway, if Y. M. C. A. opinion counts for anything.

SUPPLY MAN'S NEW OFFICE.

George Vivirito Opens Large Store on Baronne Street.

New Orleans, La.—George Vivirito, of 318 Baronne street, has been "at home" to his film friends all of this week. Mr. Vivirito was all puffed up when he opened his new headquarters in Baronne street, so he sent out invitations to all the exchange managers to assist in the christening ceremonies. Mr. Vivirito in his new shop has what is practically the largest supply house in the Crescent City. He has an entire battery of Edison and Simplex machines trained on any one entering the door, and this formidable array very strongly reminds one of the German siege guns at Verdun, according to newspaper accounts. In Mr. Vivirito there is material for a much longer story of business acumen, for, from a humble beginning in a little shop further down the street, he has aggressively branched out and now is one of the factors in the supply business in this territory.

J. C. Ragland Heads Local General.

New Orleans, La.—J. C. Ragland has assumed charge of Kleine-Edison affairs in New Orleans, succeeding Howard Gale, former metropolitan newspaper man, who was Kleine-Edison's first and only manager since the company entered this territory some six months ago. Mr. Gale has taken charge of a billiard parlor in Canal street, in which establishment he is "putting them over" in his usual rapid style.

Josiah Pearce Improving.

It is a pleasure to note that the condition of the venerable Josiah Pearce, head of J. Pearce & Sons, New Orleans motion picture magnates, is steadily improving. Mr. Pearce was stricken with an acute malady when returning from a trip to Panama. All that modern skill and loving attention can do for him is being done.

Triangle Has 30 Houses in Crescent City

New Orleans, La.—Manager Nat Ehrlich of the Triangle exchange announced this week that thirty houses in New Orleans had signed up for Triangle service. This is taken as quite a record for the short time that the Triangle Film Corporation had been in this territory. The Triangle Film Corporation is giving every aid to the exhibitor by advertising the films with every known advertising device.

New Theaters and Changes.

Lake Charles, La.—Ernest Boehringer, owner of the Triangle theater, is identified with a project to build a large modern picture house at Lake Charles. Plans for the new stucture are practically completed. Mr. Boehringer has a string of theaters throughout Louisiana. He has two in New Orleans, the Triangle and the Columbia, and only several weeks ago announced he would build a $200,000 house in St. Charles street.

New Orleans, La.—The house which John Sheppard is building at Cortez and Cleveland streets has been christened the Star theater, and it will open on April 23.

Gulfport, Miss.—Fred Abbley will open a new airdome in that city on May 1. He has contracted in New Orleans for Fox service.

New Orleans, La.—G. R. Larrieu reopened the Old Dumaine theater No. 2, in North Jefferson Davis Parkway, on Easter Sunday.

Gretna, La.—Moving pictures will form part of the program at Electric Park, a new amusement garden here, a place across the Mississippi from New Orleans, which opened on Easter Sunday.

Lake Charles, La.—Dr. de Praslin, a Triangle exhibitor at Lake Charles, La., was in New Orleans this week and announced he had completed arrangements for the erection of a large motion picture theater in Lake Charles, La.

Lagrange, Ga.—The new Grand is being built on the west side of the square by Market Brothers, who declare that within a short time they are going to show Lagrange one of the most modern picture theaters in that section.

Galveston, Tex.—G. W. Bell, Jr., recently with the Palace theater of this city, has sold out his interest and now is connected with M. Ulrich and the recently remodeled Rex theater. A new theater will be built in Galveston this summer by Bell & Ulrich, it is announced.

Heard on Film Row.

Visitors to Exchange Row this week included J. C. Landen, manager of the Istrione theater at Jackson, Miss., who reported that business in his neck of the woods has been decidedly better for the past two months.

Lafayette, La.—Phil Reilly, well known in Dallas and New Orleans film circles, now is editor of the Lafayette Press, upon the front page of which newspaper he "pushes motion pictures."

Galveston, Tex.—The American Seating Company has been awarded a contract for $6,523.40 for seats to be installed in Galveston's new auditorium.

Monroe, La.—In conjunction with its regular night's program, the Monroe Opera house recently put on a fashion show, participated in by the merchants of the city, and with real, live models.

The Carrollton theater, at Canal and Carrollton avenues, owned by Al. G. Shear, Universal manager in New Orleans, has been converted into an all-feature house with a Paramount program.

Arlington, Tex.—The Palace theater, enlarged and refitted, has opened with the Triangle program.

Columbus, Ga.—Erection of a $40,000 motion picture house for this city seems certain. Sol Loen probably will be the builder. Columbus is entering on a period of unprecedented building development, over half a million dollars worth of buildings being planned.

La Grange, Texas.—A new picture show will be opened in Main street, next to the Edmundson-Christopher Company, about May 1. Abe Ginsburg, of Atlanta, Ga., will be the owner. The seating capacity will be 600, with comfortable seats 36 inches apart. An orchestra will be imported from Atlanta. Triangle and Paramount programs will be used, it is stated.

Bay Minette, Ala.—E. V. O'Connor is the manager of a picture show which opened here a few weeks ago.

Atlanta Screen Club Elects

William Oldknow, of the Consolidated Film and Supply, Chosen President of the Local Film Organization—Other Officers of the Club.

By A. M. Beatty, Special Correspondent, 43 Copenhill Ave., Atlanta, Ga.

ATLANTA, GA.—William Oldknow, of Consolidated Film & Supply Company, and of the Atlanta offices of the Universal, was elected president of the Atlanta Screen Club, at the organization meeting held Monday night in the Hotel Ansley.

Other officers selected were: Robert Savini, head of the Atlanta offices United Film Service, vice-president; Britt Craig, of the Constitution, secretary, and Joe Marentette, of the General Film Company, treasurer. Many of the city's leading film executives attended the meeting

Another meeting was to be held Thursday night, April 20, after which the club's quarters were to be announced. Only those interested in the moving picture trade, and newspaper executives and writers on film topics, are eligible for membership.

Among the membership of the Atlanta club will be found executives, road representatives, picture producers, exhibitors, newspaper writers, performing artists, theater owners and executives and representatives of virtually every branch of the film industry. The club will be organized under a charter, and the quarters will be outfitted in elaborate fashion.

Producing Plant at Gainesville, Ga.

Gainesville, Ga.—This city is to have a moving picture studio on the banks of the Chattahoochee river, nestling in the most picturesque country to be found among the foothills of the Blue Ridge mountains.

Dr. Horace Grant, of Atlanta, has been in Gainesville negotiating to build this studio. The Gainesville chamber of commerce and business men are taking an active interest.

The company will require twenty-five acres of land and will invest $75,000 or $100,000 in buildings. Irving Cummings, well-known motion picture star, will be engaged as director.

Dr. Grant has all the capital required and no money will be asked of the Gainesville people. He wants to secure a lease on the land of the Georgia Railway and Power company, and is negotiating with Preston Arkwright, of that company.

Mr. Cummings is enthusiastic and says Gainesville is an ideal location, and the climate is excellent for the production of moving picture films.

Operators' Annual Banquet.

Forty members of the Atlanta Motion Picture Operators' club attended the annual banquet held in the Piedmont hotel Tuesday night shortly before 12 o'clock when the picture theaters of the city had closed. Addresses were delivered by many operators, and a program of entertainment enjoyed. Numbers of their employers, including exchange managers, exhibitors and theater owners, were also present.

B. S. Daniels Heads Atlanta Pathe.

Atlanta, Ga.—Assistant Manager B. S. Daniels, of the New York Pathe offices, has been transferred to Atlanta as manager of the Pathe company's local exchange. Mr. Daniels is well known here, having been a resident of Atlanta for several years prior to his entrance into the film business. He has many friends in the city.

Fine Flag Day Film Made.

Athens, Ga.—The "Honoring the American Flag" celebration at Athens this week is graphically shown in 1,000 feet of moving pictures specially photographed by the Scenic Film company, to be distributed over the country in the various news weeklies.

This picture shows the mile of "Flag Day" parade, composed of military students, college girls and women, school girls, automobile floats, child flag bearers, soldiers, artillery and Confederate veterans, as well as thousands of civilians.

Scenes were taken on the state university campus showing the student body and faculty, and the historic buildings that make the Georgia campus one of the most picturesque in the south. Thousands of handsomely dressed girls and young women participate in the scenes taken on the campus of the Georgia Normal, Lucy Cobb, and grammar schools.

Redecorating the Bonita.

Atlanta, Ga.—Th Bonita theater, Atlanta, has closed for improvements, and is in the hands of the contractors.

About $7,000 will be spent in improvements and the house will not reopen until May 20.

Saw the "Dumb Girl" Picture.

Atlanta, Ga.—A small audience of newspaper and film men saw a special showing of "The Dumb Girl of Portici" at the invitation of Ralph de Bruler at the Piedmont theater Sunday night.

NEW THEATER FOR DENVER.

Old U. S. Theater to Be Made Into New Rialto With 1,200 Seats.

By E. C. Day, Denver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DENVER, COLO.—This city is to have another big downtown moving picture theater. This was assured when the Federal Amusement Company, owner of the Strand, let a contract this week for the complete rebuilding of the old U. S. theater at Sixteenth and Curtis streets. The improvements will cost $25,000.

It will be known as the Rialto and will have a capacity of 1,250 seats, bringing the total seating capacity of Denver's downtown photoplay houses, all located within a radius of two blocks, up to 13,000.

Work already has been started and the new theater will be opened for business July 1, according to present plans. The entire interior of the building is being torn out and will be completely rebuilt. The front will be of Grecian architecture.

An extensive and up-to-date ventilating system will be installed and brand new equipment of every description will be put in.

One of the features of the new theater will be an elevator to covey patrons to the balcony and gallery. This is an accommodation not afforded by any other theater in Denver.

An augmented orchestra is one of the features decided upon for the house. The owners also have announced that a general admission of 10 cents will be charged.

F. Y. Langtry With Metro.

Denver, Colo.—Frederick Y. Langtree who, until a few months ago was with the General Film in New York as manager and assistant manager of several branch exchanges, has now started work as roadman for the Metro Company out of Denver. Mr. Langtree has just come to the city from Salt Lake where, with J. J. Unger and A. S. Bailey, he has recently opened a new Metro office.

W. H. Musselman Goes to Universal.

Denver, Colo.—William H. Musselman was added to the road staff of the Universal exchange this week. He will have charge of the new serial, "Peg of the Ring," which the company will release May 1. Musselman was formerly proprietor of a theater at Raton, N. M., and is well known and popular throughout the Denver territory.

Exchange Office Notes.

Denver, Colo.—Several changes in the office forces of the Denver film exchanges were announced this week.

Irving Ehrensaft, shipping clerk for the Mutual for several years, went to the Universal office in the same capacity. Earnest Fred succeeded him at the Mutual. Jess A. Riblett was transferred from the accounting department of the Mutual to the booking and poster department.

C. D. Kreiling, who has been in charge of the poster department at the Pathe exchange for some time, retired from that position this week to devote his time to the operation of the Light theater at 22nd and Washington avenue, of which he is the proprietor.

Rex Theater Burns.

Denver, Colo.—The Rex theater, located at First and Broadway, and one of the larger of the residence moving picture theaters, was completely gutted by fire this week. The blaze originated in the furnace room at the rear of the theater and had a good start before being discovered. No one was in the theater at the time but guests in the hotel over the theater were routed by smoke. Work has already been begun on the rebuilding of the theater.

Paris Theater Bids Highest.

Denver, Colo.—The Paris theater has been awarded the exclusive first run privilege to the new Mutual-Chaplin productions. Spirited bidding, in which every theater owner on Curtis street took part, marked the contest to land this feature in Denver. The Paris management plans a two weeks' run on the first release, May 15.

W. S. Agnew has purchased the Eleventh Avenue theater from K. D. Brabston. The latter has returned to Mississippi. He bought the theater only three weeks ago.

Blanche Sturtevant, daughter of Sam Sturtevant, owner of the Majestic theaters at Grand Junction and Fruita, Colo., and former owner of the Royal theater in Denver, died this week. The young woman was buried in Denver. Sturtevant is well known in the moving picture industry and he has the sympathy of the entire fraternity.

To Go After Sunday Law

Texas Exhibitors, Exchange Men and Others Interested or Sympathetic Will Make Concerted Effort to Have State Blue Law Repealed or Revised—Organized Labor Will Aid—Hope For Plank in Democratic Platform.

By S. A. M. Harrison, Special Correspondent, 618 Comal St., Dallas, Texas.

DALLAS, TEXAS.—A concerted, organized effort will be made to have the Texas law in regard to Sunday exhibitions and other business either repealed or radically amended. A campaign committee has been organized in Dallas and will make a systematic effort to get a plank in the Democratic platform calling for the revision of the law.

R. H. Campbell, a very influential member of organized labor, is secretary of the committee. It is divided into three sections and direct effort will be made in three channels to get the matter properly considered. One channel will go after organized labor, one after the exhibitors and one after the general public.

Practically all of the exchanges in Dallas have pledged their support and the exhibitors are unanimous in its favor. E. H. Hulsey of the Hulsey theaters, P. G. Camero of the Crystal, Leon Gholman of the Rex and others are particularly active. Organized labor will also take an active interest in the matter.

The present law was passed in 1887 and is very broad in its scope—so broad, in fact, that many businesses now enjoying a great deal of freedom, could be harassed to death under it. It will be remembered that only recently Corpus Christi authorities decided to enforce the law to the letter with the result that things in that town went completely dead on Sunday. Soda fountains, cigar stands, gasoline stations and grocery stores were closed.

Texas, being so radically Democratic in politics, to get anything into that party's platform means to get it before the legislature, and so that is where the attack will center. The Democratic primaries will be held July 22 and petitions will be circulated at once to have the question placed on the ballot.

Fotoplayer Company Has Agency.

Dallas, Tex.—The American Music Company has opened for business in Dallas at 1818 Main street. Their specialty will be the Fotoplayer. A. G. Williams is manager of the new company and one of the salesmen is Charles Touchon, former manager of the Newport theater, Dallas.

Auditor Visits Dallas.

Dallas, Tex.—I. W. Goodfield, inspector-auditor for the Pathe company, was in Dallas the middle of April and looked over the local office. He expressed himself as greatly pleased with the outlook and also with the way Manager W. G. Underwood was handling the office.

Consolidated's Ball Team.

Dallas, Tex.—The Consolidated Film and Supply Company is represented in amateur baseball circles in Dallas by a very efficient team. They did not have much of a team last year, but "Smiling Jimmy" Kelly says he has a bunch of "clawing cats" this year and has dubbed them the Consolidated Cats accordingly.

The Cats lined up recently and tried to spoil a camera for Mr. Rogers, a local photographer. But they did not. However, they insist they are going to spile some of the other local teams, especially the Motion Picture Cubs, the Peter-Reed-Remy team. A good photograph was sent to this paper, but there was no space for it, we regret to say.

Dallas Territory Notes.

Athens, Tex.—Dorbandt Brothers will remodel their Dixie theater here, adding another story so as to accommodate a balcony.

Corsicana, Tex.—The St. Charles airdome will open here about May 1 under the management of Charles St. Clair, who is also manager of the Majestic theater here.

Celeste, Tex.—The Jefferson theater at this place has been sold to J. L. Lawrimore, who will rename it the Lawrimore.

Celeste, Tex.—The negroes of this place wanted a picture house, but were unable to secure a suitable building in town, so Seymour Pennington leased an old oil mill on the outskirts and opened up. It is a great building, being repaired with oil cans, old tin and anything else available, but seems to be doing business.

Leonard, Tex.—W. T. McQuade of the Happy Hour theater here, with the assistance of his brother, has been putting on a stunt in electrical tricks. The McQuades will endeavor to get the act on one of the larger circuits as soon as they have it worked up to a satisfactory point.

Marshall, Tex. — The Powell-Moore Amusement Company has sold the Elk theater to F. A. McConicho. The Powell-Moore Company will continue to run the Grand theater.

San Francisco Notes

Local Exchange Men and Exhibitors Make New Payment Agreement—Benjamin Michaels Killed in Accident When Steering Gear of His Automobile Breaks —Other Items of Interest Throughout the District.

By T. A. Church, Special Correspondent, 1507 North St., Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—The question of the payment in advance for film service, which has been rather warmly discussed here during the past few weeks, bids fair to be settled by an understanding reached by exhibitors and film exchange interests. The new arrangement agreed upon will supercede the strict rule for the prepayment of film service and will enable exchanges to extend limited credit to customers they may desire to favor. According to this new rule all bills for film service must be settled on or before Friday of the current week, giving exhibitors four days' credit and collecting in advance for three days' service, where daily changes of program are made. When exhibitors fail to observe this rule they are to be placed on a cash in advance standing and will so remain. Managers of local exchanges state that they will insist upon prompt payment for service and that the loose methods of doing business that have characterized the past with attendant heavy losses, will be eliminated.

BENJAMIN MICHAELS KILLED.

Steering Gear of His Automobile Broke —Owned the Verdi Theater.

San Francisco, Cal.—Benjamin Michaels, proprietor of the Verdi theater, 644 Broadway, and one of the best-known exhibitors of San Francisco, passed away on April 12 following an automobile accident earlier in the day. While driving his automobile near the beach the steering gear broke and caused the machine to swerve into a sand bank. His companion escaped with a broken arm, but Mr. Michaels received internal injuries from which he died a few hours later. The deceased for several years was a prominent figure in local moving picture circles and at the time of his death was a commanding figure in the North Beach district, a section where competition has been exceedingly keen.

A native of Russia, most of his life was spent in this country, and for many years he made this city his home. His experience as a circus and side-show man assisted to fit him for the moving picture business, a field in which he displayed remarkable energy. His first work in this line was in connection with the Silver Palace theater on Market street, which he opened with I. H. Lichtenstein, now manager of the Globe film exchange, and others. When this house was opened it was regarded as being a model and contained innovations that were ahead of the times. Later he opened the Royal Palace theater on Broadway, and after this was destroyed by fire, erected the Verdi at a cost of about $80,000, this being the finest house in the North Beach district. This house will probably be conducted in the future by his wife, Mrs. Nellie Michaels, who operates the Shanghai theater nearby.

"Ramona" Goes to Savoy Theater.

San Francisco, Cal.—Having concluded a three weeks' engagement at the Cort on Ellis street, the Clune production, "Ramona," has been transferred to the Savoy theater. The results at the Cort were very satisfactory and induced the owners of the film to continue the exhibition for an indefinite period at another house.

International Booked Big Business.

San Francisco, Cal.—The International Film Service, Inc., recently opened at 280 Golden Gate avenue under the management of H. L. Knappen, is doing a very large volume of business in advance bookings on the "Mysteries of Myra." The local office has made an especially fine showing, its business being larger relatively than that of several other cities much larger in size, The Rialto theater, which opens shortly, will run this serial and will be the first exclusive moving picture house in the city to show a serial for an entire week. The New Mission theater, also to open shortly, has booked the production for the Mission district.

H. W. Korper is on the road for the concern in the San Joaquin valley and is meeting with splendid success, having placed the serial in every large town he has visited. L. M. Hyslop, formerly with the Pathe exchange, has joined the staff of the new exchange, and H. I. Krause will shortly be in the field in northern California, Nevada and Utah. It is planned to establish a sub-office at Salt Lake City to care for the mountain territory.

Manager Knappen expresses much pleasure with being able to return to San Francisco, where he received his first experience in film exchange work, and declares that conditions here are more favorable than in other sections of the country in which he has worked during the past year, exhibitors expressing a willingness to try the new things offered.

Popular Exhibitor Remembered on Birthday.

San Francisco, Cal.—Sid Grauman, manager of the Empress theater, San Francisco, and director of the Screen Club, was surprised in a very pleasant manner recently on the occasion of his birthday by being presented with a huge floral piece, the gift of the talent and attaches of the theater, flanked by an excellent likeness of himself in enlarged form. His pleasure in thus being remembered was heightened by the presentation on the part of his father of a framed photograph finished in a wonderfully lifelike manner showing his father in a characteristic pose.

Sid Grauman, San Francisco.

The Graumans, father and son, have been connected with the amusement business on the Pacific Coast for twenty years and were the first to introduce 10-cent shows in this territory. Their connection with the moving picture business dates back to the very beginning of the industry, and they were among the first to show moving pictures in San Francisco.

The popularity of Sid Grauman in film circles was attested when he was chosen first president of the Screen Club of San Francisco, and the recent tribute of his co-workers on the occasion of his birthday seemed to surprise no one except himself. His ability as a master showman is evidenced by his long association with the vaudeville end of the business and of the important positions he has filled while still a very young man.

New Exchange Formed.

San Francisco.—Articles of incorporation of the Peerless Film Service, Inc., have been filed here with a capital stock of $10,000 by E. H. Emmick, L. H. Fox and M. K. Emmick. Headquarters have been established at 100 Golden Gate avenue and a stock of film is now on hand there.

Mexican Exhibitor in San Francisco.

San Francisco, Cal.—C. Maxemim, of Mazatlan, was a recent visitor here to inspect theater equipment and announced that at an early date he planned to establish a chain of moving picture theaters in the vicinity of that city. Conditions on the west coast are said to be fairly well settled and it is anticipated that business will soon be normal again.

Supply House Doing Big Business.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Breck Photoplay Supply Company, Inc., has been appointed exclusive distributors for Simplex projection machines in the Pacific Coast territory north of Bakersfield, Cal., and has made a number of noteworthy sales of late. An order for three machines of the latest type has been received from the Kahn & Greenfield Circuit for its New Mission theater, a machine has been installed in the Orpheum, another has been shipped to the Tuolumne Fire Department at Tuolumne, Cal., while still another has been furnished to the Masonic opera house at Truckee, Cal. Edison machines have also been selling freely, four having been disposed of during the past month. E. J. Hartmanshenn, for nine years with the Novelty Moving Picture Company and the General Film Company, is now with this concern and the organization is materially strengthened, as he is one of the best repair men on the Pacific coast. W. E. Francis recently returned from a trip through the Napa valley.

California Briefs.

Oakland, Cal.—The Princess theater on San Pablo avenue, which has been closed for some time, has been reopened.

Berkeley, Cal.—The T. & D. theater is now changing program four times a week instead of three times.

Alameda, Cal.—The Park theater, at 1340 Park street, has been purchased by E. W. Scott, formerly of Indiana.

Chico, Cal.—The Majestic and Broadway theaters are to be closed at an early date and an airdome opened by Anderson & Wood.

Redwood City, Cal.—A contract has been awarded by Lydia Dugan for the construction of a one-story reinforced concrete moving picture theater to cost about $16,000.

San Francisco Notes.

The M. & F. theater on Twenty-fourth street has been renamed and is now known as the Palmer theater.

The offices of the William Fox Film at 107 Golden Gate avenue have been rearranged in order that business may be cared for more expeditiously.

Edward H. Kemp has disposed of a Motiograph projection machine to F. J. Matson of the Christian Church at Wheatland, Cal.

The Nat A. Magner Company, Pacific building, has made arrangements to distribute the films of the New Film Corporation in the Los Angeles territory, a branch office being maintained in the southern city.

The Atlas Educational Film Company has taken over the exclusive California agency for the metal operating booths of the Grinden Art Metal Company and is preparing for an active campaign on this line.

SPOKANE NEWS LETTER.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

C. A. Stillwell Buys the Class A.

SPOKANE, WASH.—C. A. Stillwell, manager of the Unique theater, on Main avenue, Spokane, purchased the Class A theater from Lee S. Forbes, and took immediate possession. The name is rtained. Mr. Stillwell took over the lease and paid cash for the theater. The consideration was not announced.

He has not determined fully on policy, and plans to make a trip to the Coast the first of next week to complete arrangements for picture service. He stated that he would show the World features the first three days of the week and will begin Sunday, April 16, with Clara Kimball Young in "Camille," a Metro production.

Mr. Stillwell opened the theater with a Mutual Masterpicture, "Overalls," and he expects to show the masterpictures of the Mutual program regularly. He will retain all the house staff for the time being.

Several radical changes in policy will probably be made after Mr. Stillwell returns from the Coast. These include the adoption of a three-a-week policy with program changes Sunday, Wednesday and Friday, and the inauguration of straight 10-cent policy afternoon and night, children five cents.

The "Spokane."

Spokane, Wash.—The Strand theater, called the "Little Orpheum," photoville and "Doc Crews, who cures the blues," made its debut jointly at the rechristened Spokane theater, Sunday, April 9. Five vaudeville offerings are presented in the initial program, with a Universal film.

The odor of fresh paint was over the theater and the lobby and main entrance especially were brightened up with ivory tint. The ushers were spick and span in white flannel trousers and blue coats. There is a five-piece orchestra.

Among Spokane Exchanges.

P. L. Carroll, manager of the Pathe exchange in Spokane, announces that the Pantages has booked "The Iron Claw" serial to run at that place, starting Sunday, April 23. He further announces that he has 22 bookings of the same film to run in various houses in the Spokane territory, including Northern Idaho, Western Montana and Eastern Washington. Mr. Carroll said that the Spokane, Butte and Seattle offices had done the biggest business in the history of the offices since January 1.

A. T. Lambson, formerly of Spokane and now of the Reel Play Features Company of Seattle, and E. R. Redlick, district representatives, also E. Eden, traveling representative of the same company, were here and it is understood they plan to open an office here. They purchase their productions on the open market, according to the information given me.

George W. Braden, who has been with the Liberty theater since its opening, has taken a position with the Mutual film exchange in Spokane as shipping clerk. He succeeds J. H. Connell, who has accepted a similar position with the Universal Film & Supply Company exchange. Ernest Wilkinson, shipping clerk of the Universal, has gone to the Coast.

E. M. Shaw, of Oakesdale, has sold his theater to W. Mustard, who has signed for the Universal service. Both he and Harry Beal of the Medical Lake picture house, visited the Universal and reported to W. Potter that business was good with them.

The Liberty theater is now using a Universal comedy and through the efforts of W. Potter, manager of the Universal exchange, six of the eleven central picture houses in Spokane are using some part of the Universal service. J. J. Kenzie, an efficiency man, has been placed in charge of the poster department of the Universal.

Daily Fire Inspection

Public Safety Commission Inspects Film Exchanges—Recommends Concrete Film Storage Vaults—Suggests Another Fire Ordinance—This Will Be the Third Ordinance in a Few Months—Firemen Now Call Every Day.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

PORTLAND, ORE—Recently the city's Public Safety Commission inspected the film exchanges. A few days afterwards firemen commenced making daily tours of Film Row and examining the exchanges. The commission said it considered the vaults where films were stored not safe and thought they should be of reinforced concrete with sufficient vents to prevent explosions in case of fire. Fault was also found with exhibition rooms in several exchanges, the commission claiming there were not enough exits. The commission suggested the passage of an ordinance regulating all exchanges.

This is the third time within the year that a fire ordinance covering exchanges has been proposed. Owners of buildings housing exchanges have expressed themselves in favor of doing anything reasonable that the city administration thinks will further safeguard the lives of the occupants, but declare that with the maze of municipal regulations and the ever-changing requirements they are at a loss to know what to do. Exchange men pointed out that while the Public Safety Commission and the fire marshall were continually harping on the question of films in exchanges and theaters where every logical means of preventing fires is now being used, it has not come to public knowledge that they have ever tried to regulate the handling of kodak films sold in paper cartons throughout the city.

PORTLAND'S NEW THEATER.

The Rex Opens Its Doors at Third and Morrison Streets—A Fine House.

Portland's newest theater, the Rex, opened its doors on schedule time April 15. The house is located at Third and Morrison streets, in the heart of the downtown shopping district and at a prominent transfer point. It is owned by J. G. and H. M. Fleishman, owners of the Novelty, further down Morrison street, and will be under the direct management of H. M. Fleishman.

For the opening, the auditorium was decorated with carnations and roses, and while there was an atmosphere of newness about the house, the first show was put over without a hitch. Manager Fleishman corralled the first nickel that was paid for admission and hung it in the box office as a good-luck token; this was the only christening ceremony. The first program featured Essanay's "Blind Justice," with Henry B. Walthall, and will be followed by "The Deathlock" and "New York."

A large pipe organ, formerly used in the San Francisco Exposition, will soon be installed in the theater, and there is some work yet to be done on the front of the house. Otherwise the theater opened completely equipped for business.

Alaska Exchange Man Visits.

Portland, Ore.—W. D. Gross, who conducts the Alaska Film Exchange, Juneau, the Alaska distributors of Universal films, was in Portland recently visiting Gus Metzger, manager of the Film Supply Company of Oregon. Mr. Gross stated that Universal was the only service that came regularly to his territory, the other pictures coming only as features. The admission price throughout Alaska, said Mr. Gross, is 25 cents and until recently four reels have constituted a show. Now, however, competition has become keen and the length of shows has been increased.

Mr. Gross controls seven houses in Alaska and reports them all prosperous. There is at present a great influx of people to Alaska and he predicts that in a year and a half, when the new railroad has been completed, many new towns will spring up. Mr. Gross has handled the Universal product in Juneau for four years and makes a trip to the "States" every six months to keep in touch with film conditions.

Coos Bay Prosperous.

Marshfield, Ore.—H. L. Thompson, who has been road man out of Portland for Universal during the past two months, returned recently from a trip through the Coos Bay country in southwestern Oregon and reports prosperous conditions with the coming of the new railroad to Marshfield. Heretofore this territory could be reached only by stage coach over the mountains from Roseburg or by ocean steamer, and owing to the uncertainty of stage connections and the long time films were kept in transit from Portland, exhibitors were compelled to use cheap pictures. Mr. Thompson said that immediately upon the opening of the railroad the theater men put in better service and now the pictures shown in the Coos Bay towns are on a par with those shown throughout the state.

H. H. Brownell With Pathe.

Portland, Ore.—H. H. Brownell has been employed by Pathe as road man out of Portland to succeed B. J. Sperry, who was promoted to the position of manager some time ago. The position of travelling solicitor has been vacant since Mr. Sperry's promotion. Mr. Brownell entered the film game as operator. Later he was manager of the Portland Apex office and exploited features on his own account in Oregon and California. Recently he has served as cameraman for Gaumont in this territory and also photographed the Pendleton Roundup.

Mr. Brownell recently returned from a trip through eastern Oregon and stated that the exhibitors there knew very little of the dangers of the proposed statewide Sunday closing law which is being fathered in Portland.

J. V. Lynn With Universal.

Portland, Ore.—J. V. Lynn, who was publicity manager for the People's Amusement Company for some time, has been employed by Universal as road man. Mr. Lynn will work out of Seattle and handle the Washington territory.

New Theater at Woodburn.

Woodburn, Ore.—George C. Healy and Harry Samchuck have opened the Opera House as a moving picture theater. The equipment was furnished by the Service Film Company of Portland. The new house has been renamed the Woodburn theater.

Heard on Film Row.

Paul Noble, formerly manager of the National, has left Portland for San Francisco and Los Angeles. The boys on Film Row regret his departure, but expect to hear big things from him in the South.

The Columbia and People's theaters are holding Fashion Shows one night each week.

Among the recent visitors in Portland were: H. Herman, travelling representative for the Rudolf Wurlitzer Company; M. E. Mead, road man for Triangle; Lew Cullins, of the Casino theater, The Dalles, Oregon; B. J. Callahan, Critic theater, Seaside, Oregon; E. R. Saunders, Bell theater, Ilwaco, Wash.

Victoria, B. C., Theaters

A Visit to Picture Houses in the Provincial Capital—Eight Fine Theaters Inspected—Only One of Them a Five-Cent House—Ten-Cent Seats Found More Popular Than Fifteen-Cent Seats.

By E. S. Thomas, Vancouver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

VICTORIA, B. C.—The correspondent of the Moving Picture World took a trip to Victoria, B. C., recently, for the purpose of calling on the exhibitors of that city. It was found that while business is not all that could be desired, everyone is optimistic regarding future business. There are some fine theaters in the city, and very good programs are the rule. It was noticed that where admission prices are 10 and 15 cents an unusually large proportion of 10-cent tickets are sold.

The Dominion.

The Dominion theater, on Yates street, was the first house visited, and the Lasky feature, "The Golden Chance," was the attraction. J. M. Robertson is the manager of this theater, which has a seating capacity of 900, and is one of the leading houses of the city, with the exclusive franchise for Paramount subjects in Victoria. Mr. Robertson called particular attention to the large rest-room over the lobby, where patrons may sit until seats are available in the auditorium—an innovation that is typical of the attention given to patrons at this house. Business is reported as good, and the theater would probably have been more crowded when visited had not the streets outside been lined with people waiting for the passing of a military parade. In this connection it is stated that the principal difficulty experienced by the management is in keeping a staff of ushers, twelve having enlisted since the beginning of the war.

Through the efforts of Mr. Robertson the Victoria Daily Colonist has just commenced to run a Sunday page of photoplay publicity.

Music at the Dominion is supplied by a pipe organ, played by John Thill.

The Royal Victoria.

The Royal Victoria, next visited, is a really magnificent theater, built two years ago at a cost of $450,000, and seating 1,554. The house is constructed without stairways, and inclined runways reach the balcony at two different levels. Manager Clifford Denham conducted the World man over the entire building, and onto the enormous stage, underneath which is installed an automatic heating and ventilating plant, and a series of especially fine dressing rooms for the accommodation of the road shows which occasionally play the house. A large, clear picture is projected from the rear of the balcony, with a throw of 140 feet to the screen. Although slightly away from the main business section of the city, it is not far enough out to have this fact materially affect the attendance, and Mr. Denham is expecting increased patronage with the Triangle program, which is about to be installed in the Royal Victoria. This house is controlled by the National Amusement Company, of which W. P. Nichols is managing director.

The Variety.

The Variety, on Government street, is the principal Victoria customer of the Universal, and has recently begun the showing of Bluebird Photoplays. This house, which is owned by L. J. Quagliotti, was recently reopened after extensive alterations, and a $10,000 organ has been ordered from the Karn Morris Piano & Organ Company, of Woodstock, Ont., although an orchestra is being used at present. Mr. Quagliotti intimated that he might leave Victoria for an indefinite stay, and would turn over the management of his local houses to his brother Hector, of the Colonial theater, in Vancouver. Seating capacity of the Variety is 678, and the house was comfortably filled. The following was displayed prominently in the foyer: "Notice to Patrons. The management desires to promote the comfort and convenience of its patrons in every possible way. Any suggestion tending to this end will be gladly received."

The Columbia.

When the World man approached the box office at 10.20 p. m., the startled cashier almost fainted.

This house, located on Government street, is controlled by the National Amusement Company, and is under the management of M. B. Maysmith. At present four acts of Fischer small time vaudeville are shown in conjunction with moving pictures, but the future policy of the house is problematical, and it is considered likely that exclusive picture programs will be shown hereafter. Seating capacity is 704, and a three-piece orchestra is used. Good business is done at 10 cents admission.

The Romano.

A store show, located on Government street and controlled by L. J. Guagliotti. Admission is 10 cents, and the seating capacity is about five hundred. Universal programs, including Red Feathers, are shown.

The Majestic.

Manager C. E. Bailey is just giving up this house, which will in future be conducted by B. S. Heisterman, the owner of the property. The house (a store show) seats 520, and has recently booked General Film service. Mr. Bailey, who was formerly proprietor of the Rex, at Esquimalt, expects to leave soon for Calgary.

The Empress.

This is another of the houses on "Quagliotti Row," and is the only 5-cent theater in town, with a large trade among the Chinese and other foreigners. It was also the only house which was observed to be "standing them out" during our visit. Universal pictures are used.

General Manager W. P. Nichols, of the National Amusement Company, was on the same boat with us going to Victoria, and also on the return trip to Vancouver, and we had some interesting talks with him regarding conditions generally. Mr. Nichols stated that late in April the National Film Service would confine its attention to the Triangle releases, which start on April 17. Seven reels per week will be brought in until May 8, when fourteen reels will be the weekly importation, and all will be shown at the Rex and Globe theaters, with the Rex taking first run. For some weeks large advertising space has been taken in local newspapers advertising this program, and these houses expect to start off to big business.

Manager Not Permitted to Operate.

Victoria, B. C.—C. E. Bailey, manager of the Majestic theater, appeared before the works committee of the city council recently to complain of the examination provided by the by-laws for moving picture operators. He explained that he had taken the examination and had failed because of certain technical electrical questions which were asked. He claimed that this knowledge was not needed by an operator. His operator being sick, the manager had taken his place in the booth, and Chief Davis had issued a summons against him. It was decided that the regulations must be enforced, and Mr. Bailey was advised to secure a qualified operator. However, as he has practically decided to go to Calgary, the matter will be dropped.

Confer on Operators' License.

Vancouver, B. C.—A committee, consisting of J. O. Thomas, vice president of Vancouver Local No. 348, I. A. T. S. E., and E. J. Huttelmayer, business agent, went to Victoria recently, and were joined by a committee from the operators' union of that city in a consultation which had been arranged with Premier Bowser relative to a change in the laws governing provincial operators' licenses, along the lines set forth in the Moving Picture World some weeks ago. It is stated that the premier was favorably impressed with the suggestions of the unions, and that legislation covering the proposals will probably be undertaken in the near future.

Clifford Denham, Picture Pioneer.

Victoria, B. C.—Clifford Denham, manager of the $450,000 Royal Victoria theater in Victoria, B. C., is one of the real pioneers of the moving picture industry in Canada. Twelve years ago he was sent out from England by Charles Urban's Bioscope Company, and spent four years taking pictures throughout Canada, both for the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Dominion Government. These films were exhibited all over the British Isles, and were a great factor in the colonization of Canadian territory. In England Mr. Denham was also associated with the Moss & Thornton theaters, now known as the Moss & Stoll circuit.

Settling in Victoria, Mr. Denham exhibited the first moving pictures in that city in the open air, at Gorge Park, and later became manager of the old Victoria theater in the palmy days of the province. On the completion of the Royal Victoria two years ago he was placed in charge of this house, in which road shows were played for a time, but where for the past year moving pictures have been presented, under the control of the National Amusement Company.

Mr. Denham has made many friends in Victoria through his policy of giving benefit performances in aid of local charities. He has just agreed to donate thirty per cent. of his receipts each Monday night to the local Red Cross fund, and many local artists are always at hand on these occasions to assist with their services.

Western Canada Notes.

Vancouver, B. C.—This city's first Charlie Chaplin contest was held recently at the Columbia theater, and brought out eight entries, including two young ladies and a Chinaman. The amateurs appeared several times during the evening and all attendance records at the Columbia were broken.

Calgary, Alberta.—The Naomi Mothers' Society is planning a Child Welfare Week here in the near future, and local exhibitors have promised to help in every way possible—either by the exhibition of special films, or by allowing short speeches to be made in the theaters, dealing with the movement.

Victoria, B. C.—During the three-day engagement of the Vitagraph comedy "Green Stockings," at the Royal Victoria theater, Manager Clifford Denham arranged with a local store to display green stockings in a prominent show window. One theater ticket each night bore the name "Green Stockings," and the holder of the lucky ticket was presented with an order on the store for a pair of the emerald hose.

Edmonton, Alberta.—The first local house to adopt the Saturday morning matinee for children is the Monarch. Manager Max Allen will give a special performance at ten o'clock every Saturday hereafter, and will show a variety of films especially suitable for children. One of the first pictures to be shown is "Cinderella," with Mary Pickford.

OVERCROWDING IN TORONTO.

A Little Too Much of a Good Thing—But It Shows Health.

By W. M. Gladish, Special Correspondent, 1263 Gerrard St. East, Toronto, Ont.

TORONTO, Ont.—When Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, the Metro stars, paid a visit to Toronto recently they made short appearances at some fifteen picture theaters. The crowds were enormous, but the College playhouse, 346 College street, was so jammed that Manager M. J. Thaler was summoned to police court because of the overcrowding. He explained the circumstances and also proved that he had phoned for police assistance to handle the attendance, but the policeman never came. Judge Cohen did not impose sentence.

A few nights later, however, Patrol-Sergeant Rogers found thirty-seven people standing in the aisles of the picture house owned by T. J. Ryan, 336 Pape avenue. In court next day Mr. Ryan was fined $20 and costs.

With theater overcrowding cases in the police court it sounds as if Toronto exhibitors are doing good business.

May Change Health Inspection Law.

Toronto, Ont.—The City of Toronto has applied for legislation to amend the Public Health Act to permit an inspector to enter a moving picture theater or other place of amusement at any time of day or night. Under the prevailing law a civic investigator can only examine theater premises during the day time, when nearly all the small houses are empty.

Will Buy Red Cross Motor Ambulance.

Toronto, Ont.—The members of the Moving Picture Protective Association of Toronto have decided to pool the proceeds of recruiting meetings in their theaters in a general fund for the purchase of a Red Cross motor ambulance.

Starfilms Co-operative Circuits.

Toronto, Ont.—W. B. Lubin, assistant general manager of Starfilms, Limited, Metro distributors in Canada, has been working up a plan for the establishment of circuits of co-operative theaters for the exchange of Metro features throughout Ontario. This is similar to the group system which has been evolved in Toronto by which fifteen local theaters contracted for three Metro pictures per week each for a period of six months on a co-operative basis.

Mr. Lubin says that he has been pleased at the manner in which the co-operative arrangement between the fifteen Toronto theaters became effective and that the circuit idea in the country sections deserves a trial at least.

Local Universal Notes.

Toronto, Ont.—Mr. Claire Hague, general manager; W. R. Lennon, Toronto manager, and W. Davidson, of the Canadian Universal, recently paid a return visit to the headquarters of the Universal, in Detroit, Mich., when a conference was held with George Weekes, Detroit manager, and William Bailey.

Violet MacMillan, Universal star, has been making a tour of Ontario theaters during the past six weeks. She spent one whole week in Ottawa and another week saw her before the public at Hamilton.

An important business arrangement has just been consummated at the Toronto branch of the Universal whereby the new Regent, Ottawa, one of Canada's best show houses, will take Universal service exclusively.

World Film Notes.

Toronto, Ont.—Arrangements have been made whereby World Features, Limited, World Film distributors in Canada, will look after the bookings for "The Whirl of Life," the photo-play feature in which the Vernon Castles are starred. The first exhibition of the picture was given at the Flower theater, Ottawa, during the week of April 10, after which it was seen at the Connaught, Montreal. It will be shown in Massey Hall, Toronto. A percentage of the proceeds from the picture will be turned over to British aviators, it is declared.

World Features, Limited, are also handling Equitable features in the Dominion, the first release to be "Trilby."

The World branch at Toronto has two new roadmen, Mr. H. W. Burton and George Brownridge. The latter was formerly with the defunct Conness-Till Film Manufacturing Company, Toronto.

Toronto, Ontario.—Phil Kauffman, of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, has announced that "The Hypocrites," which was banned by the Ontario Board of Censors, has been passed by the censor in Nova Scotia. It is understood that no attempt will be made to show the feature in the Province of Quebec where the population is mainly French-Canadian.

Begin to Know Power

Montreal Exhibitors Successfully Work for the Election of Mayor Mederic Martin—Two Days Before Voting a Meeting of the Exhibitors' Association, with Little Concord, Gave Marked Results, It Is Claimed.

By Gerald Gallagher, Montreal Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MONTREAL, Canada.—Montreal recently had its civic elections. Two days before the public went to the polls, somebody among the exhibitors woke up. A meeting of the Exhbitors' Association was summoned. Eighty per cent. of the members were absent. Mr. Herring, the president, after shedding a few figurative tears over the pitifully small attendance, proposed that the exhibitors should help to re-elect Mayor Mederic Martin. This happened forty-eight hours before the elections. Mr. Herring said that Mederic Martin would be the film man's friend. Lapointe, one of the other contestants, had imposed the charity tax on local amusements, Mr. Herring pointed out. Mr. Herring stated that Martin had promised him he would help the moving picture business.

One of the exhibitors ventured to tell Mr. Martin the reason for the poor attendance at the meeting. He said that in his case, as in many others, the association did not back their members. Mr. Herring pointed out that the association would not help law-breakers. A lively discussion took place. The Charity Tax, the inefficiency of the association, this, that and the other thing were then discussed in rapid order. At last someone decided to remind the gathering that the meeting had been called to discuss whether or not the Montreal exhibitors would support Martin in his bid for the mayoralty. When the meeting broke up it was generally understood, some way or other, that the great moving picture industry was behind Martin. His vote was taken from those at the meeting. Mr. Herring later said that thirty-five houses used the screen to boost Martin. The writer saw in Mr. Herring's theater, the audience laugh, hiss and shoo Martin's picture on the screen. However, Martin won the election. This is the attiture of the exhibitors who supported Martin: "We can always say that the man we backed was elected." We want to see a "live" association now. It's a funny bunch of exhibitors who start an election campaign forty-eight hours before the elections.

Another New Theater?

Westmont, Quebec.—Although several new houses have been recently opened in Montreal, and seem to be doing a bad business, still we hear stories every day of more new houses. The Montreal suburb, Westmount, is now named as a site for a new house, according to Montreal newspapers. It is said that a new house will be erected in Westmount by the Independent Amusement Ltd., who own and operate the Strand and Moulin Rouge theaters, as well as the recently-opened Regent. We are given to understand that the proposed house will be a facsimile of the Majestic at Detroit, and will seat fifteen hundred. One connected with the above-named company stated that it was extremely probable that the house would be erected, but that everything had not been settled as yet.

Has $61,000 from Charity Tax.

Montreal, Quebec.—As soon as the new Board of Control convenes, members will be asked to approve distribution to hospitals and institutions of charity the sum of $61,000 resulting from the one cent charity tax between August and January last. The money has been in the civic treasury, awaiting decision as to the manner in which it should be divided. In accordance with charter amendments at the last session of the Legislature, one-half will go to general hospitals, one-third to special hospitals, and one-sixth to institutions of charity.

Among Montreal Exhibitors.

Mr. Wickham has opened a new house in St. Lamberts, across the river from Montreal, and has called it the Victoria. It seats 500 people.

Business among Montreal exhibitors has been slow lately, most exhibitors giving the Lenten season as the reason for the slackness.

It looks as if quite a few small Montreal houses will be compelled to close their doors before September. A dull season has just been experienced, and the hot weather will soon come.

The new St. Denis theater will put on a stock company very soon. They will be featured and helped by pictures. If the venture is successful, then pictures will be abolished. The new house does not seem to have been making much of a show, from a financial standpoint. Other houses recently opened in Montreal seem to be in the same position.

Manager Campbell, for Ontario Bluebird, has been in Montreal on an extended trip dealing with the bookings of the Blue Bird films in the East.

J. J. Orkney has been appointed Montreal manager for Blue Bird.

The following out-of-town exhibitors made recent calls on the Montreal exchanges: Manager Bedard, of Quebec, who runs the Princess and Crystal Palace theaters in the Ancient City, and also the Orpheum in Riviere du Loup; Messrs. O'Connor Bros., of Huntingdon, P. Q.; Mr. Bayeur, of Sherbrooke, P. Q., and Mr. Paquette, of the Auditorium, Quebec City; Mr. Bedard, of the Casino, Quebec; Mr. Audette, of the Royal, St. Johns, P. Q.; Mr. Bouchard, of Three Rivers; Mr. Tanguay, of the Victoria, Quebec.

We recommend to Canadian exhibitors a two-reel comedy entitled "The Revenge of Mr. Tommy Atkins," which is handled locally by Allfeatures. It is sure to make a hit with any British audience.

H. W. McCollum, formerly with Universal and V-L-S-E., has connected with the Feaster Film Feed, of which he is Canadian managing director, and has opened offices at 204 St. Catherine street West. The Feaster Film Feed is an appliance which does away with all trouble in rewinding film.

ESSANAY.

IN THE MOON'S RAY (Two Parts—May 2).—The cast: Richard Neal (Francis X. Bushman); Meredith Blake (E. H. Calvert); "Spider" (Bryant Washburn); Robert Hamilton (Rapley Holmes); Judith, his daughter (Gerda Holmes).

Meredith Blake, a gentleman crook, learns that the millionaire, Robert Hamilton, has just obtained a priceless scarab. He decides to get it. Accidently his accomplice, "Spider," finds an invitation to attend a reception at the Hamilton home. Blake poses as a detective and also attends. He secretes himself in Hamilton's apartment while "Spider" awaits outside to aid in the flight.

After Hamilton has retired, Blake emerges from his hiding place and by the light of the moon shining through the windows obtains the scarab. Hamilton awakes and the "Spider" leaps in and knocks him senseless.

Judith, Hamilton's daughter, hurries into the room at the noise and Blake, infatuated with her, has "Spider" carry her out into a waiting taxi. When Judith recovers from her faint she notes the number of the license. Tightly clasped within her hand she holds a fountain pen, which she unconsciously carried with her when disturbed in writing. On her white slipper she makes a plea for help and hurls it out the window of the cab. The slipper strikes Richard Neal, private investigator, who was on his way to the Hamilton home at the behest of the millionaire.

He forms a connection between the two incidents and at the house learns of a heel print of peculiar markings. He discovers this to belong to the driver of the cab and finds that this driver is none other than "Spider." By a ruse the crook is compelled to lead Neal and Hamilton to the hiding place of Blake where after a battle the girl is released and the scarab returned. The ending suggests that a love story will be the continuation of the exciting incidents.

THE FABLE OF THE PREACHER WHO FLEW HIS KITE BUT NOT BECAUSE HE WISHED TO DO SO (May 3).—A certain Preacher became wise to the Fact that he was not making a Hit with his Congregation. The Parishioners did not seem inclined to seek him out after services and tell him he was a Pansy. He has always tried to Expound—in a straightforward Manner—along the intellectual Plane of the aggregation who chipped in to pay his Salary. The Pew-holders could understand everything he said and they began to think the Preacher was Common. The Preacher decided that to Win and make everybody believe he was a Nobby and Boss Minister he would have to hand out a little Guff. He fixed it up Good and Plenty.

On the following Sunday Morning—from his Lookout—he gave out a Text which didn't mean anything—read from either Direction. He sized up his Flock with Dreamy Eye as he voiced the Poetry and Mysticism in those familiar lines of the great Icelandic Poet—Ikon Navrojk. A Stout Woman leaned forward so as not to miss Anything. A Venerable Harness Dealer seemed to recognize the Quotation and nodded his head Solemnly. The Preacher didn't know what all the Talk meant, and he didn't care. The Parishioners had paid their money for Tall Talk and were prepared for all Styles of Delivery. Perceiving that the Congregation would stand for Anything, the Preacher knew what to do after that.

MORAL—Give the People what they Think they Want.

ONCE A THIEF (Three Parts—May 6).—The cast: Paul Kendrick (Bryant Washburn); Mary Fulton (Nell Craig); Frank Overton (Edmund F. Cobb); James Overton (Richardson Cotton).

Paul Kendrick has a position in James Overton's antique shop. Mary Fulton, another serious minded young person greatly interested in her work, has more than a feeling of friendship toward Paul, an attitude which is mutual. Paul's sister is terribly crippled and when a specialist tells him it will cost $1,000 to restore her to perfect health, he approaches his employer and asks the loan. Overton dismisses the idea as preposterous. Paul feels hurt, and when he sells a curio for $1,200 he merely makes out a sales slip for $200 and spends the $1,000 for his sister's operation, intending to ultimately repay. He is caught, however, and in the light of the circumstances gets only a six months' term.

Frank Overton makes advances to Mary. He is a rather dissolute son of the owner, quite as dishonest as his father. Mary consents to go out with him in the hope of making him place Paul back at work on the expiration of his sentence to allow him to repay the money. When he becomes intoxicated he tells how the firm is evading customs duty and literally smuggling its goods from Europe. With this as a lever Mary forces old Overton to take back Paul. The bookkeeper, who knows of the Overton smuggling, tries to get a raise and fails. Therefore, he promptly juggles the books to add to his salary. Paul—"Once a thief, always a thief"— is accused. But Mary comes to the rescue, having discovered the accountant's wrongdoing. Overton is compelled to pay all back duties to the government and keep Paul in his position until the boy can return the $1,000 he stole to help his sister. When the story ends it is natural to assume that Mary will resign her position when the thousand dollars is paid.

KALEM.

A WAR OF WITS (No. 4 of "The Social Pirates'—Two Parts—April 17).—The cast: Mona (Marin Sais); Mary (Ollie Kirkby); Dr. Hyoscine (Thomas Lingham); Marty McMurtha (Frank Jonasson); Letty McLean (Mrs. E. Sherart); Dr. Brown (Edward Clisbee); Billings (Paul C. Hurst). Directed by James W. Horne.

Mona and Mary, in the course of their career of aiding the helpless and combating "The Social Pirates," cross swords with a character known as Dr. Hyoscine, from the fact that he uses that insidious drug to extort money from his wealthy patients. The doctor is working his crafty designs on the wealthy Letty McLean when he comes to the attention of the girls.

They are stopping at the same summer resort, with Mona posing as Mary's maid, to aid their plans. By a clever ruse Mona secures the position as Mrs. McLean's maid, while Mary's beauty captures the amorous eye of Dr. Hyoscine. Facing a clever antagonist the girls are put on their sternest mettle, but with the aid of Mary McMurtha they succeed in teaching Dr. Hyoscine a severe lesson and at the same time bringing him to justice.

HAM AND PREPAREDNESS (April 18).—The cast: Ham (Lloyd V. Hamilton); Bud (Bud Duncan); The Daughter of the Regiment (Norma Nichols); Bud's rescuer (Juanita Sponsler).

Ham and Bud set out for Mexico to study athletics, but when bullets sing around their ears and bombs burst above them the place becomes too warm. One bursting shell sends Bud up in the air and he lands far out at sea. Meanwhile Ham, by proving that he was "a hero of Cow's Run" has been welcomed into the home of the captain of the regiment and his pretty daughter. Ham's jealousy when the periscope shows Bud being rescued by a charming mermaid, and the disappearance of some important papers start a whirlwind mix-up that ends with Ham and Bud swimming for dear life, hard pressed by army, navy and police force.

THEIR TAKING WAYS (April 19).—The cast: Clever Leona (Ethel Teare); Gentleman Jerry (Jack McDermott); The valet (Victor Rottman); The maid (Lillian Clark). Written by Paul Arlington. Directed by William Beaudine.

Clever Leona and Gentleman Jerry have a wonderfully enjoyable time at the swell society function lifting each other's valuables. But you can imagine the surprise when each arrives home to find that all they have are the things they have "borrowed." Off they go to the pawnshop—there to meet and learn each other's identity. A partnership is formed—both for business and life—which comes in mighty handy when they are later pursued by detectives.

A DOUBLE-BARRELED COURTSHIP (April 21).—The cast: Sis Hopkins (Rose Melville); Dorothy (Mary Kennedy); Jack (Arthur Albertson); Dorothy's mother (Mary Taylor-Rose); Sis' lover (Henry Murdock); Aunt Clara (Olive West); Uncle Dick (Richard Purdon); The butler (Frank Minzey). Written by Paul Arlington. Directed by Robert Ellis.

Jack is becoming altogether too attentive to Dorothy to suit her mother, so she ships her off to Aunt Clara. As her aunt has never seen her, Dorothy considers it a bright idea when she meets Sis on the way to the same house, to accept a job as maid to change places, since she will thus be able to see Jack without any trouble. So Sis is installed as the "young lady of the house," while Dorothy becomes the maid. But the arrival of Sis' persistent suitor—none other than Indifferent Ignatz—results in a mix-up that gets everybody in a tangle before Dorothy's mother comes to expose the whole affair.

THE GOVERNOR'S SPECIAL (No. 76 of the "Hazards of Helen" Series—April 22).—The cast: The operator at Lone Point (Helen Gibson); Tom Arnold (P. S. Pembroke); Detective Stanton (True Boardman); The Governor (George Williams); Glen Nash (Roy Watson); his aides (Harry Schum and Ed. Gibson).

When Nash, the crooked contractor, learns that the detective on the way to the Capitol with the evidence that will convict him must stop off at Lone Point to make train connections he determines to make use of the opportunity. He speeds in his automobile to the connecting point, and at the proper moment his aides set on Stanton and succeed in making way with the bag in which the documents are carried.

Tom Arnold, a tramp who has earned Helen's gratitude by aiding her in preventing an attempted robbery of the station, comes to the detective's aid, but just in time to be arrested himself as one of the thieves. Helen, convinced of his innocence, sets out on a high-powered motorcycle after the automobile containing Nash and his aides. His perilous ride is the beginning of a pursuit which reaches the climax when Helen leaps from horse-back to the speeding Governor's Special, barely grasping the hand-rail and pulling herself aboard in time to escape injury: But she succeeds in bringing the real culprit to justice and setting Arnold on his feet again.

BIOGRAPH.

SWORDS AND HEARTS (Reissue—May 1).—The cast: The Confederate soldier (Wilfred Lucas); His father (Vernon Clargers); A Southern belle (Claire McDowell); The poor girl (Dorothy West); The colored servant (W. J. Butler); The Union soldier (Charles H. West); Bushwhackers (Francis Grandin, Alfred Paget and W. C. Robinson).

In the old South, before the war, the wealthy belle is wooed by her neighbor's son. When he rides away to join his regiment, she kisses him before the assembled crowd. The daughter of a "poor white" on the plantation, who loves him secretly, also bids him good-bye. Later, while riding to see his sweetheart, the officer is pursued by Union troops. The poor girl sees them and, galloping off, draws the troopers in pursuit. She is wounded, but makes her escape, returning the horse without her escapade having been suspected. Her father heads a band of lawless men who, knowing that the lieutenant's father has a treasure chest in the house, attack the mansion, kill the owner and set fire to the place during their drunken orgy. They do not find the treasure chest, however, for the old negro butler has buried it in the earth. At the close of the war the officer returns home a beggar and is flouted by his former sweetheart in favor of a Union man. The old butler discloses the secret hoard and tells of the poor girl's bravery. The young man offers the heroine the life she saved, and she confesses her love.

FIT FOR BURNING (Three Parts—May 3)—The cast: Constance Grey (Vera Sisson); Rev. Mr. Thorndyke (Charles Perley); Madge Martin (Gretchen Hartman); Richard Foraker (Charles H. Mailes); John Masters (Ivan Christy); Mrs. Masters (Cora Drew); Sophie Masters (Grace Hamilton).

Constance Grey meets and falls in love with Dick Foraker, the editor of the reform paper. Dick is her idol and her ideal. He is the noble and unselfish champion of every cause that looks for moral betterment. That is what she thinks—that is what all the city thinks, except poor Madge Martin.

One day Sophie Masters disappears. Constance searches for her in vain. Then she thinks of Madge Martin, who is now one of the owners of a notorious resort. Constance describes the missing girl to Madge. That night Constance goes to the resort. Madge leads her to a door and asks her to look through the transom. Constance looks. What she sees is little Sophie Masters in the arms of Dick Foraker. There are empty wine glasses on the table, which tell their own story. Dick sees the face through the transom. But in his drunken condition he thinks it is a phantom.

Then it is shown how Madge almost becomes mad with rage when she learns that her beloved Constance had been dealt almost a mortal blow by Foraker. She confronts this arch-hypocrite, the author of her own first great suffering, and tries to tear him to pieces. The men of the establishment come to her assistance and it goes hard with Foraker.

The next day the editor is seated at his desk reading in his own paper an account of how he was pitched upon by ruffians and badly beaten while on a mission of uplift in the slums. He thinks of the quick and eager sympathy of Constance Grey when he tells her of the outrage, and how she will love him more, if possible, for the things he has suffered for humanity's sake. But his complacent musings are interrupted by a boy who hands him a package —it is the ring he gave Constance—it is accompanied with a brief note—just a few words of molten grief, direct from her broken heart. But it is enough to convince Dick Foraker that the face at the transom was not a figment of his brain, that those pure serene eyes had beheld him with his mask off, and nowhere in this wide world could he ever again hide his shame.

And poor Madge Martin, tormented beyond endurance by her conscience, seeks oblivion in the river, while Constance Grey, strong of mind and high of soul, rises superior to the shocks of life and continues her work of love and kindness among the weak and down-trodden.

VIM.

THE BRAVE ONES (May 4).—The cast: Plump (Babe Hardy); Runt (Billy Ruge); Sheriff (Billie Bletcher); His Daughter (Elsie MacLeod).

Plump and Runt are once again in hard luck. Footsore and weary they arrive at a village and after devouring a plate of newly-made pies, proceed to make love to the Sheriff's daughter, who is rescued from their attentions by the worthy official himself. Not having the necessary money to pay for their meal, the old man tells them that if they will sleep for one night in an untenanted house on his property, he will not have them jailed. Our two heroes agree to his proposal and take up their new quarters. As midnight approaches, they are disturbed by unearthly noises, creakings and shadow-like apparitions.

Finally, giving up hope of sleeping, they lay awake. Their door slowly opens and in the wall appears a ghost like shape. This puts the finishing touch to their nerves and they bury their heads under the bed clothes. Meanwhile, a gang of counterfeiters who have long used the house as their headquarters discover the presence of the new tenants and decide to scare them off. Dressing in white sheets, they invade the bedroom, but Plump and Runt, now thoroughly aroused, attack and make them prisoner's. The Sheriff's daughter, thinking to have a joke, also dons a sheet and is mistaken by the coiners for one of themselves.

Confusion now reigns. The two boys try to escape. The Sheriff fires at them. Elsie screams as the villains vamoose and inform the police that the Sheriff is a coiner. A posse is dispatched, the Sheriff arrested and only released on the explanation from Plump and Runt who are now hailed as the saviours of the village, for were they not truly the means of making the ghost walk?

HOME-MADE PIES May 5).—The cast: Pokes (Robert Burns); Jabbs (Walt Stull); Ethel (Ethel Burton).

No one could blame Jabbs for being disgusted when he was forced to attempt to eat some of the biscuits made by his daughter, Ethel, a recent graduate of the Culinary Correspondence Course. Not discouraged by her first failure, Ethel bravely attempts a second trial under the supervision of her mother. This time she tries her hand at home-made pies, using all the ingredients she can find in the kitchen. When she places the pies outside the window to cool, the aroma attracts the attention of Pokes, who is badly in need of a meal. Pokes attempts to get away with the pies, but succeeds only in separating himself from some of his teeth.

Finally, when he is contentedly munching one of the pies made by the mother and which he has found amongst the sad efforts of Ethel, he is attacked by a policeman and a farmer whom he had previously insulted. Vigorously defending himself by using the pies as ammunition, which proves most effective, Pokes manages to seize Ethel and carry her off. Followed by the crowd, Pokes carries Ethel off to the quarry which Jabbs owns. Here he pauses to rest and sits on an old log where an irate employe, whom Jabbs had discharged, had planted a keg of powder in an attempt to blow up Jabbs. Unheedful of the burning fuse stealing quickly up to the keg, Pokes tells Ethel of his love for her, when the explosion occurs. The blast hurls both Pokes and Ethel high in the air and Ethel falls in on top of her mother and astonished crowd. When they look off in horror expecting to see the mangled remains of Pokes, to their chagrin they see him perched on top of a high tree calmly devouring the last of the home-made pies.

KNICKERBOCKER STAR FEATURES.

THE BROKEN PROMISE (Three Parts—April 28).—The cast: Aleda Shannon (Ann Drew); Edith Shannon (Joyce Moore); Roland Felder (Geo. Larkin); Mr. Shannon (Henry Stanley); Mrs. Shannon (Mollie McConnell); Mr. Felder (Daniel Gilfeather); Burke (Frank Watson).

Aleda Shannon, a child of nature, full of life and talent for classic dances, dances in her garden to the music from the birds. Roland Felder, her sweetheart, and her parents oppose the dances for they can't realize their beauty. Edith, sister of Aleda, returns home from a trip and a ball is given in her honor, but the parents refuse to let Aleda perform before the guests. Angered over it and urged by Edith, who has fallen in love with Roland, Aleda accepts the offer of Burke, the theatrical manager, to appear on the stage for the season. Her father disowns her.

Edith sets her cap for Roland and Mr. Shannon spares no expense in aiding her to keep him in the family. She gives Roland the wrong address to Aleda and his letter never reaches her. Aleda writes Edith and mentions she would wait till Roland has written first. Later Aleda writes again and states she has received his letter but had no time to answer. As the time goes, Roland believes he cares for Edith.

Three months later Aleda returns to New York weary of the stage and longing to see Roland. He reads of her in the paper and attends the performance. He goes to her dressing room, where they realize Edith's interference and she promises to quit the stage and marry him. Mr. Shannon gives his consent upon Aleda's promise never to return to the stage. She is welcomed back home, where Edith denies her charges and is jealous over losing Roland. Burke tells Aleda any time she wants to return, he will give her $2,000 a night.

Aleda and Roland become engaged. Shannon's extravagance during her absence has crippled him financially, but no one else knows of it. On December 9, during a reception, Shannon receives word from the trust company of his $20,000 note being past due, allowing him to January 1 to pay in, otherwise his property will go into the receiver's hands. Aleda reads this and decides to save him, writing Burke her wish to return. He replies that he is pleased and assures her secrecy, she having requested it, and he asks her to meet him at nine that night. Edith reads this and takes Roland that night to the theater and shows him Aleda entering the office with Burke. He is heartbroken, but does not respond to Edith's love making.

Shannon is shown the letter and Aleda allows herself to be falsely accused and is driven from home. She writes Roland of taking a two weeks' visit but Edith tells him the truth: That Aleda has signed up for fourteen nights, under the name of Princess Yoma to avoid recognition. Roland's father attends later and recognizes her. Roland rushes to the theater. She shows him why she was there and he reclaims her. The maid is substituted, his father is sent for and is convinced that it was not Aleda he saw. Christmas Eve, while Shannon is waiting for the crisis, he receives a letter and receipt for the $20,000 from Aleda, who has paid it. Filled with shame, he goes to her hotel and is shown the contract she made with Burke. On Christmas morning Aleda returns home and Roland's father gives her a large check for keeping her promise.

THE OATH OF HATE (Three Parts—May 5).—The cast: Captain Mark Stone (Henry King); May Manning (Marguerite Nichols).

Captain Mark Stone of the freighter, Annabel, gets word from his fiancee that she has decided to marry another man. He puts back to port and arrives just after the wedding ceremoney. Forcing his way into the house, he faces the girl and swears vengeance, vowing that he will marry and rear children to hate her children as he hates her.

Next day her father uses his influence to have Stone discharged. Stone lies in wait for him on the wharf, and through an accident he is injured in the head. A specialist is doubtful whether he will recover his sight. Mindful of his oath, Stone proposes marriage to May Manning, the slavey at his boarding house, and she accepts. Later, their child is born—a girl. At the news, the blind man stumbles from the house in a rage of disappointment, and, meeting with an old shipmate, goes on a voyage with him.

One of the crew bears a grudge against Stone and, seeing him helpless, drops him overboard on a dark night. The shock restores his sight. Reaching the shore, he makes his way to a fisherman's cabin, where a doctor, in attendance upon the fisherman's wife, declares that Stone's normal mind, deranged by a former blow on the head, has also been restored. His one idea now is to get back to his wife and child. But they have disappeared from the old home.

May, his wife, seeks work to support her child and becomes a dishwasher in a cheap waterfront restaurant. Stone, seeking her, is recognized on the street by his former sweetheart, who, having left her husband for another man, is now an outcast. To avoid her he enters the restaurant and there comes face to face with May. Explanations ensue, and he discovers that the weapon he chose to work evil against the woman he once hated has turned to love in his hands.

BLADE O' GRASS (Three Parts—April 25).—The cast: Dorothy Ward (Leonie Flugrath); Dorothy Ward, as a child (Eldean Steuart); Emerson Peabody Winthrop (Pat O'Malley); John Ward (Charles Sutton); Mrs. Ward (Mabel Dwight); Aunt Catherine Van Schuyler (Mrs. Wallace Erskine); Catherine Van Schuyler (Grace Morrison); David Travers (Guido Colucci); Jerome, a guide (T. Tamamoto); the Butler (Joe Bingham). Written by William Addison Lathrop. Directed by Burton George.

John Ward, deserted by a wife he adored, decides to spend the remainder of his life in solitude and, taking his baby daughter with him, he goes into the depths of the Maine forests, builds a cabin to shelter himself and his child, and leads the life of a recluse. By day he hunts, procuring enough food in this way to meet the necessities of life, and by night he imparts what knowledge he has to his child. Years are passed in this way and the little girl who came into the woods grows up and becomes a lithsome and beautiful young woman who is truly a child of nature.

But as the years go by, the woods that were virgin when Ward entered them become noted for their abundance of game and they are sought by many hunters. Emerson Winthrop, a wealthy New Yorker, learns of the reputation of the woods as a hunting ground and he establishes a cabin near the camp of Ward. One day he sees Dorothy in a canoe, gliding swiftly along a forest stream. At first he believes that he has seen a vision, but when he determines that it was no phantom or forest-sprite that he saw he seeks the acquaintance of the strange and beautiful girl. Unaccustomed to strangers, Dorothy at first makes every effort to avoid him but finally he wins her confidence. They spend much of their time together and finally they come to love each other. The girl, unexperienced in the ways of life, does not know of the origin of the emotions that move her when she is in the presence of Winthrop but the latter, educated and sophisticated, realizes that he is deeply in love with the maiden of the woods.

Then the time comes when the father of Dorothy learns of the meetings of Dorothy and the New Yorker and he forbids the girl to see Winthrop again and compells the latter to leave the woods. Winthrop relates his experience when he returns to the city and it comes to the sister of Ward who is indignant at the way in which her brother keeps his daughter apart from humanity and an exile in the forest. She writes him and rebukes him for his selfishness and, as a result, he sends Dorothy to the city. There she comes for the first time in contact with the stilted conventions and the petty deceptions of metropolitan life and she soon decides to return to the forest cabin where she has found contentment and happiness. While in the city she meets Winthrop who falls so completely under the spell of her charm and beauty that he follows her back to the Maine woods when she leaves the city.

He finds that his suit is still opposed by Ward but he never abandons the hope that in some way he will win the hand of the girl. And it is well for Dorothy and her father that he persists for while wandering through the woods one day the girl is attacked by a brutal woodsman. Winthrop goes to her rescue and, after an exhausting struggle, succeeds in hurling the girl's assailant over the edge of some cliffs. Then there is a woodland wedding, for Ward can no longer refuse the request of Winthrop. Even the recluse realized that, in all justice, the heart and hand of Dorothy belonged to the brave man who saved her from death or from a fate far worse than death.

THE MATCHMAKERS (Three parts—May 2).—The cast: Mamie Lane (Sallie Crute); Pa Lane (William Wadsworth); Hugh Hardy (Carlton King); Bertie Van Loon (Paul Bliss); Alice Warren (Margaret Prussing); Aunt Catherine DeLauncy (Leonora Von Ottinger); Mr. Van Loon (Robert Brower); Mrs. Van Loon (Mrs. Wallace Erskine). Author, William Addison Lathrop. Producer, George Ridgwell.

Mamie is the daughter of Pa Lane, postmaster and keeper of the general store in a little mining town. Hugh loves Mamie and Mamie loves Hugh, so when Hugh wants to go prospecting Pa Lane naturally is willing to grub stake him. Hugh promises to divide his gold with Pa Lane—providing, of course, that he makes a strike. While these momentous events, to Mamie and Hugh, are taking place in the West, the aristocratic Van Loons in New York are wondering how they ever are going to get out of the condition of penury to which they have been reduced. Work—horrors, no! who ever heard of a Van Loon working? Their only hope lies in their son Bertie, who might be married to some wealthy young girl if a campaign in this direction was properly conducted. But dear little Bertie is not what his name implies. He really has a heart and he loves a girl—a poor girl, it is true, but, nevertheless, he loves her. Then, the newspapers announce that Hugh has made a fortune, and, true to his word, divided it with Pa Lane. Reading this, Mrs. De Launcy has a rare experience—she is struck by a thought, Mamie Lane is her niece, so she invites Pa Lane to visit New York and bring his daughter. Pa, like all new millionaires in the West, makes the trip.

Dissatisfied with Bertie's love affair, and fearful that he will marry the girl he desires, Mrs. Van Loon pays the latter a visit and pictures in eloquent language the terrible things that inevitably happen to people who marry for love. So the poor girl, not wanting to wreck the career of the man she loves, agrees to give him up. This leaves a clear field for Mrs. Van Loon and she immediately lays plans to have her son marry the daughter of the wealthy mining man. But when Mamie arrives she thinks only of Hugh and Bertie continues to think only of Alice, and each of them soon realizes that the other is in love with someone else. Immediately they have a common interest—not to marry each other.

Pa Lane finally falls to the state of affairs that exist and he sends for Hugh to come from the West to New York. And then he makes a few other moves without consulting the elder Van Loons. As a result, Mamie marries Hugh and Bertie marries Alice. Mr. Van Loon makes some aristocratic objections but the sight of a blunt democratic 44-calibre gun silences him quickly. Then Pa Lane takes the two young couples back to the West and Bertie gets a good position in Hugh's gold mine. Pa Lane spends much of his time asserting that no Van Loon or any other fancy-named artistocrat can make a fool out of him—that is, him and his little gun.

THE REAL DR. KAY (One Part—May 3).—The cast: Dr. Kay (Guido Colucci); Adsom Claus (Raymond McKee); Mrs. Sickler (Mabel Dwight); Her Ward (Gladys Gane); Felice Terpsichore (Jesse Stevens); John Brown (William Ruge). Author, Webster Oliver. Director, Will Louis.

Dr. I. J. Kay visits Adsom Claus, a lawyer, at his office. Neither of them has had a case in ages, and both are down at the mouth and at the heels. Dr. Kay goes away and forgets his bag and Adsom Claus goes out in search of him, taking the bag so that he can return it. Mrs. Sickler has a billious attack and her niece hurries out for a physician. Along ambles Lawyer Claus with Dr. Kay's bag and Mrs. Sickler's ward thinks that he is a sure-enough M. D. To be sure, Adsom protests against going into the house, but when a rich lady's ward happens to be mighty pretty and when one happens to be mighty nearly broke—"Oh, well, I'll take a chance," says the lawyer. Of course he examines Mrs. Sickler and gives her medicine. And he's a mighty lucky fellow—this Adsom Claus. He gives the lady strychnine but he is fortunate enough to give her an overdose.

Meanwhile, the real Dr. Kay has returned to Adsom's office to get his bag and is in there when in wanders petite Felice Terpsichore, weight, 350 pounds net. She wants to divorce her hubby so Dr. Kay takes both her case and her money and tells her to come around some other time. Claus then comes in and they relate the experiences they have had. Adsom is preparing Felice's divorce case when in comes her husband, also seeking a divorce. Adsom is just about to take his case and his fee when he sees his wife. Then there is a lively mix-up. But what does this matter in the end when Dr. Kay marries the wealthy Mrs. Sickler; Adsom Claus weds the pretty and equally wealthy ward, and Felice keeps her little lambkin.

GERMS AND MICROBES (April 24).—The cast: Otto (Davy Don); His son (Raymond Duncan); Robbers (George Egan and Charles Leonard). Written and directed by Edwin McKino.

Colonel Otto's one fear is the dread of germs and microbes. He supplies himself with disinfectant which he uses constantly when eating, drinking, using the phone, handling money, etc. His son, Harold, is a sport and is in the bad graces of his father. On the day in question Harold returns from a cafe where he has spent his last dollar. To replenish his purse he meets the colonel and asks for more money, but is refused.

Picking up the newspaper he finds an article about germs which a crank has been sending people to scare them in order to get money. Harold gets an idea and proceeds to put his plan into execution by sending his father a germ letter, putting insect powder in the letter, which when opened flies over the person reading it. His father, who is very much afraid of germs, receives the letter on his birthday. His desk is filled with presents. One present is from an old comrade who sends him a German police dog. This the colonel orders the servant to put in the cellar. He then opens the letter. The powder flies over his clothing. He reads the following: "On opening this letter you have liberated about 2,000,000 healthy germs. You are without doubt inoculated by now. No doctor can save you. Send $5,000 to the old cave rock and I will send you my serum, which is the only thing that will cure you. Fail to heed this warning and you will be dead within six hours."

Otto is undecided what to do. Finally he picks up the phone and calls up the police station. As he is phoning two robbers relieve him of all his gifts, taking the fatal letter with them. They carry the booty to their den, but when they open the letter they read it and are scared. They decide to return the stolen goods, give him back the letter, and make him send enough money to buy serum for them also. Otto takes the money to the old cave place and returns to the house. When he is gone his son, Harold, and a friend take the money and proceed to the cafe for a good time. Otto and the two robbers in the meantime are waiting for the serum. The blackmailers never arrive. The robbers, not getting worse, decide it was a trick, steal the presents again and go back to their den, where they divide it. Otto hears the dog barking in the cellar, goes down, lets the dog smell the letter and the dog starts out, followed by Otto. The dog leads him to the cafe where he finds his son having a good time spending his money. He takes back the money. Then the dog leads him to the robbers' den, and Otto has them arrested.

PLAYTHINGS OF THE GODS (Three Parts—April 27).—The cast: John Raymond (Cecil Van Auker); Earl Raymond (Allan Forrest); Mrs. John Raymond (Adelaide Bronti); James Carlson (Sydney Deane); Claire Travers (Ruth Saville); Madeline Carlson (Evelyn Page); Tony (Walter Spencer). Written and directed by Captain Wilbert Melville.

John Raymond, millionaire, is of a dominant nature. Upon his son's marriage to his model, he disowns him completely. The young couple find it is not so easy to get along as they thought, for Earl has no great talent for painting. Earl finally gives under the strain of privation and Claire goes to Mr. Raymond for help, unknown to her husband. There she meets Mrs. Raymond, who gives her money. Raymond, coming in, finds Claire with the money, and, sending his wife out, accuses her of stealing it. He has her arrested and railroaded to jail.

Earl searches in vain for his wife, finally going to his house in hopes of news. There Mrs. Raymond tells him of Claire's visit. Raymond, entering, takes the boy aside and tells him that she came for money, and, getting it, went away. Bewildered, believing his wife left him, Earl continues the search for awhile, finally giving it up in despair and returning home.

Claire, released, goes home to find her husband gone. She goes to Raymond's house to find him and demand to see Mrs. Raymond. She enters through the open window of the room and gets a glimpse of a man leaving. Earl and some friends entering the room a few minutes later, find Raymond dead and Claire, horrified, holding a bloody paper-cutter in her hand. She proclaims her innocence, and the shock sends her into a fever, during which she tells of her term in prison.

At the trial Claire still maintains that she is innocent, stating she saw a man there. Suddenly she sees in the audience the face of the man she saw in the drawing room. It is Carlson, the secretary. During the excitement Carlson comes to the stand and admits his guilt. He tells then of Raymond ruining his daughter Madelaine, and of the fight in Raymond's house, where he killed him in self-defense.

LOVE AND BULLETS (April 29).—The cast: Captain Gunn (George Clarke); Hector Timid (Francis Joyner); Mr. Wiseman (John Sherman); Fred Thornton (Kempton Greene); Louisa Gunn (June Daye); Chatter, her maid (Adelaide Hayes). Written and directed by Clay M. Greene.

Louisa Gunn is appraised by her domineering old father, Captain Gunn, a retired army officer, that she has reached a marriageable age, and he insists upon selecting a husband for her himself. But she had been for some time accustomed to meet a young man of her own choice, Frederick Thornton, with the aid and connivance of her maid, Chatter, who generally managed to have him concealed somewhere about. The Captain's choice of a husband was liberal enough in that he gave her two to choose from: one, Hector Timid, a gentle, nervous, absent-minded man of middle age, and the other, Wiseman, a corpulent individual, whose only requirement for a wife was that she must be a home body. At last the old man insisted on a decision and Louisa promised to make it.

In an interview with Mr. Timid she developed a disposition so irascible and catty that he would not have married her for worlds, and to Mr. Wiseman she showed inclinations so fast and sporty that he, too, balked. This so angered the old Captain that he plunged the entire household into a turmoil by deciding to fight them both, and all hurried to the field of honor. Here was Frederick's chance, and he drove terror into the hearts of the two dead shot duellists by offering to fight all. At the first fire Frederick fell to the ground before the pistol of the intrepid Timid. As a dying request he asked that he be permitted to marry Louisa, a proposition which was agreed to. Then it transpired that the whole duel was a fake, that Timid was not a murderer, and that young women will select their own husbands in spite of domineering parents.

THE BUCKSHOT FEUD (May 1).—Written and directed by Edwin McKim.

Don, a lawyer in a mountain town, has the distinction of winning the first and only case tried in the town. It happens that a feud breaks out between two families. The leader has been arrested and is on trial for his life. Don has been selected to defend him. The court room is crowded and Don is making a good defense when he is shot at by the friends of the other family. Don is scared to death, he refuses to be made a target and is about to give up the case when the defendant's friends point a revolver at him. Don suddenly changes his mind and proceeds with the trial. After many funny situations the Judge charges the Jury and they file out. We then see the Jurymen in a saloon drinking. When the verdict of "Not Guilty" is announced the friends of the opposing feudists preceed to shoot up the court.

THE CANDLE (Two Parts—May 2).—The cast: James Carr (L. C. Shumway); Hugh Bancroft (Melvin Mayo); Art Evans (George Routh); Jim, a mechanic (Jay Morley); Dick and Jimmy, crooks (Robert Gray and J. J. Colby); Sue (Helen Eddy); The Old Woman (Grace Eddy); The Old Woman's Son (Julian Lamothe). Written by Maude Thomas and Julian Lamothe. Directed by Leon D. Kent.

James Carr, a young author, is working by candle light on his latest book in a shack on the mountain side. He puts in a supply of new candles, and goes out for a walk. While he is gone, a youth steals into the cabin, lights one of the candles, and puts poison in a decanter on the table. Hearing Carr outside, the youth hastily extingushes the candle, and hides in the next room. When Carr finds that the candle has been lit already, he knows someone was there in his absence. He sees the youth behind some boxes, and nonchalently goes to the table, where he pours himself a glass of wine, meanwhile procuring his revolver. Just as he is about to raise the glass to his lips, the youth shoots it from his hand. He has discovered that Carr is not the man!

Carr rises excitedly. The youth stands in the doorway, limply holding a revolver. He says, "You're not Bancroft!" Carr answers that Bancroft's shack is half a mile down the mountain. The youth rushes to the door, but Carr seizes him. There is a struggle in which the lights are extinguished. When Carr lights them again, he sees the flowing tresses of a girl before him, for the youth is Sue, a young woman in man's clothing. Carr asks her to tell her story. She shows him a letter reading, "Bring five thousand dollars to my shack on the mountain to-night, or I will tell your husband everything." The note came from Bancroft, known as Shiro, the Hypnotist.

Three years before he met her, and acquired hypnotic influence over her, she traveled over the country with him, not knowing that he was also the leader of a gang of pickpockets. They were playing in a small town hall one night, and between the acts Bancroft gave her a brooch, which she recognized as one belonging to a woman in the audience. She accused Bancroft of stealing it, and threatened to expose him. Then the woman discovered her loss, but Bancroft concealed the loot on Sue, and compelled her by his strange influence, to admit that she was guilty. She was sent to prison, while Bancroft went free.

After serving her term, she had a hard struggle for existence until she met Jim, a young mechanic. When she read one day that Bancroft was dead, she listened to Jim's words of love, and married him, thinking her past was buried. But only that morning she received the threatening letter from Bancroft, and not having the money, she went out to kill him. The candle on the table has burned down as Sue related her story.

She concludes by saying that like the candle, her life is finished. She is about to drain the poison when Carr tells her to look at the candle carefully. It is of the kind used for the dead! And then he tells her how he bought some candles from an old woman that day, and later discovered that she stole them from a cabin down the mountain, where Bancroft lay dead, killed by the old woman's son in a gambling brawl. When Sue hears this, she throws the poisoned wine out of the window, and rushes out gladly into the night.

NONE SO BLIND (Three Parts—May 4).—The cast: Lieut. Fred Watson (Walter Spencer); Gladys Remington (Evelyn Page); Mrs. Remington (Adelaide Bronti); Ukana, a Hawaiian Belle (Princess Nona Darkfeather); Milton Hessor (Cecil Van Auker); Madge (Ruth Saville). Written by C. A. Frambers. Directed by Melvin Mayo.

Lieutenant Fred Watson, U. S. N., is assigned a position as Inspector of Machinery at the plant of Sunset Shipbuilding Company to supervise the construction of a submarine being built for the Government. Watson warns Hesser, president of the company, that the submarine must measure up to the plans and specifications in every particular. When the submarine is finally completed, Watson gives it a thorough test and as a result writes Hesser advising him that certain changes will have to be made before he will approve the vessel. Hesser bribes Madge, Watson's stenographer, to rewrite the first page of Watson's letter in such a form that it will look as though Watson had offered to approve the submarine providing Hesser gave him $25,000.

A Court of Inquiry is formed to hear Hesser's charges and as Madge has destroyed the original copy of the letter, substituting the forged one, Watson is unable to prove his innocence and resigns from the service under a cloud. Madge living in luxury upon Hesser's bounty, has kept the note-book containing the original letter, and armed with this, goes one day to his office demanding money. There she sees an invitation from Gladys Remington inviting Hesser to a ball. This enrages her and she tells him that she has the evidence to reinstate Watson and incriminate him. Gladys, having an appointment with Hesser for luncheon, arrives at the office as Watson tries to get the book from Madge and overhears the argument. She goes in and finally persuades Madge to go with her to the Superintendent and tell the true story. The superintendent assures the girls of Watson's reinstatement as soon as the true facts are submitted to Congress for action.

Meanwhile Watson has drifted down the scale of life in Hawaii. He is the means of rescuing Ukana, a Hawaiian belle, from some rough character and the girl gradually leads him back to decency. Fred realizing that she loves him and all he owes her, resolves to marry her. The wedding day is set and preparations started. Mrs. Remington and a party of friends arrive on the Island the day of the wedding festivities. Fred postpones the wedding to Ukana for that day and promises Gladys to take dinner with her on the yacht that night. A crowd of beachcombers have seen the yachting party and decide to rob the yacht that night. Ukana overhears their plans and realizing her lover is on board swims to the vessel to warn him. She is just in time and the pirates are repulsed, but Ukana is mortally wounded in the fight and dies in Fred's arms—her last request being that he kiss her. Fred learns of his vindication and goes back to start life anew.

FATHER'S NIGHT OFF (May 6).—The cast: Marie (June Daye); Banks (James Cassidy); Corbin (Francis Joyner); His wife (Eleanor Blanchard); Her brother (Hollins Antrim); Corbin's friend (Kempton Greene). Written by A. R. Lloyd. Directed by Clay M. Greene.

On the same day that his wife employs a new butler, Corbin decides to take a night out. That evening Mrs. Corbin's out-of-town brother, Jack ,arrives for a visit. Marie, the maid, goes to a masque ball, which Mrs. Corbin and Jack later attend as spectators. The sensation of the evening is the dancing of a certain couple, which is none other than Corbin and Marie, neither of which guesses the other's identity.

Banks, the new butler, being in love with Marie and jealous, follows her to the ball, and having recognized her, assaults her partner when the latter seems to be getting too fresh, little dreaming that in so doing he has given his new master a black eye. Corbin is the last to reach home from the ball, and is called to explain his disfigurement. This he does in a manner that reflects great credit to himself. He interrupts his narative to go into the adjoining room to discharge Banks, whom he sees and recognizes. Marie overhears, and hastily putting back on her masquerade costume, confronts her irate master, and by threatening to expose him, to retain Banks. Returning to his wife, Corbin continues the tale of his adventure. When he has finished, Mrs. Corbin calls him a brave hero, while out in the other room, Marie murmurs a like sentiment to Banks.

RED FEATHER.

DR. NEIGHBOR (Five Parts—May 1).—The cast: Dr. Joel Samson (Hobart Bosworth); Hazel Rogers (Dorothy Davenport); Christine Hall (Gretchen Lederer); Hamilton Powers (Emory Johnson); Morgan Keith (Charles Hickman); Mrs. Preston (Adele Farrington); Mrs. Albert Rhodes (Margaret Whistler). Written by Agnes Hay. Produced by L. B. Carleton.

Hazel Rogers, a young girl eighteen years old and heiress in her own right to millions through the death of her father, falls in love with Hamilton Powers, the District Attorney. Powers is cold, calculating, indifferent, wrapped up in his law; attentive to Hazel, but in love with Christine, a trained nurse and a school friend of Hazel's and she, too loves Powers.

Hazel's mother, Mrs. Albert Rogers, lives with Hazel. Dr. Joel Samson, the famous surgeon, forty-two years old—warm hearted, upright, respected—loves Hazel, who is his ward. He is guardian of her millions until her twenty-first birthday, and in the event of her death, previous to her twenty-first birthday, sole heir to her estate.

Hazel eventually marries Powers, very much against the wish of Dr. Samson, with the usual result—Powers failing in his request to Dr. Samson to obtain the management of Hazel's money, becomes morbid, indifferent, cold to Hazel and after a few months of married life he leaves her in her magnificent home on Long Island and goes to New York City to better practice his law.

Mrs. Preston and Morgan Keith, two hangers-on, are at this time visiting Hazel in her home. One day Powers comes down from town and sees Hazel have a scene. Hazel, desperate, goes out alone for a spin in her auto. Driving too fast, she meets with an accident and is thrown violently out. Her back is fractured. She is brought home a helpless, hopeless invalid. Her suffering is intense.

Dr. Neighbor attends Hazel. Christine nurses her. One night in her agony she begs Dr. Neighbor to put her out of her misery. Christine, heartbroken, and almost distracted with love and agony for her suffering friend, administers an overdose of morphine. Hazel never awakens. Dr. Neighbor finds the hypo needle which Christine has left on the table. He puts it in his pocket. He knows.

Powers' dislike of Dr. Neighbor causes him to investigate, and the doctor is accused. Dr. Neighbor keeps silent. At the trial Christine confesses all and Dr. Neighbor is freed. Dr. Neighbor later gives his life for a patient.

A MEETING FOR A CHEATING (April 19).—The cast: The Husband (Billie Ritchie); The Real Burglar (Dan Russell).

Billie was rather proud of his wife's jewels and warned her repeatedly about leaving them lie so carelessly around, but without impressing her. Billy decides to have a friend play the part of a burglar so he writes a note to him, but is careless enough to let his wife get hold of the note.

Unfortunately, that night a real burglar breaks into the house. Bill's friend was late, so Bill himself decides to play the part of burglar. Soon the three are working around the house, dodging each other. The police arrive, but do not catch the real culprit until after some wildly exciting chases over the roof, down chimneys, etc. Bill and his friend have an exciting time proving their identity. But all ends well for them and the real burglar is carted off to a cell.

THE BANKRUPTCY OF BOGGS AND SCHULTZ (May 3).—The cast: Mr. Boggs (Ray Griffth); Mr. Schultz (Dick Smith); The Stenographer (Anna Darling); New Stenographer (Alice Howell); the Janitor (Phil Duncan).

Boggs and Schultz were too suspicious to have ever entered into a partnership with anyone. They quarreled over the service of the stenographer, they even split the combination of the safe—one having the first half and the other the remaining half. This worked a hardship on collectors who had to wait for the two partners to be in before they could receive any money.

They made a sad mistake by letting the janitor get familiar with them, as he was a bad character and on finding they had discharged the old stenographer he immediately gets busy and gets a confederate to help him rob the company. Both partners, however, fall so strongly for the new Jane that they were going to rob the safe and elope with her.

The dates each made were conflicting. Both determined to rob the safe at midnight. The janitor and his sweetheart were there, but Mr. Schultz arrived too, and they had to seek safety in the old safe. Mr. Boggs arrived about this time, so the occupants of the safe had some time, with Boggs drilling holes on one side and Schultz dynamiting on the other.

MR. BUDDY BRIGGS, BURGLAR (May 7).—The cast: The Husband (Dave Morris); the Wife (Eva Nelson); Clubman (Reggie Morris); the Maid (Gertrude Selby).

Mr. Briggs was a flirty old bird and almost got into serious trouble by trying to flirt with his friend's wife at the table. He slipped said wife a note belittling her husband who took a poke at Mr. Briggs' nose and then departed in high dudgeon.

Mr. Briggs, undaunted by his failure in this direction, turns his attention to the maid and is caught by Mrs. Briggs, who unceremoniously discharges the maid. Just at this moment a telegram arrives for Mrs. Briggs stating that her father has suffered a severe injury and requesting his little daughter to hurry to his bedside.

Mr. Briggs immediately sees a great opportunity for a good time and before his wife can get out of the house he has telephoned to his club and requested a few friends to come over and join him in a celebration. Wife arrives at the station and is handed a telegram stating that an error had been made. She thereupon starts back home. In the meantime Mr. Briggs has been joined by his friends, and they are having one great time when wife arrives home. One of the party knew what a temper she had so he immediately hid under a bed, not knowing that it was Mrs. Briggs' room. So while Briggs was busy getting the others out, wife discovers the clubman under her bed and lets out a lusty scream.

Mr. Briggs, ever ready, came to her immediate assitance and thought fast. Under the bed he went and disguised his friend as a burglar and hustled him off for the law to deal with, said law being a cafe where they were joined by some other friends in a glorious good time. But murder will out and the resentful friend of the early morning, discovering Mr. Briggs in such company, telephones immediately to Mrs. Briggs, who comes on the run with a large cleaver. She soon has the cafe in a turmoil with her chasing Mr. Briggs around the place. It cost Mr. Briggs a pretty penny to square himself.

IMP.

WHEN SLIM WAS HOME CURED (May 2.)—The cast: Mr. Slim (Victor Potel); Mrs. Slim (Jane Bernoudy); Dr. Hippo (Ed. Sedgwick); the Maid (Babe Sedgwick). Written and produced by Roy Clements.

Mr. Slim, denied "liberty and the pursuit of happiness" by his militant wife, relates his domestic difficulties to his friend, Dr. Hippo, and seeks his advice as to how to correct them.

Dr. Hippo, after trying to persuade the cowed Slim to assert his divine rights, explains what amnesia is and how it frequently develops a dual personality in the one afflicted, the resulting personality being the very opposite of the normal self of the one afflicted.

Slim quickly "gets the idea," and Dr. Hippo, after bandaging Slim's head, escorts him home, and informs Mrs. Slim that Slim has met with an accident; that amnesia has developed, and that Slim must be humored or he is likely to become dangerous. Slim, feigning his "other self," starts in on the one merry period of his life, and gratifies all of his previously denied desires.

Mrs. Slim, frightened at some of Slim's stunts, flees panicstricken to Dr. Hippo's office, but fails to find that eminent medical authority.

Awaiting Dr. Hippo's return. Mrs. Slim discovers a treatise on amnesia and makes the interesting discovery that "often another blow on the same spot as the one causing the original injury restores the patient to his normal condition." Mrs. Slim decides on a "home cure" and lands on Slim with the family hammer until Slim admits he is cured.

WON WITH A MAKE-UP (May 4).—The cast: The Leading Man (King Baggott); the Deacon (Frank Smith); Josephine, his daughter (Edna Hunter). Scenario written by Elliott H. Robinson. Produced by Henry Otto.

The members of a moving picture company, including William King, a handsome leading man, arrive at a small town to get some "snow stuff." The deacon's daughter, Josephine, on her return from boarding school, arrives on the same train and her father meets her at the depot. Presently Josephine sees the moving picture actors, and becomes greatly interested in the leading man, who piles on a sled with the other fellow actors as they drive off to the village inn. The deacon catches Josephine flirting with the handsome leading acting man and tells her to beware of actors. At home Josephine learns the identity of the actor in looking over a magazine devoted to the picture industry. Later in the day the director of the company, in search of a location, obtains consent from Josephine to take a scene in front of the Deacon's gate. When the Deacon sees the rehearsal in progress he rushes out and drives the actors away. But King and Josephine have fallen in love with each other, and plan to circumvent the Deacon. King makes up as a city doctor with the indispensable pointed beard, and is abetted in love's conspiracy both by the leading woman of the company, who makes up as a professional nurse, and the landlord of the inn.

Josephine at home pretends to be very ill, and her father proposes to send for Dr. Smith, the village physician, but she protests that her case is too serious to be trifled with, and suggests that there might be a city doctor stopping at the hotel. The minister calls the hotel on the wire and learns that there is a city doctor there. King is told and he and the leading woman, arrayed as nurse, are soon on the way to the Deacon's house.

Upon arriving King sends the Deacon and his wife out of Josephine's room under the pretext that the case is so serious that the patient must be left alone with the nurse and himself for forty minutes. After the anxious parents have retired to the living room, Josephine undergoes a record-breaking recovery, and pulls her suit case, previously packed, from under the bed. It is apparent that an elopement is under way, as we next see King, Josephine and the nurse making a hasty exit through the window into the street.

Finally the Deacon listens at the keyhole of Josephine's bedroom and, failing to hear voices inside, opens the door and rushes into the room where he finds a note from Josephine stating that she is to be married to the leading man before taking the train to the city and asking her parents' forgiveness.

JUST KITTY (May 5).—The cast: Judge Wright (Willis Granger); George Jennings (Curtis Benton); Clara Howard (Sydell Dowling); Kitty (Edith Roberts); Buster (Lois Alexander). Written by A. E. Bergh. Produced by Robert F. Rill.

Judge Wright tells his nephew, Geo. Jennings, that late hours and sporting companions will never make a good lawyer. The next day the Judge attends a board meeting at the orphanage. A number of the children who have reached the age limit are given in charge to kindly disposed persons. Kitty and Buster, her little protege, are standing close to the Judge. The Judge drops his pen and all the children rush to pick it up, but Kitty gets there first and hands it to him. The Judge thanks her and he asks her what her name is and she replies "Kitty." He says "Kitty what?" and she answers, "Just Kitty." The Judge obtains consent of the orphanage committee to adopt the two children.

The scene then shifts to the apartment of Clara Howard. George enters and gives her money to pay some pressing bills. He tells her he has a scheme to get her into his uncle's home in the guise of a governess. Clara, who is an adventuress consents to apply for the position. After Clara has been installed as governess, she meets George late at night in the library by appointment. He shows her a number of promissory notes that cannot be renewed and tells her she must assist him to rob the safe in the wall back of the picture hanging near the fireplace in the library.

Kitty and Buster hear a noise and arouse the Judge, who takes a pistol and goes down to the library. There he sees a man at the safe and commands him to hold up his hands. The Judge is astounded to find that the culprit is his own nephew, and orders him out of the house. Meanwhile Clara has been able to escape from the library and without being seen by the Judge and Kitty. Fearing that his uncle will now disinherit him, George plans to prevent him from making a new will. So the next day he phones to Clara to meet him at four o'clock at the garage.

Kitty, who is hiding behind the library curtains, overhears what Clara says over the phone. She then rushes to the station house. The sergeant tells Dick Blake, from the Central office, to accompany the girl, and Dick leaves the station house with a dictagraph under his arm. Arrived at the garage, Dick hides the dictagraph in a corner and runs the wires to the chauffeur's room on the floor just above. George arrives at the garage at four o'clock and describes to Clara how he proposes to get rid of the Judge. Meanwhile Dick is making notes of their conversation which is duly recorded by the dictagraph.

That evening we see George forcing his way through the window of the Judge's room. There is a puff of smoke and we see a body move in the bed. The door opens and Clara forces Kitty to enter ahead of her. George forces a pistol into Kitty's hand to fasten on her the supposed murder of her benefactor. At this point the Judge and Dick enter from a closet where they have concealed themselves. George tries to escape through the window, but Dick catches him, and slips a pair of handcuffs over his wrists. The Judge, however, requests Dick to remove the handcuffs and orders his nephew and accomplice to get out and leave the country, telling them that they can both thank Kitty for saving them from prison

LAEMMLE.

THE THIEF OF THE DESERT (May 5).—The cast: Ali Ben (Val Paul); Zoradi (Myrtle Gonzalez); Hassan Bey (Walter Belasco); Enver Kahn (Fred Church); Said Shrad (Wm. Crinley). Written and produced by Lynn Reynolds.

Ali Ben was on his annual pilgrimage to Mecca. Ali Ben is accompanied by his daughter, Zoradi, whom he expects to sell to a Turkish merchant at Mecca. This arrangement is not at all welcome to Zoradi, as she has met this merchant before, and found him to be a coarse, fat, old man. She remonstrates with her father for selling her, and in reply to her complaint he tells her that the merchant, being wealthy, can furnish her with the silks and fine clothes fitting to her beauty.

Ali Ben and Zoradi camp near a water hole in the desert. In another part of the sandy waste two camel thieves are dividing their loot. One of them takes the larger share, and the two quarrel. Said Shrad thinks he has been tricked in the transaction and warns his partner, Enver Khan, that their next meeting will be a "fight to the death." Enver rides away disdainfully.

Later that evening, as the girl goes to the water hole, she sees Enver riding by and is much taken with his manly bearing. She watches him in admiration and does not notice Said sneaking upon him. He tries to kill Enver, without success. Enver, in turn, disarms him and throws him into the water hole. As he turns around to leave, Enver discovers the girl watching him with admiration, but she hastily sets out for the camp. He pursues her, but as he reaches camp the girl's father comes out threatening to shoot and drives him away.

That night, Zoradi dreams of her gallant cavalier, and offers up a prayer that she will be rescued from the marriage with the fat merchant. She wanders out on the desert, nearby. Enver, meanwhile, has slipped to the tent and discovers the girl is gone. Her father is peacefully snoring, and he decides to steal the camel. The girl sees him prowling around, and, stealthily creeping up behind him, places the dagger against his face and tells him to let the camel alone. She then asks him why he would stoop to steal a camel when it was just as easy to steal herself. He takes her at her word and, placing her on his horse, makes haste to leave the vicinity. Ali Ben wakes at sunrise and discovers his daughter gone, and thinks that what has happened is the will of Allah. Enver Kahn and the girl ride into the brightening day, happy in each other's love.

THE MARRIAGE OF ARTHUR (Two Parts—May 7).—The cast: Arthur Bates (Rupert Julian); Agatha Grey (Elsie Jane Wilson); Fritz (C. de Vidal Hundt); Batt's Friend (Hal Cooley). Written and produced by Rupert Julian.

Arthur Bates spends his time with wine, women and song. Arthur's lawyer calls upon him one day bringing the sad news of the death of his uncle and tells him that his uncle's entire estate has been left to him. Arthur is very much pleased at the old man's death, but finds cause for complaint when he finds that one of the provisions of the will is that he must marry Agatha Grey. This does not fall in with his plans, but, however, rather than lose the fortune, he determines to throw himself away on Miss Grey.

The parents of Miss Grey find the young man very pleasing and the wedding day is hurried forward. Soon after the ceremony, Arthur and his wife leave the home of her parents and start housekeeping for themselves.

With the accession of wealth, Arthur finds it much more pleasant to enjoy the forbidden fruit of the great white way than to stay at home with his wife. The girl is very lonely as a result, but nevertheless writes home that she is happy.

To commemorate his newly-found inheritance, Arthur gives a big party and refuses to allow his wife to attend. The maid finds a woman's slipper in Arthur's pocket and naturally tells his wife. She also tells the wife that all her husband cares for is amusement, and confronted by the evidence of the slipper, the wife is forced to believe. She determines to follow Arthur and watch him.

Arthur and his friends are having a big time at the party when his wife comes in and takes a table nearby. He does not know her in the becoming clothes she is wearing, but when the other men notice her, he recognizes her as his wife. While Arthur did not care for his wife at home, he becomes very jealous when he sees her surrounded by other men. He goes to her table and in his rage starts to choke her, but she shows him the slipper and he realizes that she has been found out. The two become reconciled and Arthur promises that their home will be a happy one in the future.

NESTOR.

HER HERO MAID (May 1).—The cast: Leading Man (Lee Moran); the "Peach" (Billie Rhodes); Her Mother (Stella Adams); Mr. Simps (Neal Burns). Scenario by A. E. Christie. Directed by Horace Davey.

At the last performance of the season the leading man is attracted by the appearance of a "peach," sitting in the audience. The "peach" notices the handsome man and immediately falls in love with him.

The next day Billie's mother sends her down town to advertise for a maid, as the regular girl has left. While she is in the store Lee comes in and recognizes her as the "peach." He learns from the clerk that the girl is advertising for a maid. The girl recognizes the handsome leading man and on the way home buys one of his portraits. Lee has had quite a bit of experience in female impersonations, and decides to try for the job of maid.

Out of many applicants he is selected by the mother, and immediately starts his duties. The maid's service is satisfactory. Billie confides her admiration for the handsome leading man to the maid and is surprised by the sudden affection of the aid, displayed toward her. The butler tries to flirt with the maid and receives a jolt and tells the other servants that the new maid has an awful punch.

Mr. Simps was a rich young man and a persistent caller at the house of the "peach." While mother had favored him to a certain extent, Billie detested him but was unable to get rid of him. Shortly after the new maid takes charge, Mr. Simps pays a visit and becomes very affectionate towards Billie. Her calls for help reach the maid and he goes to her assistance, takes Mr. Simps by the collar and deposits him out in the yard. They all compliment the maid on her wonderful strength.

The maid learns of Billie's plans and when he is off duty sneaks home and then changes to his regular clothes and meets the girl. While she is bashful at first, the two finally become very chummy and spend several happy evenings in the park. At last Lee decides to remove his disguise at the house instead of his hotel, and is seen entering the room dressed in man's clothes. Billie's mother thinks he is a burglar and calls a policeman. They all go into the room and Lee is discovered dressing in the clothes of the maid. The deception is found out and while the mother is angry at first she decides that there is some excuse for his devotion because he was willing to do the duties of a maid in order to be nearer the girl he has admired.

LEM'S COLLEGE CAREER (Two Parts—May 5).—The cast: Lem (Eddie Lyons); Mary (Betty Compson), Rollin (Lee Moran); His College Chum (Neal Burns). Written and produced by Al. E. Christie.

Mary and Lem are sweethearts. Mary is a farmer's daughter and Lem the owner of Bar 3 Ranch. They are happy until one day Mary's mother gets a letter from some city friends accepting an invitation to be present at her son's return from college. Rollin, the college boy, takes leave of his father with a parting warning regarding the West, but Rollin refuses his father's gun, assuring him that the West is now as calm and civilized as the college city.

He arrives in the small farm town and to the dismay of all the cowboys and Lem succeeds in making a great impression on Mary and her family. A dance is later given in his honor and he attires himself in full dress for the occasion and is the idol of the whole barn. Every girl in the place, including Mary, is his for the asking, and Lem and the rest of the cowboys don't have a look-in. As time goes on Lem broods over his misfortune and when his Wednesday evening for calling on Mary rolls around the boys have to coax him to go, as he feels he has lost all chances. He finally gets as far as her front porch, where he hears soft music and witnesses his sweetheart's departure with his rival for a lovers' stroll in the woods. This dashes out his last hopes and he returns to the cowboys most unhappy.

They decide to take a hand and proceed to give poor Rollin a royal western trouncing, much to his discomfiture and pain, and the next day he makes a hurried departure for the East and peace. Mary is broken-hearted and Lem over-joyed, thinking he may again renew their engagement, but Mary informs him that her future husband must have a college education.

Lem leaves for college and lands in the hands of his enemies. He discovers he is attending the same college as Mary's city friend, Rollin, and the latter plans that he will now get even. College days are rough ones and the boys play many pranks on Lem, but he has his ever-ready gun and succeeds most of the time in getting away all whole. Finally he tires of the gay life and decides that if he must do without

Mary, it is better than to go through the misery of college education. He jumps a freight train with the boys in pursuit and finally arrives in his little home town and is given a royal welcome by all the cowboys.

Later, when he is sufficiently recovered from his many bruises and aches, he dresses in his best suit and sallies forth to meet the worst, for he feels Mary is no longer his, as his education has been brief. But glad tidings await him and Mary is so very glad to see him that she tells him she will marry only him.

JOKER.

A PERFECT MATCH (May 6).—The cast: Old Man Butts (Charles Conklin); Anastasia (Gale Henry); Herman Schultz (William Franey); Archibald Vanderloop (Milburn Moranti); Fortune Teller (Lillian Peacock). Written and produced by Roy Clements.

Old Man Butts, president and owner of an oat-meal factory, was noted for his lovely disposition. Anastasia, his daughter, was the old man's sole heir, and her suitors were numbered by the score. Herman Schultz was father's choice of the visitors but Anastasia had a mind of her own, and had chosen as her suitor Archibald Vanderloop. Archibald, with an eye to father's millions, opened a tonsorial parlor in the town, to be near his lady love.

He was addicted to the use of musk, as it was the badge of his profession. One evening during a brilliant concert, Archibald, absent-mindedly, pulls out his bottle of musk and sprays himself. Father smells the musk and thinks it is some new kind of disinfectant. He at once comes to the conclusion that the crowd is infected with some contagious disease and there is a general house cleaning. The guests are dumped outside and father begins to fumigate the house. Father accuses Archibald of being the one who has caused all the trouble. The next day Anastasia snubs Herman. She makes a date with Archibald to visit a fortune teller.

Herman visits the fortune teller's booth and learns some of the trade. He persuades the fortune teller to allow him to write the answers, then the two come in to have their fortunes told. After he has presented her with a sum of money she consents. The fortune teller tells them that she can only tell the fortune of one at a time and Anastasia is taken in first. Her fortune is told, and the answers written upon a slate. Herman is handling the answering, and he writes that the barber already has a wife and that her true lover is a little man with a moustache. In reply to another question he writes: "Feed your lovers with biscuits and watch them. The one who eats the biscuits will be your 'true lover.'" Anastasia leaves and Archibald takes her place. In reply to his questions, Herman tells him that Anastasia has already poisoned three lovers and that he will be the fourth. He also states that she has just put poison in her biscuits.

Of course, neither of them believes in fortune telling, but in thinking over the matter they become suspicious of each other. Arriving at the house, Anastasia decides to test the fortune teller's predictions and brings in a nice plate of biscuits to Archibald. Herman sneaks up to the window and peeps in. Before he thinks, Archibald takes a biscuit and starts to eat it. He suddenly thinks of the fortune teller's prediction and throws the biscuit from him with horror.

Anastaisa believes that the prediction was true and Archibald was merely trifling with her affections. She orders him out of the house. Herman comes in at this opportune moment, sees the plate of biscuits and immediately proceeds to demolish them. Anastasia believes that her true lover has been found and goes to the waiting arms of Herman, while Archibald hurries away congratulating himself on his narrow escape from poisoning.

BIG U.

THE BELOVED LIAR (Three Parts—May 4).—The cast: Carl Varden (Thomas Jefferson); Mary Quinby (Joe Bech); Mrs. Quinby (Nanine Wright); Jackie (Buddie McQuoid); Mary Milbank (Marjorie Blinn); Jack Milbank (Frank Newberg), Scenario by Calder Johnstone. Produced by George Cochrane.

Carl Varden, first violinist of the National Opera Company, has for years lodged with Mrs. Quinby, occupying her attic. Her little daughter, Mary, is favored by the old musician and endeavors to become a singer. Old Carl adopts a little newsboy, and soon the little boy and girl become close friends. Carl loses his position and soon is in hard straits. Unable to secure another position, he resorts to street playing, deceiving his friends in the belief that he is working elsewhere.

Then follows the illness of Mrs. Quinby, ending in her death. The old violinist tries to care for both children, but the case is reported to a nearby clergyman, and thus it comes about that the children are adopted by a wealthy married couple.

For many years Carl has been working on an opera which however he is unsuccesful in selling. Some time after the children are taken from him he is forced to leave his old home. He refuses assistance from the Milbanks, and leaves the opera in his old trunk, together with a few toys of the children.

Some years elapse. The new landlord opens the old trunk, finds the opera and sells it for a small sum. Meantime the Milbanks have taken Jack and Mary abroad, and the girl follows her desire and in time becomes a professional singer. After attaining their majority they return to America, where Mary is to make her debut as prima donna, the Milbank fortune paving the way to her success. On their arrival they make an unsuccessful search for Carl.

Jack acts as Mary's manager and handles her publicity. The music dealer learns of her anxiety to secure a suitable vehicle in which to make her debut, and takes the old opera to her and sells it at a good profit. Mary recognizes portions of it and is convinced that it is the work of Carl.

The violinist returns to the city and visits his old home. He is permitted to open the old trunk, but on finding the opera gone, believes he has been defrauded. He falls back in a faint. On his person is found a business card of Mr. Milbank, with a request that he be notified in case of accident. Thus are Mary and Jack reunited with their old friend. Carl, in his delirium, does not recognize them, but Mary, on seeing her old harmonica and Jack's toy drum, plays a trick on Carl. They go into the outer hall and return, each playing on the instruments as they used to. Memories return to the violinist and in the place of the grown-up man and woman he sees again the little boy and girl and folds them to him. Later he recovers and receives a substantial sum of money for his opera, in which Mary makes a big "hit."

BISON.

THE LEAP (Two Parts—May 6).—The cast: Joseph Howard Gordon (Lee Hill); Alma May Kern (Rena Rogers); Duncan Gordon E. N. Wallick); John Kern (Marc Fenton); Charles Rush (L. C. Shumway); Foreman Clark (Robin Adair). Scenario by Harvey Gates. Produced by Henry McRae.

Duncan Gordon, a millionaire railroad man, has a son Joseph, who has had a good education but lately spends his time pleasure-seeking. In the round of festivities, he has met Alma May Kern, whose father is a large mine owner. Joe and Alma become good friends. Neither has met the parents of the other.

One day, as Kern and Gordon are going to town in separate automobiles, they have a collision and though a trivial one, it results in a fist fight. While the parents are trying to disable each other, their children are engaged quite diffierently. Joe has proposed and is accepted. He make an appointment with the girl the next day.

Gordon learns his son has been going with the daughter of Kern and orders him to cut off all relations with her. Kern, learning the same, takes similar measures.

In spite of their parents, they determine to see each other on all occasions, and next day are enjoying the pre-arranged dinner and laughing over the attitude of their fathers. Unknown to them and to each other, Gordon and Kern have come to the same restaurant for lunch and are seated very close. They hear their children making plans for the future, and a big scene results in which each parent takes his child and leaves.

Kern decides to send his girl to Europe. Gordon gives his son a substantial check and suggests he take a trip to Europe, not knowing that the girl is going too. Joe has a will of his own, and as he is a graduate railroad engineer, he tears up the check. He tells father that he intends to strike out for himself.

Joe and Alma arrange to correspond with each other under assumed names. Joe leaves for the West. Alma's father, learning of Joe's disappearance, decides the latter has gone to Europe, and sends his daughter out West to an aunt. Joe secures a position with the railroad in which his father is interested and works under the name of "Joe Howard."

Alma arrives at her destination and, disliking loafing, secures a job in the Star Mining Company, in which her father is interested, unknown to her. She learns that the Star Mining Company is tunneling under the property owned by Gordon. She sends a telegram to Mr. Gordon telling him of this and suggests he investigate. Gordon comes and Alma, hearing more of the crooked operations of the men in charge of the company, makes a copy of what she hears and mails it to Gordon.

Joe learns from a discharged miner that the Star company is tunneling in the other mine and, believing Kern does not know of this, wires him to come. Kern decides to investigate, and he brings a mining engineer with him. The man in charge, learning that Kern is on the way, determines to prevent the meeting between Kern and Gordon, as they know their illegal operations will not meet with the approval of either man.

Charles Rush, manager of the mine, determines to fix things so the trains will not meet. He gives the engineer and fireman of the East bound train a drink. Alma determines to return East and takes the train Rush intends to wreck. The engineer and fireman become unconscious and the train runs wild. Joe is working with his construction gang, and seeing the train rushing on realizes something is wrong and hurries to the track. Joe climbs the telegraph pole, balances himself on the wire until the train passes beneath and jumps on top, makes his way to the engine and stops the train.

The passengers learn of the miraculous escape they have had and Joe is overwhelmed with congratulations. Alma and Gordon, Sr., have become acquainted, but he does not know of her identity. The crooked manager of the company is arrested, and both Gordon and Kern send for "Joe Howard" to reward him. They are greatly surprised to discover that he is the son of one of them and almost the son-in-law of the other.

Realizing how unselfishly the son has worked for them, the two old men make up and the story ends happily.

GOLD SEAL.

THE PURPLE MAZE (Two Parts—May 2).—The cast: Lois (Stella Razeto); Lloyd Baxter (Juan De La Cruz); Cora (Gladys Brockwell); Borden (George Hernandez); Wright (Marc Fenton). Produced by Ed. J. Le Saint.

Lois, stenographer for Lloyd Baxter, a rising young attorney, is unconscious of the many pitfalls for unwary feet in the city, as she has lately come from the country. Opposite Baxter's suite is Bordon, a real estate operator. Cora, his stenographer, has already "played the game" with him and is worldly wise. She takes a liking to the little country girl and the two take rooms across the hall from each other in a moderate priced apartment house.

Lois has saven enough for the two to get theater tickets at a popular show and surprises Cora. Cora is surprised that a girl should do such a thing as to buy her own ticket and tells her she should "get in the game." While this is new to Lois she determines to improve somewhat and aided by the many feminine tricks and foibles, she "comes out."

Her employer is surprised and raises her salary on the spot. He realizes the beauty of the girl and how innocent she is. One day he has her take a package to a woman, who is in reality his mistress. Lois performs the errand and is much impressed by the luxury of the house and notices a picture of her employer. She resents the idea of this, but little realizes it is the stirring of love which resents the idea.

As time goes on, Baxter realizes how unworthy his action in keeping the woman is and begins to break away from her. He abruptly breaks off relations with the woman. The womanliness of his little stenographer appeals to him, and he realizes he loves her, but before making this known decides to become a man again.

Cora has a spat with her employer and leaves. She secures work with another man and accepts his attentions, as she really loves him. Baxter at last one day confesses his love for Lois. Before requesting her answer he tells her that he was a decent man before he got caught in "The Purple Maze," and like many other fellows took the easiest way. That night as Lois sits on the bed dreaming, Cora comes in distrait and sobbing. Lois consoles her and Cora confesses her wrong doing but states she really and truly loved the man, but he had done like the others and refused to marry her.

Lois consoles Cora to the best of her ability and Cora starts back to her room. She pleads with Lois to cut out the "game," as it isn't worth the effort, and as she leaves states she is going home.

Lois realizes how she might be led into the same path and writes her employer a note begging his forgetfulness and forgiveness. She sends the note by a boy. There is a commotion and shot in Cora's room. When the door is forced open her body is found stiffening in death. Lois crosses the hands of her friend and covers her face.

Baxter is in his room admiring a ring he has selected for Lois when the note reaches him. He is frantic when he reads it and hurries to Lois' home. As he comes in he is strangely moved by the sight of two men carrying out a silent form on a stretcher. His first thought is that it is Lois, and as he raises the cloth over the face of the occupant his hands violently tremble. Realizing it is not her his grief is great as he hurries to Lois' room.

At first Lois cannot face him, but finally looks up and realizes his love is true. The two find comfort in each others arms and she allows him to place the ring on her finger.

TRIANGLE PLAYS

Norma Talmadge in The Children in the House

Must a woman cling to a faithless husband? Must she continue to live with him and suffer the torture of unhappiness when he has proved himself unworthy of her love—has admitted his preference for another woman?

These are the vital questions in the TRIANGLE-Fine Arts Picture, "The Children in the House," released for the week of April 30th, in which Norma Talmadge, the popular star, is given every opportunity to display that versatile ability which won her fame and popularity.

Real Human Interest

With the possible exception of the war in Europe there is no other subject today so intensely interesting to your patrons as that of domestic relationship—divorce and marriage. So closely is this picture related to their own individual happiness that told in a TRIANGLE sort of way it should prove particularly attractive.

Men and women alike, married or single, all will be enthusiastic over the presentation of this story of the pretty young girl who turned love down to marry money only to realize her mistake after it was too late. The heart aches, the unhappiness, proved to her satisfaction at least that it is never worth while to marry without love.

TRIANGLE PLAYS

Full of Thrills Laughter and Tears

Many indeed are the varied scenes which furnish thrills, tears, joy and laughter to your audience in this latest TRIANGLE PLAY.

Take for instance the spectacle of the auto load of bank robbers plunging after a flying battle with the police over a steep precipice 300 feet high. Its occupants shot down one by one the car is seen to zigzag as it speeds along the mountain road. Then as a shot pierces the brain of the man at the wheel the machine takes one wide swerve, balances for a moment on the edge of the cliff, and then topples down the rocky declivity until it arrives at the bottom a mass of shattered and broken metal. The sight of the big car as it falls over the cliff to certain destruction is warranted to give every audience at least one gasp.

Then there's another thrill when the burglars capture the TRIANGLE kiddies, tie them in a hut for safe keeping, and in a fiendish moment decide to set the house afire. Your patrons will feel their hearts go down to their shoes as they watch the flames creep nearer and nearer to the struggling bodies. It's a race neck and neck between an automobile and the raging fire, and the machine wins just by a hair.

H. B. Warner in "The Beggar of Cawnpore"

The TRIANGLE-Ince Picture for the same week will be H. B. Warner in "The Beggar of Cawnpore." Warner gives a terribly convincing portrayal of a morphine-ridden wretch who sank from a handsome officer in a crack regiment to a half-crazed beggar in the crawling slums of a mysterious Oriental city. It is one of the swiftest, most amazingly picturesque screen dramas yet offered the public. If you are an exhibitor and are not running TRIANGLE PLAYS why not send in the attached for information in regard to their presentation?

THE GIRL WHO FEARED DAYLIGHT (Two Parts—May 3).—The cast: Mrs. Mayne and Mary, her daughter (Mary Fuller); Viola Dexter (Edna Pendleton); Frank Forrest (Clifford Gray); Bruce Hilton (Curtis Benton); Dreen (William Welch). Produced by Lucius J. Henderson.

Mary, a girl of eighteen, lives with her uncle, Dreen, in a cabin in the mountains. From her infancy she has been warned never to expose her eyes to the light of day else she will become blind. She has obeyed her uncle implicity by always remaining in a darkened room.

With a party of gay young people, Frank Forrest is spending a holiday at a luxurious hunting "camp" not far from the girl's cabin. Viola Dexter, a girl of millions, is in love with Frank, regarding the love making of Bruce Milton, of the same party, with indifference. Bruce plans to prevent Frank, who really does not care for Viola, from marrying her. On one of the hunting expeditions Bruce maneuvers until he separates from the rest of the party and, being carefully screened, fires at Frank. He merely wounds him in the shoulder. This sends Frank hurrying to Mary's cabin for aid. Her uncle is away on a long hunting trip. Mary bathes Frank's wound and binds it.

Under his persuasion Mary tells her life story and the reason she fears daylight. Years before in the same cabin lived her mother and father, the former ill and half-crazed, the latter prey to sudden heart attacks. The mother tries to revive him and then rushes to the door in the hope of seeing some chance of help. There is not a soul in sight. Nearly mad with grief the mother gets on her knees and blasphemes against the sun and the maker of it. Hours later Mary tells Frank, the men returned and found her mother in a faint across the threshold and her father dead. She explains that her mother, when her baby was born, swore that the child should never see daylight, and when on her death, Mary's uncle came, he, too, carried out the same vow. Frank determines to help her all he can. Frank calls upon Mary a number of times and soon falls in love with her. He tells her that he has arranged for an eye specialist to come and examine her.

Her uncle's hunting trip has come to an end and, burdened with game, he sits by his camp fire on the last night in the forest. He takes a flimsy document out of a stout envelope and pores over the contents. It is a crude form of will, evidently written by Mary's mother, entrusting her life's savings, three bonds, to her brother to be kept for Mary. There may be a reason, as Frank suspects, for the old man's idea in keeping Mary from the light. The uncle gloats over the three bonds, wondering how long Mary will live and keep them from being really his.

Next day the society people leave on a long tramp. Viola is disappointed because at the last minute Frank declares he must go to the village. In reality, it is to meet Dr. Trenchard, the eye specialist.

Meanwhile the uncle has returned, and learns that Mary's unusual happiness is due to the fact that Frank, whom she says is her lover, is due with an eye doctor. The uncle is insane with rage and dashes off to encounter Frank. They meet and the uncle's gun goes off, wounding him. The society people hear the gun go off. And Mary hears it louder than any one else. She snatches up a gun, flings the door open wide and stands for a second blinking, blinded by the sun. Then she goes off to save her lover.

The uncle has flung Frank from him. The doctor has long since been overcome. The big gun is aimed at Frank. Mary points her gun at the old man. But she does not have to kill him, for the tramping party breaks in upon the scene and save the situation. Dreen, now weak and mortally wounded, collapses as they support him. Mary flies to Frank's arms. Dying, the uncle is asked why he raised the girl in darkness. He says: "Starving for light, I thought she would die." And when he hands the three bonds to Mary, it is clear to Frank that avarice prompted the old man's cruelty to her. She sees as well as any one. Not many nights later, Mary is introduced to Frank's friends at the camp and she gets her first glimpse of the life that will soon be hers for all time.

SCALING THE JUNGFRAU (May 7).—Frederick Burlingham, the famous Alpine climber and cinematographer, whose ascent of the Matterhorn and pictures of the great Vesuvius created such a sensation, has obtained some wonderful pictures of the snow-clad Jungfrau.

These pictures show the actual climbing of the mountain, which is 13,760 feet high. We are shown a "summer" scene, in which people are enjoying a game of snowballing; other scenes picture the vast fields of snow. More wonderful still, however, is a picture taken above the clouds.

We are shown the mountaineering party climbing the Rothdale Saddle, which, by the way, slopes 70 degrees; and later we see them breaking the ice cornice at Rothdale Saddle, always an exceedingly dangerous operation. Above the Saddle the panorama is beautiful.

We are then shown a marvelous dangling maneuvre, which looks anything but safe. At a height of 13,000 feet we see Mont Blanc quite distinctly, although this famous mountain is 73 miles away from the Jungfrau.

Finally, the summit, the noblest in the world, is reached. At the station of Jungfraujoch, from which Mr. Burlingham started on his perilous ascent of the Jungfrau, the mountaineering party were watched with breathless interest by the people who had gathered to see the beginning of the journey.

THANHOUSER.

THE CARRIAGE OF DEATH (Three Parts—April 29).—The cast: Peasant Girl (Marion Swayne); Her Lover (Bert Delaney); Her Uncle (Morgan Jones); Signor (William Burt); His Daughter (Gladys Dore).

Very different are the lives of the rich signor's daughter, who has all of the world's best things, and the orphaned peasant girl who drudges through the long days for her dissolute uncle.

The peasant girl's uncle makes her plow the fields so that he may have more time to drink, but her peasant lover makes the work light and the hours short. One day the rich signor's daughter rides by and stops because she sees that they are so happy. She questions them and learns of the uncle who forces a girl to do a man's work in the fields. Indignant, the signor's daughter rides to the inn and reprimands the uncle for his brutality.

That night the uncle proposes a scheme that will mean both vengeance and money. He knows that the signor's daughter is to attend a ball that night and she will have to ride home through the mountains alone. With three others of his ilk he plans to capture her and hold her for ransom—or death. The peasant girl, in her poor little attic room, hears of the plot. She thinks of the rich girl who has spoken so kindly, and manages to escape via the window. She badly sprained her ankle in doing so, but she was determined, and made her way to her lover whom she told of the plot. While he went to the signor's house, she left for a convenient place to intercept the daughter to warn her of impending danger.

On the mountain road she stopped the carriage of the rich girl and told her of the plot. Incredulous, the signor's daughter took the peasant girl into the carriage—and it drove straight to the men who were waiting. The bandit-leader-uncle would have vented his rage on the girl he knew had tried to warn his victim, but his crafty brain knew that there would be a common fate of death for both of his victims. He intended to get both vengeance and money. The bandits sent the driver with a note to the signor that demanded five thousand lire within two hours. The note told that delay would mean death. He showed it to the girls, and the little peasant feared that the help her lover had gone to bring would come too late.

Though the lover, with the signor and other men, were riding furiously, the mountain miles were many and the minutes few. The uncle drove them to a blind road at the top of a hill so that he might watch for the return of the messenger. There was but one road to escape, and that was down the hill. And at the bottom of the hill his men were waiting with ready carbines to riddle the carriage at the first attempt to pass. The uncle went into the thicket for a better view down the hill. The peasant girl jumped from the carriage to turn the horses in a daring attempt to escape.

At the foot of the hill the three outlaws watched for the return of the messenger. They saw instead the girl's father and two others riding toward them. And at the top of the hill the driverless carriage was dashing toward them, the scarf of the signor's daughter fluttering from the side in the breeze. From the other side of the hill came the father and the others. But the carriage of death won! Three puffs of white smoke came from the bushes. There was a sudden lurch of springs as a dead body rolled from the seat. The horse, wounded, fell between the shafts as the girl's father went to the carriage. He is greatly astonished to see that the body which fell out of the carriage is that of the uncle and not his daughter. When he turned around he saw his daughter and a peasant girl coming forward with a sturdy peasant boy helping them.

He ran to his daughter and clasped her in his arms. As he kissed her and held her tight the peasant boy explained. He had gone on ahead of the others and he knew many short trails over the mountains. He had taken one and had dismounted his horse so that he could go into a thicket that screened a high rock that commanded the whole country-side. There he surprised the bandit by overcoming him. But when he tried to put him into the carriage, a captive, the horses had taken fright and dashed down the hill. The signor listened, he puts his hands on the shoulder of the peasant girl and the peasant boy and told them that a thousand lire would be their wedding present.

THE WEAKLING (Two Parts—May 2).—The cast: Weakling (Harris Gordon); Bully (Thomas A. Curran); The Girl (Barbara Gilroy); The Woman (Louise Emerald Bates).

Away back in their childhood days, the Weakling had been domineered by another boy whom he always thought of as the Bully. During play hours the Weakling was continually tormented by the other boy, and grew up in abject fear of him. Even when they were men out in the world this state of affairs continued. In an effort to escape from his evil menaces, the Weakling moved into another section. Soon after he located there. "The Girl" came into his life. At that period she was a very little girl, indeed, a mere child, and the Weakling met her when her doll had fallen into the water and was in danger of being drowned. For the child's sake, the Weakling jumped into the water and rescued the doll.

The little girl grew to be a beautiful young woman, and the Weakling was in love with her but afraid to tell it. Then his evil genius, the Bully, appeared. Fate had led him to the quiet little village, and Fate brought about his becoming a lodger with the girl's mother. The Bully was much taken with the young woman, and this feeling was intensified when he discovered the Weakling and learned his secret. He told the Weakling that the girl had made quite an impression on him, and then for the first time in his life the Weakling showed some spirit. He denounced the Bully, and declared he would tell the girl that he was a married man, but the Bully threatened him with death if he didn't keep his mouth shut.

The Bully told the girl that the other man was a fugitive from justice and feared arrest. She begged him not to expose the Weakling, to which he replied, "Of course, if you were my wife, your friends would have nothing to fear from me," and believing the Weakling was in danger of a prison sentence, the girl agreed to elope with the other man. That night the Bully drove up to the house prepared to take the girl away, but just in his moment of triumph he was unexpectedly balked. The Weakling came back, but this time he was a different man. As he advanced toward the Bully, the latter told him to go away, and then pulled his revolver, but the Weakling simply said. "You have bullied me all my life, but now the honor of the woman I love is at stake." For a few seconds the Bully held the gun trained upon his antagonist ready to fire, but as the other showed no fear, the gun wavered more and more, for the Bully was really not brave and he did not dare to carry out the threats he had made. The Weakling came to his side, took the revolver from his hand, and sternly ordered him to leave that section of the country forever, and the Bully obeyed.

From an upper window the girl had noticed all that had gone on, and she came down to the man she loved just as he was slowly walking away. She complimented him on his courage, but then as the thought of the other man's threats came back to her, she paled with fright. "But your past—that man will have you arrested," she gasped. The Weakling laughed and comforted her. He told her the other man knew nothing against him—nothing for which he could be punished. Then he took her into his arms and caressed her.

MUSTANG.

THE RETURN (Two Parts—April 21).—The cast: Melville (Clarence Burton); Mrs. Melville (Mollie Shafer); Frank, their son (Art Acord); Jim, a bookkeeper (William Hooser); Mary, his daughter (Nita Davis); Bert, his helper (Lawrnce Peyton); Addison, the sheriff (Otto Nelson). Directed by William Bertram. Scenario by Karl Coolidge.

In a small western town, Melville has long been the expres agent. His son, Frank, who acts as clerk in the office, is one day out hunting when he meets Mary, whose father earns a scanty living from his bees. Mary tells that her father will not allow her to see any man other than Bert, who some day she is supposed to marry. She adds that she detests Bert, and is willing to meet Frank. As the months go by, Frank and Mary meet almost daily. Their love develops and when Frank proposes marriage, Mary accepts him.

Melville's greatest ambition is that his son shall have a college education. He confides to his wife that he needs but $200 more before he breaks the news to Frank, and his reference to the money is overheard by Frank, who is puzzled by it.

Addison, the sheriff, an old friend of Melville, has a dog that has a habit of burying any object that it finds. One day, as Melville is checking up, and a bundle of currency falls, unnoticed to the floor, the dog picks it up and burys it under the building. The auditor arrives, and Melville learns that he is $200 short. Frank recalls his father's statement that he needs $200, and convinced that his father has taken the money, determines to save him. He leaves a note, stating that he is the guilty party, and that he will return again when he is able to make good the loss. This done, Frank rides into the foothills and there finds work with an old miner. Melville makes good the loss to the auditor, who promises that the matter will go no further.

Having saved up $200 by hard work, Frank returns home. But Addison's dog again comes into the limelight when he carries a ball under the office, and going after it, the small boy owner of the ball brings out not only the ball, but the missing currency. Addison recalls that on the day the money was found to be missing, that his dog had been burying something under the building. Frank, upon arriving, hands the money to his father, only to learn that the currency has been found, and that it was unquestionably the dog that took it.

As Frank is hurrying out to see Mary, she is in her cabin with a revolver in her hand, and outside the cabin, Bert, her rejected lover, is endeavoring to break in. Frank rides up just as Bert is about to enter. Bert flees, and Frank hearing Mary's call for help, dashes toward the cabin. Inside, thinking that it is Bert entering, Mary fires and then starts back in horror. Her bullet has gone true, and Frank lies stretched out on the floor. She has killed him.

AMERICAN.

HIS MASTERPIECE (Two Parts—April 17). The cast: Eric Devoe (Edward Coxen); Florence, his wife (Lizette Thorne); Jacob Dexter (Charles Newton); Doris, his daughter (Marquerite Nichols).

Eric DeVoe, through circumstances, is forced into a marriage with Florence Bennet. They live together but for a short time and Eric returns to the studio to live alone. They later decide upon a divorce and he leaves the city on a cross-country sketching tour, walking, while she files for divorce upon grounds of desertion.

During the walk he comes to the farm of Jacoby Dexter, who has a daughter, Doris. Eric remains to paint for a while, and soon they fall in love. He tells her of his pending divorce and that he will marry her as soon as it is procured. Florence learns of Eric's affair and stops the divorce proceedings for spite. Later he returns to the city, but to his horror Florence now refuses him the divorce. He pleads with her but to no avail. He returns to the farm to tell Doris of the difficulty he is having over the divorce, and to assure her that everything will come out all right in the end, and then returns to the city.

Later, Doris becomes desperate and having lost all hope, she writes him a letter telling him of the real existing conditions and that by the time this letter reaches him, she will have ended it all down in the marsh. After sending the letter she goes to the marsh. Eric upon receiving this pitiful letter of farewell is in a mental panic. In his distorted fancy, he sees her as she enters the marsh, and with this conception he grasps his pallette and starts to paint madly. For three days and nights, stopping neither for food or rest, he paints and then as it is finished he falls exhausted. He is found and sent to the hospital with brain fever. The painting is named "L'Amour Abime," or "The Lost Love," and sent to the exhibit, where it hangs in the place of honor. Then, too late, his wife, seeing what she has caused, grants him his divorce.

After sending the letter to Eric telling of her intention and going to the marsh to drown herself, she is seen and rescued by her father. She then tells her father for the first time of her existing conditions and writes to Eric telling him she is still alive, but the letter lies at his studio while he is at the hospital. Weeks pass and Doris, receiving no word from Eric, comes to the conclusion that he doesn't wish to return, and becoming desperate begs her father to take her away, where no one will know. He grants her wish and they leave.

Eric leaves the hospital with the divorce and returns to the studio, where he finds Doris' letter telling she is alive. He rushes back to the farm only to find that it is deserted and that the whereabouts of Doris and her father are unknown. He then returns to the city burdened with sorrow.

Doris and her father having taken up life in their new home, desperately await the end. Later she accidentally sees the notice of Eric's illness and of his divorce in an old paper. This explains to her why he didn't come to her or answer her letter and she begs her father to take her back to the farm as Eric may have been there looking for her.

Eric is irristibly drawn back to the farm and to his old trysting places and while he wanders from one familiar spot to another, Doris and her father return. They meet and after they are happily married, their child is born, and Eric is soon hard at work again with brush and palette.

THE COUNTERFEIT EARL (Two Parts—April 24).—The cast: The Earl and Banjo-Eyed Kid (George Perliolat); Lucy Bronson (Vivian Rich); Mrs. Bronson (Louise Lester); Ralph Collum (Alfred Vosburg); Mrs. Belknap, Mrs. Bronson's sister (Marie Van Tassell); Cuthbert Belknap, her husband (Al Fordyce). Directed by Karl M. LeViness. Scenario written by William Parker.

Ralph Cullom is in love with Lucy Bronson and she loves him, but her mother wants her to marry a title. Earl Twombley comes to America on a business mission. He carries letters of introduction to Mrs. Belknap, Lucy's aunt. Lucy's mother sees an opportunity to arrange a match between Lucy and the Earl. He accepts an invitation as guest at Mrs. Belknap's country home, where Lucy and her mother live. Just before sailing to America the Earl's valet was called to war. On arriving in America the Earl employed one of the hotel valets. "The Banjo Eyed Kid," a well-known crook, learns of this and kidnaps the Earl's valet. The Kid then becomes the Earl's valet and accompanies his Lordship to the Belknap house party with the intention of stealing jewels.

At the house party the Kid disguises himself as the Earl so that he can move about the house with small fear of detection. A maid, however, becomes suspicious of the disguised Earl, and the Kid gets into numerous dramatic situations in his endeavors to keep out of sight of the real Earl and at the same time continue his thefts. The maid imparts her suspicions to Mrs. Belknap. Mrs. Belknap writes a note summoning the Earl to her room. The Earl drops the note enroute to her room. It is found by Mrs. Belknap's husband. He grasps a revolver and rushes toward the room. The maid, seeing all this, and having surrepetitiously read the note, tells Lucy. Lucy runs to her aunt's room, arrives before Belknap and locks Mrs. Belknap in a closet. When Belknap rushes in, he finds the Earl and Lucy, in negligee, in the room.

At this time the disguised Earl, in fleeing from a guest who discovered him in her room, makes his escape through Ralph's room, dropping a jewel casket in his flight. The guests crowd in just as Ralph picks up the jewels. He is accused of the theft. He is dragged to Mrs. Belknap's room. Here he learns Belknap found Lucy and the Earl alone. He repulses her. She then learns he is accused of robbing rooms. She then refuses to listen to him. The disguised Earl in his flight gets into Mrs. Bronson's room where he is captured by her. Her appearance with him clears up the mystery. Mrs. Bronson bemoans her luck that the Earl will not propose to Lucy now. She is surprised to learn that the Earl is already engaged and will be married shortly in London. This pleases Lucy and Ralph, and Mrs. Bronson, upset by the whole affair, gladly gives her permission to their marriage.

A BROKEN GENIUS (Three Parts—April 27).—The Cast: Karl Rittan (Edward Coyen); Jack Hemingway (Geogre Field); Agnes, Karl's wife (Lizette Thorne). Directed by Thomas Ricketts.

Karl Rittman, a young artist, is considered as a genius in art circles. He leaves his wife, Agnes, whom he loves dearly, alone much of the time while he works in the studio. Misunderstanding arises between them over this, and especialyl over the nude and semi-nude models he finds it necessary to use in his work. After a scene with her in the studio, during which she tells him that he must chose between her and this "obscene" branch of his art, he promises to use them no more.

During the absence of her husband, Agnes has formed an acquaintance with Jack Hemingway, a fascinating social parasite. He finally wins his way to her heart. She foolishly admits to him that she loves him and he pleads with her to leave with him.

Karl has been granted a commission to paint a series of immense mural paintings for the new exposition building. Although this commission, executed, would be the making of him, he remembers his promise to Agnes concerning the necessary models. At the studio Jack convinces him, by telling him that any man is a fool to allow a woman to come between him and his success, and that the right thing to do is to go ahead, get the models and go to work. Jack then brings Agnes to the studio, where she sees Karl and the model in what she thinks a compromising position. Jack again pleads with her and she agrees to go, leaving Karl a note. Jack returns to the studio with the intention of stealing a sum of money which he saw paid to Karl that morning. In the attempt, he is discovered, and a shuffle follows, during which Karl is struck senseless by a cowardly blow. Jack tells Agnes nothing of the fight or the theft and they leave.

Karl, heartbroken, abandons his art, and his one thought is for revenge upon the man who has wrecked his life. Later he learns of the whereabouts of his wife and Jack. Jack has been convicted of a bank fraud in the West and was sent to the penitentiary and that Agnes, under an assumed name, poses as a widow and is living in Canton. Karl, seeking diversion, takes a trip to the mountains during which he comes to Canton. Lured by his old love for her, he cautiously goes and watches the house, and is surprised to find her with a baby.

Jack, broken down in health, breaks from the penitentiary. He and Agnes suddenly meet. He pleads with her to hide him until he can make his get-away. Seeing the physical condition he is in, she finally takes him to her house. Hearing a knock at the door, she hides him in a recess in the wall behind the kitchen cabinet, and upon opening the door is greatly surprised as Karl enters. He soon finds Jack's hiding place and insists upon a fight to a finish. Agnes pleads with him and asks him by all the love he once had for her, and for the sake of his child not to have murder on his soul. As she speaks of the child as his, he is dumbfounded. She takes him to the child and there tells him of Jack's arrest a few hours after leaving the studio, of her soon regretting the move she had taken, of her coming to Canton, of the birth of his child, and of her wishing many times that she could return only to realize it was too late. As she finishes telling him this, he picks up the child in his arms. He finds his wife alone, sobbing, and taking her in his arms, forgives her and restitution follows. They think of Jack and go to tell him of their plans, and that later, as soon as he is well enough they wil help him to safety, but they find him dead.

THE TRAITOR (April 28).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Gen. FitzRoy and Judge Fuller (Louis FitzRoy); Col. Rathmore (George George); The Traitor (Tommy Hayes); Lieut. Gerard (Arthur Mund); Sergt. Zookie (Harry Jackson); Capt. Williams (Jefferson Osborne); Officer Kelly (Gordon McGregor); Flora (Rosebud Hill); Dora (Clair Alexander). Directed by Milton Fahrney.

Whenever anything happens, the police first blame Jerry on general principles and then proceed to find the real culprit. An incident of this kind results in a merry mix-up between Jerry and his enemies, the police, and, when the battle is over, they lead him to the police station. To the great humiliation of the officers, the Captain of Police finds Jerry in the possession of nearly all of the officers clubs and about a dozen brick-bats.

They proceed to put Jerry through the third degree and generally abuse him when they are interrupted by the arrival of an interested old couple who witnessed the altercation between Jerry and the officers. The old folks argue that there is something wrong with Jerry's head and induce the Captain to permit them to take Jerry and have his head examined by a phrenologist. After considerable difficulty, the old couple manage to land Jerry at the phrenologist's door where Jerry, unobserved, manages to create a small riot between the old man and the head examiner, resulting in the arrival of the police and the arrest of the old gentleman.

Jerry is escorted into the office where the phrenologist—who in reality is a much wanted military spy—proceeds to hypnotize him, puts his clothes on Jerry and makes him up to resemble the spy, places incriminating papers in Jerry's pockets and makes his escape. The soldiers arrive and arrest Jerry, who is taken before the General at army headquarters. There they seach and cross-examine Jerry and find it necessary to handle him in no gentle manner.

With the aid of a few handy bottles and some extra fresh pies Jerry subdues his tormentors and makes his departure, only to be intercepted at the gates of the army post by other soldiers, whom he bowls over and makes his escape. Running across the aviation field, Jerry sees an aeroplane which he appropriates and sails away to safety in. In making a

M. T. DOME'S AWFUL NIGHT (May 5).—The cast: M. T. Dome (Billy Armstrong); His Wife (Ethel Turpin); Jigger (Tommy Hayes); Maid (Mlle. Ottawa).

M. T. Dome has just established his new bride in a cozy little flat, and to lighten the burden of housekeeping decides that his wife must have a maid. He visits an employment agency and, man-like, selects the maid because of her looks rather than for her qualifications.

Returning home with his prize, M. T. Dome cannot understand why his young wife is not enthusiastic over his selection, but the new bride naturally resents the good-looking servant being made a member of the household. Dome is satisfied, however, and loses no time in starting a flirtation with the new bride's maid.

He is caught in the act of showing a fatherly interest in the maid and the first quarrel between the newlyweds occurs, resulting in M. T. Dome seeking the comforts of his club. His old bachelor friends welcome Dome's return to the fold and time passes only too quickly for rebellious bridegroom, so that at two A. M., on his way home, Dome does not realize how iate it is.

Meeting some friends, and by this time in a very convivial mood, he insists upon them accompanying him home, where they all arrive in high spirits. The M. T. Dome's reside in a semi-apartment hotel, which provides a general reception room for its tenants, and here Dome insists that his guests make merry.

One of the rules of the establishment is, that there shall be no music after ten P. M., and, although it is now three A. M., Dome's hilarious spirit will not be denied, so he sets back the clock and starts in to entertain his friends to the annoyance and distress of the tenants. In a mad dance, Dome falls against the stair rail, carries it away and alights, with the wreckage, one flight below.

By this time the entire apartment house is aroused, including the landlady, whom Dome placates by promising to stop his noise and repair the damage he has done. Keeping his promise, Dome loses no time in looking up a carpenter, whom, together with his assistant, he bribes to come and do a very urgent job at that hour in the morning.

The noise created by the mechanics is even worse than that made by Dome and his friends, so the tenants, in a body, fall upon the disutrbers of their sleep and throw them out doors, Dome meanwhile having been singled out by his bride and is given a beating by this outraged young lady.

FALSTAFF.

THE DASHING DRUGGIST'S DILEMMA (May 1).—The cast: Drug Clerk (J. C. Yorke); Sweethearts (Elsie Jordan and Frances Keyes).

A new clerk was employed by the village druggist, and he was such a pretty young man that all the girls were much smitten with him. Among them were two sisters. They were proud because they had a wealthy uncle, and the uncle was unhappy because the two sisters were continually taking care of him. In fact, they annoyed him so greatly that he finally offered $10,000 apiece if they would get married within a week and never bother him again. The girls made efforts to get the druggist, but he refused to entertain their proposition.

The young clerk had an easy job—that is, easy as far as drug stores are concerned. He had to open up at 6 A. M. and was all finished at midnight, unless someone rang the bell. This night someone did ring the night bell. It was one of the sisters—the one who was badly smitten with him. When he opened the door she grabbed him, intending to carry him before the minister in triumph. Her plot failed, however, for her sister "double crossed" her. It was the sister who took the weeping druggist to the parsonage, but she also was in trouble, having failed to secure a license, but she went for it, warning the clerk that if he moved from that house till she returned she would scratch his eyes out.

The druggist did not care to leave the house, but fortunately for him he noticed a telephone. Through it he got into communication with a large determined-looking woman who hurried around to the house, arriving there just as the two sisters appeared, each with a marriage license, but when the stranger came into the room the druggist hailed her with cries of joy, and turning to the others he simply said, "I cannot marry either of you—my wife won't let me."

They were naturally indignant at not having been told that he had a life partner, but the young druggist explained that he had pretended to be single under the direct orders of his boss, who claimed that it spoils business if it is known that the soda-water clerk is married.

THE SKILLFUL SLEIGHER'S STRATEGY (May 6).—The cast: Skillful Sleigher (William Swan); His Sweetheart (Gladys Leslie); Her Uncle (Frank E. McNish).

If you were a young man, and you loved a girl, and her guardian didn't object until after you had bought the marriage license, wouldn't you be peeved?

And furthermore, when you tried to elope, so that the license money would not be wasted, suppose shoes and crockery were hurled at you, and the girl was told she was to be sent to boarding school, as punishment for your conduct, wouldn't it make you feel like starting something?

The young man in this story did start something. He was helped by heavy snow, and was also a youth of imagination. The girl had told him they were going to take her to school in her father's auto, and the suitor, aided by several shovelers, blocked the road, rendering it impossible for the auto. Then he drove up in his sleigh and offered to drive the girl to her destination.

Did the guardian let her go? He did not. He insisted upon accompanying them. Was the young man surprised? He was not. He put the girl on the front seat, placing guardian in the rear seat, and drove so skillfully that at a certain place in the road the sleigh tipped, and the unsuspecting guardian was tipped out. Then the young couple drove on to a minister's house, and found that the license was worth having.

As for guardian, he trudged through the snow to his stalled auto, and reviled his chauffeur because he was so slow in making repairs. But he never saw the skilful sleigher until the happy couple returned to his home to ask his blessing.

AVENGED BY LIONS (Two Parts—May 6).—The cast: Hilda Kruger (Margaret Gibson); Richard Mann (Francis McDonald); Jan Kruger (Harry C. DeMore); Hontas (David Allen).

Richard Mann, a young English engineer, has been commissioned to make a preliminary survey for a new railroad in South Africa. At a farewell luncheon at his club, the charm of the ultra-fashionable young ladies of the metropolis is the topic of discussion. The subject does not interest young Mann, who assures his friends that his work will always be his bride.

In the Transvaal, the Boer population is resentful towards all modern improvements and particularly against the proposed encroachment of their lands for railroad purposes. Jan Kruger, a prosperous farmer and leader among his neighbors, was particularly bitter against any and all changes in the general conditions of their country.

His daughter, Hilda, a sweet and lovable young miss, quite naturally was a partisan to her father's views. These were the conditions that Richard was obliged to contend with upon his arrival at the field of his activities, in addition to the hardships of his work and the dangers of the wild beast-infested jungle through which he was to blaze the way. Hontas, a half-breed, was foreman for Kruger, and had long cherished a wild desire to win Hilda's love.

While the old Burgher was away from home one day, Hontas, after being repulsed by the girl, attempts to use force, for which he receives a beating from her father, and is summarily discharged. Kruger is a man of violent temper and given to beating any lazy blacks who worked for him and has thus earned their hatred, which fact the discharged foreman uses for his purpose later on.

Kruger's land and in the course of events, Richard calls upon Kruger with his credentials, but is ordered away at the point of a rifle. Hilda joins her father in berating the intruders. A few days later Richard rescues Hilda from the violence of the half-breed and wins her gratitude and also the knowledge that she is a most adorable young lady, and proceeds to mentally compare her with the fashion plates of his country.

The appearance of the surveying party causes the Burghers to hold a meeting at the trading post, and Richard plans to attend this meeting to plead his cause. Hontas learns of the proposed all night absence of Hilda's father and plans to seize this opportunity to carry her off, enlisting the help of several of Kruger's resentful blacks to accomplish his purpose.

Richard proceeds alone upon his mission, but is beset by lions in the dense jungle and forced to return to camp and in doing so is obliged to pass through Kruger's land. Hilda hears the approach of the vengeful half-breed and his followers and makes a brave resistance, but outnumbered, she is surprised from behind by one of the crafty blacks.

Richard arrives upon the scene in time to save the girl from her captors, whom he puts to flight. The cowardly half-breed, knowing that quick justice awaits him if caught, seeks the darkness of the jungle for safety. The lions which blocked Richard's path, have been driven from their haunts by hunger and have invaded the outskirts of the settlement, surprising Hontas in his flight. A short pursuit, a vain struggle and Hilda was avenged by lions.

MUTUAL MASTERPICTURE.

THE QUALITY OF FAITH (Gaumont—5 Parts—May 1).—The cast: Albert Richards (Alexander Gaden); Marna (Gertrude Robinson); Louise Alford (Lucile Taft); John Alford (Charles W. Travis); Guy Carleton (John Reinhard); Raynale Berne (Henry W. Pemberton); Sport Ragan (Alan Robinson); Baker (John Mackin). Scenario by Charles T. Gardner. Directed by Richard Garrick.

Albert Richards, the young pastor of a fashionable and wealthy church, woos Louise Alford and wins her promise to become his wife. She is the daughter of a wealthy mill-owner, John Alford. Louise is a vain, pleasure-loving girl. Her love for Albert is only a passing fancy. After realizing the monotony of such a life as would be hers as his wife, she finally jilts him for Guy Carlton, a society admirer.

In the meantime labor troubles arise in the mill owned by Louise's father. The leader of the mill workers is a home-loving, peaceable fellow, Baker, hard-working and reliable when unmolested, but a man of high temper when aroused. Baker is elected head of the first delegation sent to petition Alford not to increase the hours of their labor, as he proposes doing. The petition is denied. While visiting among the poorer classes of the city, Richard is called to minister to a factory girl who has been horribly hurt in Alford's plant. The dramatic story of conditions that exist in the factory told the minister by the grief-stricken father arouses in him the desire to investigate for himself. Later, the tragic squalor and privation of the working people is further revealed to the minister. These scenes confirm his resolve to make an effort in behalf of these unfortunates.

On his way home after one of these visits Richards encounters a girl and man in combat, the bully beating the woman unmercifully. He goes to her rescue and assists the girl to her nearby home. The pastor learns that she is Marna, a woman of ill-repute. Struck by her apparent unhappiness and unrest, the minister succeeds in getting her to tell the story of her present life. Ill-health has incapacitated her for work in the factory, where there is no sympathy and had led her to a life of shame for a bare livelihood. Cheered by Richards' words of encouragement, Marna grasps eagerly at his offer to help her and later finds a haven through his efforts in the Salvation Army home.

With the gathering of clouds on the factory horizon, Richards takes active interest in the cause of the workmen. His final break with the Alford family comes over his position in the matter. In a riot of the striking workmen, Baker is arrested for inciting it and is given two years in prison. Richards is dismissed from his church and comes under the influence of an atheist. He falls into debauchery, where the love and faith of Marna are the two abiding lights. His literary work also fails of success at the same time.

Louise has married Carlton. But the bottom of the pit is finally touched by Richards, and success as a writer at last comes to the erstwhile minister. With renewed popularity, Louise, who has wearied of her husband, sets a trap to again catch Richards with her wiles, but he proves himself strong, and is rewarded by the love and devotion of Marna. Alford, the factory owner, succumbs to heart failure just before Baker comes from prison to kill him because he was the cause of the strife and tragedy at the mill.

HIS BREAD AND BUTTER (Keystone—Two Parts—April 9).—The cast: Hank Mann, Peggy Pierce, "Slim" Summerville and Bobbie Dunn.

Hank Mann is a waiter in a restaurant run by "Slim" Summerville, who is about to hire a new cashier. Hank sees an opportunity to increase the family income and telephones to Peggy to apply for the place. She conceals the fact that she is married and obtains the job without difficulty. While she is receiving instructions from the boss in his office Hank is assigned to a private dining room which has been reserved for a party of three. The trio eat well and drink much, running up a large bill. During an opportune moment Hank goes to his employer's office and finds his wife dancing with "Slim." In spite of his protests he is ordered back to his post.

Back in the dining room Hand finds a lively argument as to who is to pay the check. It is suggested that the water choose the victim and in order to obtain a fair selection Hank is blindfolded. While he is groping about the customers sneak away. Summerville now holds the head waiter responsible and discharges him. In revenge, Dunn determines to win Peggy.

From here on the complications are fast and furious. "Slim" loses most of his apparel in the scramble and is discovered hiding under Peggy's bed. Dragged out by Hank, he is bound to a keg of powder in a room on the upper floor of a garage. After lighting the fuse Hank flees downstairs only to find that the door is locked. There is a lot of excitement before he escapes and the picture ends with a real thrill.

HIS LAST LAUGH (Keystone—Two Parts—April 9).—The cast: Harry McCoy, Julia Fay, Mary Thurman, Joseph Callahan, Billie Bennett, Sutherland Ring, Dave Anderson and Lige Crommie.

Duke Don Ferdi, while playing a piano in a cabaret, sees the picture of a pretty American girl and determines to wed her. His sweetheart finds the clipping and follows him. Meanwhile two crooks rifle his belongings and steal a portrait of his ancestor, who had ridiculed the theory of Christopher Columbus that an egg could be made to stand on end. On the back of the painting they find directions which if followed they believe will reveal a fortune. They are instructed to obtain a certain ring. It develops that this ring has been given to the rich American girl by her suitor.

As the girl is riding with him the crooks lift her from her mount and carry her away in a taxi. Ferdi lowers himself from a railroad bridge and rescues her, but not until the crooks have obtained the ring. But the duke is now receiving the favor of the girl and her family, the young American being apparently discarded. The ring, on careful examination, reveals directions to obtain a medal which Ferdi always wears. This is easy. Ferdi returns to the cabaret and is on the job when his new friends arrive on a slumming trip inspired by the disgruntled suitor. He sees an opportunity to stamp Ferdi as an imposter and confronts him at the piano. The duke, however, displays his medal as proof of his claim, the crooks rush in and snatch it and speed away.

They go to a lonely spot, as directed by the medal, dig up a box and get into their machine just as a police car arrives. Their troube goes for naught in the lively chase which follows, they are caught and the box recovered. Ferdi now impatiently awaits the opening of the box, but much to his chagrin it contain not wealth but an ancient joke about the chicken that crossed the street, which the shade of Columbus doubtless considered a snappy retort to the ridicule to which he had been subjected centuries before. Now spurned by the rich girl, Ferdi is in despair until his cabaret sweetheart, always close at hand, offers her sympathy and all ends happily.

SOLD FOR MARRIAGE (Fine Arts—Five Parts—April 16).—The cast: Lillian Gish, Frank Bennett, Walter Long, Pearl Elmore, A. D. Sears, William E. Lowery, Fred Burns and Frank Brownlee.

Marfa, belle of a Russian village, lives with her aunt and uncle, a scheming pair who are seeking to marry her to a rich, but ugly, old peasant. She loves a young fellow who once rescued her from a pair of ruffians who sought to kidnap her in their sled as she was dragging a heavy bundle home through a snow storm. Jan is poor and finds no favor in the eyes of the covetous couple. But he is sure of Marfa's love as he goes away to make his fortune.

Col. Gregioff, the governor of the district, is attracted to the girl, but when he forces his attentions on her as she is busy with the washing she knocks him senseless with a club. In a driving rain storm the girl and her relatives flee from the village to escape the wrath of Gregioff. Revived by his men, the colonel goes at once to the home of the family. Only the aged and crippled grandfather is there and, as he recognizes the intruder as the man who had eloped with Marfa's mother fifteen years before, only to desert her, he feebly seeks revenge. Gregioff easily brushes him aside and goes out into the highway, where a lightning bolt strikes him dead.

Meanwhile Marfa and Jan have been reunited on a ship bound for America. Again the scheming pair, now determined to make a rich marriage for the girl in California, intervene, and in San Francisco Jan loses track of them completely. In despair he runs into a friend of the voyage who tells him the others have gone to Los Angeles. In the latter city a rich bargain has been made for Marfa's hand. She escapes, but her ignorance of the language is fatal and she is brought back. Jan sees a rabbi on his way to perform the ceremony and follows him, but is refused admission to the house. While he is obtaining the aid of the police Marfa is tortured into submission and is about to be married when help arrives. The conspirators are bundled off to jail and Jan and Marfa face the future together.

THE STEPPING STONE (Kay-Bee—Five Parts—April 16).—The cast: Frank Keenan, Mary Boland, Robert McKim, Margaret Thompson, Joseph Dowling and J. Barney Sherry.

Mary Beresford is the devoted and self-sacrificing wife of a man whose ambition is great, but whose energy in achieving that ambition is less than nothing. He has a fairly responsible place with a well known firm and holds it solely because his wife does most of his work for him after hours in their home. One day a particularly important stack of papers is given to Al Beresford by his employer; a report must be in the hands of their most distinguished client that night. Al dawdles through the day and at night takes the unfinished job home. He and Mary start to work it out together, but he pleads a headache and goes to bed. She finishes the work and delivers the papers in person to Elihu Jasper.

Jasper is a powerful operator in Wall street and lives alone in a big mansion. He is attracted to Mary and in an effort to help her summons Al to an interview. He soon finds that the man is unworthy of consideration, but because of the woman he gives Al many tips that increase his income and enable the Beresfords to move into palatial quarters. Jasper is a frequent visitor there, bored by the man's egotism, but secretly admiring the woman.

There comes a day when Beresford is convinced that his rise is due entirely to his own efforts, he regards the wife who has made his position possible as a hindrance and urges her to give him his freedom. A widow in society has attracted him. Mary departs and the world swallows her up. Jasper is informed of the situation by her maid. His mind quickly formulates a plan. Al Beresford is wiped out in the street and commits suicide. Then comes the long hunt for Mary, but not until Jasper goes into the market to thwart a plot to deprive him of a profitable mine does he discover her as the secretary of his broker. He saves the mine and wins the woman.

BUCKING SOCIETY (Keystone—Two Parts—April 16).—The cast: Chester Conklin, "Shorty" Hamilton, Louella Baxam, Dora Rogers and Jack Henderson.

Henderson, a scheming lawyer, is unable to pay the wages of his stenographer, Dora Rogers, when he receives a letter stating that a client has died leaving a large estate to a nephew, "Shorty" Hamilton, who doesn't amount to much. The lawyer makes an agreement with Dora to substitute her name and share the estate with her. They arrive at a western town just as the bad man, Conklin, is shooting up the hotel in a jealous rage because Louella favors "Shorty."

While talking over the agreement at luncheon the lawyer and stenographer are interrupted by Louella, who enters with a plate of pie. She places it on the agreement, which sticks. Louella, back in the kitchen, discovers the plot and keeps the paper. Henderson then devises a new scheme and would have Dora obtain the fortune by marriage. So he tells "Shorty" of the inheritance and they plan to go to Denver and take a big house. The heir generously invites all the boys to attend the housewarming. They accept and Louella, disguised as a boy, goes along with them.

Dora tries to impress "Shorty" with her beauty and fine clothes, but he is thinking of the girl back in the hotel. On the night of the party Louella has returned to woman's apparel and is near the house when she meets the lawyer. He thinks she has followed him because of her affection and offers her a place in the kitchen. She helps the waiters and comes upon Dora and "Shorty" in a corner. Dora recognizes her and orders her from the house. "Shorty" demands that she stay and the lawyer interferes with threats. Louella now flashes the agreement to swindle "Shorty" and the cowboys chase the conspirators out of town. The occasion then develops into an engagement party.

THE IRON CLAW, NO. 9 ("Arrows of Hate"—Pathe—Two Parts—April 24).—This episode tells of Jules Legar, "The Iron Claw," arch-criminal, who perpetrates a number of outrages in the name of "The Laughing Mask." The police seek The Mask and trap him in the home of Enoch Golden, on whom Legar, in previous episodes, has sought to wreak vengeance. Margery, Golden's daughter, saves The Laughing Mask but is herself trapped by Legar. David Manley, her father's secretary, who loves her, wounds Legar but is overpowered. He and Margery are bound hand and foot, thrown into a room and the gas turned on. As they are about to be rescued through Manley's ingenuity, Legar's lieutenant appears and shoots at them minute steel arrows believed to be poisoned. But The Laughing Mask has contrived to neutralize the poison. Still The Laughing Mask eludes identification. Who is he? The next episode will be entitled "The Living Dead."

THEM WAS THE HAPPY DAYS! (Phunphilm—April 26).—A motion picture company is ready to start out to find a location when it is discovered that the hero, Lonesome Luke, is missing. A search is instituted. Meanwhile, Luke, who has slid to the floor of the company's auto, has fallen asleep. The picture that follows is his dream which in comedy effects far surpasses the ingenuity of the foregoing "set."

Luke dreams that he is again a schoolboy and that he and his fellow-actors are all young again. The girls are in short skirts and the boys in knee-breeches. They attend the little schoolhouse on the hill, presided over by a sour dame, the archtype of the country schoolmarm. Once in the schoolroom the real fun begins. Fatty, one of the scholars, has a "penny-dreadful" concealed in a geography book. Fattoy comes to a particularly bloody part, when lo! his hair is seen to actually rise from his head and stand out like the well known quills of the equally well known porcupine.

HOW BIRDS FEED THEIR YOUNG (Pathecolor—April 29).—The Brown Linnent is shown feeding its young on partially digested food which she tries scrupulously to apportion equally. The Long-tailed Tomtit is caught in the act of feathering its nest and hunting insects for its voracious brood. The Chaffinch and the Wren, bustling about their domestic affairs round out a half reel of interest and beauty.

THE TOWNS OF TUNIS (Northern Africa—on the same reel as foregoing).—In this picture we see Kairouan, the "holy city," whose loop-holed walls crowned with a multitude of domes give it a most remarkable appearance. The busy market-plate crowded with picturesque natives from dawn to nightfall makes an interesting scene which is followed by closeup views of the characteristic architecture of the country and raiment of its natives. Then follows the great mosque of Kairouan which has more than a thousand marble pillars, and its walls magnificently decorated. Five other views go to make up this half of the reel.

THE MYSTERIES OF MYRA (Episode No. 1—3 Parts—April 24—The cast: Dr. Payson Alden (Howard Estabrook); Myra Maynard (Joan Sothern); Mrs. Maynard (Bessie E. Wharton); Arthur Varney (Allen Murnane); Grand Master (M. W. Rale). Scenario by Charles W. Goddard. Produced by Wharton, Inc.

John Maynard, during his life, belonged to an organization known as "The Black Order." By its occult powers this company holds complete sway over its members, and exerts a strange and compelling influence over all who chance to come within its range. It is the typification of mystery and the Order's highest prelate, The Grand Master, whose face the members seldom see, is the personification of invisible powers put to wicked ends.

Maynard's last message to the Order contained a clause that in case his three daughters died before their eighteenth birthdays, his fortune should go to the Black Order.

The two elder daughters have both committed suicide at the appointed time by unusual methods of self-destruction and Mrs. Maynard, who is cognizant of the strange associations formed by her deceased husband, suspects occult influences. Consequently, she is deeply troubled as her youngest and favorite daughter approaches her fateful birthday.

Arthur Varney, who is a constant visitor at the Maynard home, is racked by conflicting emotions. While he loves Myra with all his heart, as a member of the Black Order he is bound to assist in bringing about her destruction. His final apeal to the Grand Master on Myra's behalf is scorned. Her death is inevitable.

Arrayed against the Black Order is Dr. Payson Alden, a prominent young physician, who has given up medicine to become a noted investigator of spirit phenomena. He awakes one night from a troubled sleep and finds mysteriously pinned on his breast a note warning him to cease his investigations of the occult under the penalty of death. He also discovers that his notes on the Maynard case have been stolen. Aroused by the incident, he immediately communicates with Mrs. Maynard and arranges to call.

The atmosphere of the Maynard household is tense with the dread expectation that an unseen something is about to happen. Myra has been mysteriously walking in her sleep, as did her two elder sisters before their deaths. This strange habit is the result of the concentrated mental influences exerted by the members of the Black Order under Varney over the susceptible young girl. At the breakfast table, Myra unconsciously assumes the pose which is the sign of the Black Order. Mrs. Maynard, recalling this in connection with her husband, is beside herself with fear and anxiety.

Dr. Alden calls. Myra's curiosity has been aroused by her mother's trepidation upon seeing her unwittingly make the wicked sign and she asks Dr. Alden to explain the meaning. Just as he, in turn, assumes the pose, Mrs. Maynard comes into the room and at once suspects Alden of connections with the Black Order. With hysterical fear, she orders him from the house. Explanations are unavailing and he reluctanly departs.

Greatly attracted by Myra, however, he resolves to carry on his investigations in spite of Mrs. Maynard's objections. The day before the girl's birthday, he secretly enters the house and arranges a system by which he may learn whether or not Myra walks in her sleep and whither her wanderings lead her. In the afternoon of the fateful day, he gains entrance to the Maynard house through a clever ruse and discovers the path of her sleepwalking the night before and hides, awaiting further developments.

At exactly twelve o'clock that night, the Black Order is in full session, extending by their mental power complete sway over the actions of the unfortunate girl. At the same time, still in a troubled sleep, Myra rises from her bed and slowly descends the broad stairway. Hesitatingly she crosses the room, completely under the unseen influence and, touching a secret panel, descends into a crypt known only to her dead father.

Silently Alden follows. By the flickering candle light, she reads the dust covered parchment and unwillingly picks up a nearby dagger. Struggling with her inward emotion, she raises it full above her head and with a final effort starts its downward plunge. Like a flash, Alden grasps her wrist and saves her from horrible death. He carries the unconscious form to the living room above, where he finds Mrs. Maynard, who has been unable to sleep.

Again the girl drifts off into the hypnotic state and her fingers begin to twitch convulsively. Knowing the sign, Dr. Alden places a pencil at her fingers and on the back of a book Myra begins to trace a message from the other world. She awakes, however, before it is completed.

THE MYSTERIES OF MYRA (Second Episode—2 Parts—May 1).—Dr. Alden visits Myra Maynard on the day after he rescues her from her attempted sleep-walking suicide and explains to her what happened. She is deeply puzzled, but resolves to assist Alden wherever possible in running down the despicable band which has brought about the death of her two sisters.

Arthur Varney, who loves Myra, but is compelled, as a member of the Black Order, to assist in bringing about her destruction, calls at the Maynard home. He has been ordered by the Grand Master to ascertain why the plans of the Black Order have failed and to assist in setting another scheme which will cause her death. The butler ushers him into an adjoining room, as Alden has left word that he and Myra are not to be disturbed.

At this moment Alden is placing Myra in a hypnotic state, in hopes that she will finish the message of warning from her dead father which she had started the nigth before. Varney becomes suspicious and sneaks into the room unknown to Myra and Alden.

After a few false starts, Myra begins the message, "Your—your father wishes to warn you against the Black ——"

At this point she breaks off, shudders and awakens. Varney's hypnotic power urging her not to write has counteracted the persuasive influence of Dr. Alden. Varney returns to the hall and is soon presented by the butler. He has failed, however, as Alden has suspected that the warning is aimed against the Black Order.

The Malevolent Grand Master is preparing an evil plant of death. He injects into the closed blossom of a strange plant a poisonous powder. This he sends by two of his men, disguised as flower sellers, to the Maynard home.

Varney is greatly disturbed by the news that Dr. Alden is to spend the night as Mrs. Maynard's guest in order to be on the ground if any further attempts be made upon Myra's life. Nevertheless, Varney, can do nothing but follow out the new plan of the Grand Master. He prepares to go and is ushered to the door by Myra herself. Jnst then the two flower sellers ascend the steps and display the blossoms to Myra. Varney buys a plant for her. He is torn between love and fear, but fear is uppermost and he departs without a word.

As they are saying good night that evening, Dr. Alden asks a strange favor of Myra. He requests to be allowed to keep the new plant in his room over night. Myra demurs but later, in her boudoir, changes her mind and sends her maid with the plant to Alden's room. He is deeply gratified as he realizes that his interest in Myra is surely turning to love. Only for a moment, however, does his mind linger on such pleasant thoughts and he is again the stern man of science. Suspicious of the unknown plant he carefully examines the stem, the leaves and even the earth in the flower pot. His suspicions appear unfounded, however, and he prepares to retire.

It is midnight. The blossom of the strange plant is beginning to unfold and develop into a beautiful flower. Nevertheless, it is the flower of death, for the white powder concealed in the heart of the blossom is liberated and drops down upon the damp earth, there reacting with the moisture, producing a heavy white vapor, which floats across the face of the sleeper. Alden stirs, gasps as if choking, and attempts to rise but falls back helpless.

In another room a strange phenomenon is happening. Myra, with a premonition of evil in her mind, awakes as if from a bad dream. She instinctively feels that something is wrong. As she turns, her eye catches the little crystal globe which Alden has given her. Here is a chance to test Alden's science. She sits up in bed and gazes intently into the depths of the crystal. Slowly a filmy something takes shape. It is an apparition of Dr. Alden half rising in his bed and gasping his throat as if breathing with difficulty. She hastily slips into a robe and hurries to Alden's door. A cloud of white vapor envelopes her. Greatly alarmed she summons the butler. Together they enter the room and stumbling, half overcome, drags the now unconscious form of Alden from the contaminated atmosphere.

After prolonged efforts, he is brought back to consciousness. He explains what happened and laughingly assures them that he is all right again. Suddenly Myha recoils in horror as she sees in a picture on the wall the malevolent face of the Grand Master looking menacingly down upon them.

IVAN FILM PRODUCTIONS.

THE CITY OF ILLUSION (Six Parts—April).—The cast: Claire Burton (Mignon Anderson); Father Burton (Joseph Burke); Maggie Burton (Blanche Craige); Carleton, land owner (Carleton Macy); Ethel, his mother (Mathilda Brundage); Douglas Hobson, a New York lawyer, cousin to Stanford (Bradley Barker); Eva Strong, an heiress (Paula Shay); Agnes, her sister (Maxime Brown); Robert Allen, an architect (Willard Case); Boris, a farm hand (Guido Colucci); Hodge, an unfriendly neighbor (D. H. Gould).

Paul Stanford, of Richmond, a wealthy bachelor, on a visit to his farm, meets Claire Burton, daughter of his caretaker. He proposes marriage to her and she refers him to her parents, who agree to their union. Stanford settles $25,000 on his young wife, and takes her to his home in Richmond, where he educates her. He treats his wife both like a faithful husband and a devoted father; but Claire never learns the meaning of love. The country girl has illusions regarding New York. She asks her husband to come and live in New York, but he demurs, stating that he cannot give up his business in the South.

One year after his marriage Stanford, having legal business, sends for his lawyer, Douglas Hobson, a New Yorker, who fascinates Claire. Hobson describes the life in New York. After his recital, Claire tells Hobson that she loves him, that she never loved her husband, and proposes an elopement. Hobson refuses, stating that if she were free, he would marry her. Claire tells Hobson that she will try to get a divorce.

Stanford enters unexpectedly and finds Claire in the arms of Hobson. He denounces him and orders him out. Claire pleads with Stanford to divorce her, stating that she loves Hobson. Stanford will not listen. Claire appeals to her father for help, and he tells her that a divorce can only be procured through evidence of infidelity.

Claire forms a desperate plan; she tells her husband that she has been unfaithful. Bitterly grieved Stanford realizes that youth is its own excuse, and offers to close the book of her past, and make it a sealed volume. Claire is insistent, and Stanford agrees to separate on conditions that she return his marriage settlement.

Six months later Hobson in New York is nominated for District Attorney, and being in need of funds for his campaign, marries Eva Strong who, with her sister, Agnes, had come into an inheritance.

One week before election, while busy with his campaign, he receives a telegram from Claire, stating that she procured her divorce and is coming to New York. On her arrival Claire learns that Hobson has married. Her love for him turns to hate. She becomes desperate and demands that he should divorce his wife, as he made her divorce her husband, otherwise she threatens to expose him.

The same night Hobson returns home worried. His wife questions him; he tells her of Claire's demand. In desperation, Eva withdraws the joint account of herself and sister Agnes, and buys Claire's silence.

Three days before election, Stanford, reading of Hobson's political aspirations, comes to New York to avenge himself. Stanford goes to the hall where Hobson is addressing a big meeting and denounces him. Hobson denies his statement, and takes Stanford to his former wife, who disproves his accusation.

Hobson asks Claire about her statement of infidelity, and Claire tells Stanford that her illusion for New York made her lie and that she was always faithful to him. Claire tearfully begs her husband's forgiveness, and asks to be taken back. Stanford returns the money to Eva and Agnes and forgives Claire and Hobson.

WORLD-EQUITABLE.

THE CLOSED ROAD (Paragon—5 Parts—April 24).—The cast: Frank Sargeant (House Peters); Julia Annersley (Barbara Tennant); Dr. Hugh Annersley (Lionel Adams); Dr. Appledan (Leslie Stowe); Griswold (George Cowl). Author and director, Maurice Tourneur.

Dr. Hugh Annersley, assisted by Dr. Appledan, has succeeded in finding a cure for cancer. Julia, Dr. Annersley's sister, comes home with Griswold, a former client of the doctor, and to whom he still owes money. Griswold did not enter the house, Annersley saying to Appledan that if Griswold would pay him what he owes, he could then continue his work with the medical discovery. Griswold, now being attended by Appledan, Annersley decides to write him a letter, in which he states that unless he is paid within twenty-four hourse, that he will go to Griswold's apartment to collect the account himself. Appledan takes the letter to Griswold himself.

In giving medicine to Griswold, Appledan gives him an overdose, resulting in his sudden death. To ward off suspicion, Appledan places Annersley's letter threatening violence to Griswold on the latter's table, and firing two shots out of a revolver, the aged doctor leaves the room. When the police investigate they find the revolver on the floor, and on it is carved Hugh Annersley's name. Circumstantial evidence in the form of the revolver and letter points to Annersley. He is placed under arrest and charged with the murder.

Julia, calling upon Appledan, notices the old doctor laughing hysterically as Frank Sargeant, a well-to-do young man, leaves his office. He tells Julia that he has just warned Sargeant he could not live more than a couple of months on account of the poor condition of his heart. With this knowledge, Julia starts in search of Sargeant, and finds him in an old quarry just as he was to commit suicide. She persuades him to listen to her. She unravels to him the story of her brother's plight, and of the fact that he could save millions of lives were he able to continue with his cancer cure. That as he, Sargeant, could not live long and was on the verge of committing suicide, would assume the murder of Griswold, clear Annersley of the charge, and thereby be of some good to humanity. Sargeant agrees and fabricates circumstantial evidence against himself so strongly that he is arrested and convicted of the crime.

While awaiting electrocution, Sargeant learns that his heart was never affected, that old Doctor Appledan was mentally unbalanced, and then confined to an insane asylum. Upon learning this, Julia sets out to clear Sargeant and reverse the wheels of destiny against him. The old doctor confesses that he gave Griswold an overdose of medicine and to clear himself had placed Annersley's letter and pistol near him, thereby clearing Sargeant. How Julia repaid Sargeant for his great sacrifice by her love and affection brings the picture to a dramatic and happy ending.

James Wadsworth, a north woodsman with little education, but full of truth, loyalty and courage, sells his valuable lumber properties to a syndicate, and comes to New York full of the determination to do things there as he has in the West. At the station he sees Anne Dalton awaiting her brother, who has just graduated from college. He promptly falls in love with her, takes the number of her car, and as brother and sister drive away, he goes to a hotel.

The Daltons, with Towne, sail on a cruise, and Wadsworth goes on the same steamer. He rescues Anne's handbag from a thief and gives it to her brother, beginning their acquaintance. Wadsworth bribes the purser to give him a vacant seat at the Dalton table, where his presence is resented by all but the son, the family snubbing him but the son speaking in his favor. His manners cause resentment on Anne's part and when he rescues her brother from gamblers in the card room by fighting the crowd, she and Towne see the affair. His wrist has been hurt and she ties it up for him, although Towne has called him a "barroom loafer." Wadsworth makes love to Anne, and she, in a revulsion of feeling, tells him that she has accepted Towne. Wadsworth, made almost insane by this, and obsessed by the idea of primitive love with her on a desert isle, takes advantage of a fog and some wreckage drifting by, drops her overboard and plunges after her. Reaching the wreckage with her, they float off, while after a futile search the ship goes on.

They reach their island and after Wadsworth has saved her from savages, the inevitable happens. They love and mate. The disappearance of Anne makes her mother ill, but as soon as she is able to go, a cruise in search of the girl is started, in which Towne takes part.

A year later, as the search is being abandoned, the Daltons find the island. Wadsworth sees the yacht, and climbing to the top of what they have called a "signal tree," attracted the attention of the people on board. Just then a branch breaks and he falls, breaking a leg. A boat from the yacht lands, Anne, tending her babe, sees her father and Towne. They induce her to go to the yacht, after Towne has been sent to the "signal tree" to tell Wadsworth. He reports that Wadsworth has been killed by a fall, but has left him helpless and hurt. The boat reaches the yacht and with Anne unconscious, they sail away. Wadsworth crawls back to the hut, and faints. The parents plead with Anne to marry Towne to give the child a name, and at last she consents. In the meantime a cruising naturalist finds Wadsworth, fixes him up and brings him back to civilization, where he learns that Anne is to marry Towne.

Believing that Anne has deserted him, Wadsworth determines never to look on the face of woman again, changes his name and feigns blindness. He is introduced, four years later, to the Dalton house, as the literary lion of the hour, having written a famous novel. He meets Towne and removing his glasses, shows Towne the man he had left to die on the island. Towne, terror-stricken, goes to his room and shoots himself, and Anne, later, coming into the room where Wadsworth is, with her child, recognizes Wadsworth, and they embrace, showing that "the chain invisible" has held through all the trials to which they have been subjected.

GEORGE KLEINE.

THE MISHAPS OF MUSTY SUFFER NO. 10, "COMING DOWN" (May 3).

Musty holds down a job as general factotum at the Busy Bee Amusement Arcade, one of his chief duties being that of taking tickets at the entrance to the moving stairway which leads to the cinema theater on the second floor. A "tough guy" slips Musty a milk ticket and starts up the stairway, but Musty proves himself equal to the occasion by reversing the escalator which causes the miscreant to lose his footing and make a hasty exit head over heels.

The boss introduces Musty to Woof-Woof, the wild man, and Leonardo the Lion, who share a cage in the museum of the arcade. "If they get rough, slip 'em one of these magic crackers and they'll be as peaceful as two lambs," he informs Musty as he presents him with several of the wonderful bits of pastry. The boss departs and Musty hugely enjoys teasing the occupants of the cage. Then he passes on to a music box, which he succeeds in putting out of order. Woof-Woof and Leonardo, much peeved at the teasing Musty has given them, escape from the cage and chase the patrons and employees through the various rooms of the arcade until Musty subdues them with one of the magic crackers and lures them back into their cage.

While cleaning the hat of a patron, Musty carelessly covers the headpiece, which is whirling on the electric drier, with shoe blacking instead of cleaner. The whirling drier covers the unfortunate patron from head to foot with the blacking. In this emergency Musty calls upon the Hindoo Spot Remover for aid. While trying to explain to the Hindoo how the accident occurred, he splatters the Indian's white robe with the remaining contents of the blacking bottle. Unperturbed, the Asiatic waves his magic handkerchief over the spots and they disappear. Musty seizes the handkerchief and hurries back to the disgruntled patron. He waves the handkerchief before the blacking-stained victim, and lo the latter appears clad in a new suit of clothes.

Flossie, the ticket-seller, attempts to steal a tune from the music box which Musty has broken, and finding it out of order hangs upon it a sign reading "Out of Order" and calls upon Musty for aid. Musty fixes it so well that it explodes. Then he hangs a sign reading "Now it is" beside the original sign of "Out of Order."

The escalator or moving stairway is operated by power which the human dynamo generates by riding a stationary bicycle, and when the fat boy from the freak room steps on the slanting lift, the human dynamo breaks down. Musty has to oil him in order to start the escalator again. Later Musty takes his place but tiring of the work, uses a magic cracker to coax Leonardo the lion to ride the sationary wheel. Leonardo does beautifully until his tail catches in the mechanism, when Musty has to hurry to the rescue.

Musty's boss sets him to operating the old prize package game in front of the box office, and Musty's spiel hugely interests a large crowd consisting of two children until the spieler spies a copper and beats a hasty retreat. Once more taking tickets at the escalator another "tough" tries to enter without the formality of presenting his credentials, but Musty once more proves equal to the occasion. He pulls the cord connecting with the trick doors at the head of the stairs, and the "tough" loses no time in "coming down."

THE CRIPPLED HAND (Five Parts—May 1).—The cast: The Rich Man (Robert Leonard); The Little Girl (Ella Hall); The Manager (Marc Robbins); The Prima Donna (Gladys Rockwell); The Cripple (Kingsley Benedict). Scenario by Calder Johnstone. Produced by Robert Leonard and David Kirkland.

There was a little girl who toiled in a department store and lived a lonely existence in her attic room. Every night she would look out of her window into the sky and imagine she was gazing into the court of fairyland. There was a rich man of the city who was also a dreamer of dreams. One day he missed his handkerchief and stopped in a nearby store to purchase one. The little girl waited upon him, and she admired the handsome man greatly.

The rich man is induced by a popular prima donna to back her theatrical venture. The little girl is discharged from the store and seeks work elsewhere in vain. The rich man has conceived as a means of advertising the show he is backing the idea to place a slipper on exhibition and give employment to the girl who can wear it.

The little dreamer wanders past the theater and her attention is attracted by two girls who had worked with her in the store, talking excitedly as they looked at a newspaper and then throw it away. The little girl picks up the paper and sees the announcement of the competition. After a moment's hesitation, she goes in, tries on the slipper and it, of course, fits her perfectly. She is given the promised engagement.

A man with an injured hand is waiting at the stage door. When the prima donna enters he thinks of the time when he was an accomplished violinist. The prima donna had apparently fallen violently in love with him, but later was unfaithful, and during a quarrel, the woman had cut his hand in such a manner that he was crippled for life.

The little girl, greatly fatigued, takes refuge in the prima donna's dressing room and goes to sleep. After the show several members of the company congregate in the prima donna's room. The prima donna urges the rich man to stay after the others have gone, and when the little girl wakes up she sees the two.

The cripple has entered the theater unseen, sneaks into the prima donna's room and is in the act of shooting her when the little girl rushes forward and deflects the bullet. There is a happy ending for the little girl has found her Prince at last, and there is a reconciliation between the cripple and her former sweetheart.

THE LITTLE SHEPHERD OF BARGAIN ROW (Essanay—Five Parts—April 24).—The cast: Nora Blake (Sallie Fisher); Joseph Hyman (Richard C. Travers); Dickie Hyman (John Junior); Henry Hyman, the father (John Cossar); Lucile Hudson (Betty Brown); Mrs. Hudson (Florence Oberle); Edna Allen (Alice McChesney); Manson (Richardson Cotton).

Nora Blake, brought up among the poor of the tenements where the toiling mothers have no time to hunt bargains though every penny counts, knew where to buy things the cheapest, so they called her "The Little Shepherd of Bargain Row." The little shepherd fought herself up from the counters until she became the trusted private secretary of Henry J. Hyman, owner of the famous Hyman's jewelry store.

"Dickie" Hyman, the younger son, has just been expelled from school when the story opens and the elder Joseph, a rich man's son too lazy to be bad, is betrothed to Lucile Hudson, daughter of a scheming mother. Travers, the manager of the store, is jealous of Nora's standing with the owner, who has repeatedly signified that in event of his death he wished Nora to assume the management for his sons.

On the night of his death he asked repeatedly for Nora, but the scheming Travers, already in too deep from purloined jewels, sees that she is not found. He flashes letters from Hyman's deathbed to prove he is to be manager. However, he is wise—or unwise—enough to keep Nora in her position.

Travers gives Lucile an expensive necklace, substituting an imitation, and also schemes with her mother, Mrs. Hudson, for the disposition of other jewels.

In the meantime the two Hyman boys go on an auto trip to forget their grief. Joseph, the elder, for whom Nora feels a genuine affection, is badly hurt. Nora visits the house and learns of Travers' duplicity. Resourceful young woman that she is, she recovers the lost jewels, has Travers arrested and rights most of the wrongs. As she and Joseph are alone Dickie and Edna, Nora's protege whose interest in Dickie she feared, burst into the room and announce their marriage. Nora is delighted. Only one thing more is required to make her completely happy.

"Will you accept the management of the store and me for life?" asks Joseph.

"Here goes my independence," laughs Nora, the suffragette, as Joseph's arm encircled her waist.

AT PINEY RIDGE (Selig—5 Parts—May 1).—The cast: Cindy Lane (Fritzi Brunette); Zeb Lane (Al W. Filson); Jack Rose (Leo Pierson); Mark Brierson (Ed. J. Polk); General Deering (Frank Clark); Azalia (Vivian Reed); Major Jartree (James Bradbury); Rube Hollar (Wm. Scott); Dagmar (Lilian Hayward). Directed by William Robert Daly.

Zeb Lane and his daughter Cindy live in Piney Ridge, up in the mountains. In the town below is Mark Brierson, cashier of General Deering's bank, of whom Cindy is thinking. Brierson is worried. He is not worried because of the grief-stricken, anxious girl up in the mountains, but desperate because of his need of money to cover dishonest investments made in the bank's name. General Deering and his teller, Major Jartree, confer as to the bank's resources, being unable to discover the leakage.

Jack Rose, a young farmer, has made money at Piney Ridge. He writes General Deering that he will call the next day to draw from the bank $42,000 with which to purchase machinery. Cindy goes to the mountain brook for water and there meets Mark Brierson. The girl pleads with Brierson to marry her, but he will not listen. Cindy eventually informs her father, who wants to go and kill the man; but Cindy, who still loves the man, refuses to speak. That night Cindy steals from the cabin, bound for she knows not where.

Mark Brierson has set his eyes upon Azalia, the daughter of General Deering, for he thinks he may retrieve his fallen fortunes and escape punishment for his defalcations should he wed the girl. Jack Rose, a supper guest at General Deering's home, overhears Azalia inform a servant of her father's financial troubles. Jack, through his love for Azalia, resolves not to withdraw his money from the bank. Cindy Lane has wandered all day down the mountain sides and finally into town. She collapses at General Deering's door. There she is discovered by her former suitor, Jack Rose, who takes her to her home. Time passes and Cindy becomes a mother. And then it is that Cindy's parents discover that the infant is tainted with negro blood. Then one night the baby is discovered dead.

A week later, Cindy reads that General Deering is to give a dance at his home that night. She resolves to hover near, hoping to again meet Mark Brierson to whom she is loyal. Her father sees Cindy depart and assuming that she is going to the guilty man follows her with loaded gun. At General Deering's home the night of the dance, Jack Rose proposes to Azalia. He tells the maiden he does not know who his parents are, for he was found when an infant at a cabin door in Piney Ridge. Brierson, en route to the dance, again meets Dagmar and tells the woman that he may need her services that evening.

Jack and Azalia confide their secret to General Deering, who immediately collects his guests and announces his daughter's engagement. Brierson hears this startling news with rage. He summons Dagmar, who is lurking nearby, and tells her that this marriage can never take place, for Jack Rose has negro blood in his veins. He then makes public this false accusation, and the guests leave the mansion. Only Jack and Brierson remain with General Deering and his daughter. "I won't speak a word of love to Azalia until I have nailed this lie," exclaims Jack Rose to General Deering.

Then old Zeb Lane enters the Deering mansion and inquires of Brierson where Cindy is, and telling him that her baby had "nigger" blood in it. Brierson tells Zeb that Rose is the man he wants, but Cindy refutes this statement. Some time later Jack Rose receives $200,000 from a New York syndicate for ore land near Piney Ridge, and later resolves to go to Zeb Lane and personally refute the charges made against him.

General Deering and his daughter, followed by Brierson, call at Zeb Lane's cabin to inquire after Cindy. Jack Rose wends his way, seeking an explanation from the old mountaineer. Just then Major Jartree arrives with the news that General Deering's cashier speculated in the general's name; that there isn't $10,000 cash on hand and that fully $100,000 will be needed for the obligations the cashier has imposed. General Deering turns to the now cowering Brierson. "If you want to stay out of jail get out of the state tonight," he exclaims. Jack Rose comes to Deering's aid. "I've got $200,000 for my land. I reckon that will tide you over," he says.

When Brierson is leaving, he meets Cindy, who tells him: "There's only one way you can save yourself, Mark—marry me." "All right," whispers Brierson, "we'll get married. Bring that horse to the old cedar, and we'll ride double." As Cindy goes after the horse, Brierson and Jack Rose meet face to face. There is a struggle and the men are separated by Zeb Lane and mountaineers.

"Let Cindy decide who is the guilty man," shouts Jack Rose.

"Whoever she brings that horse for, she'll go to. I'll shoot the first man that makes a move," exclaims Zeb.

Up the hill toils Cindy with the horse. She pauses to speak to Jack Rose. Zeb Lane's rifle is about to spit fire, but Cindy springs between the rifle muzzle and Jack Rose. Brierson dodges around the corner of the cabin and makes his escape. Then it is that old Zeb Lane realizes that Brierson is the man whom he has been seeking.

Weeks later, Jack Rose has purchased the Brierson plantation at a foreclosure sale. Brierson risks capture to return after money and securities he has hidden under bricks in the fireplace of the house. He meets Dagmar. The woman, intoxicated, tells Brierson that she is not his mother, but that he is black just the same. Their conversation is overheard by servants, who summon Jack Rose and General Deering.

Cindy, who has been watching the house in the hope that Brierson would return, confronts the man. He endeavors to escape, but is prevented by Jack Rose. Brierson finds all doors locked. He rushes to the balcony. Down the road is old Zeb Lane. He spies Brierson on the balcony, takes careful aim and shoots the scoundrel through the heart. Jack Rose and Azalia are again happy in their love, while Cindy mourns the passing of the only man she has ever loved, for she is faithful unto death.

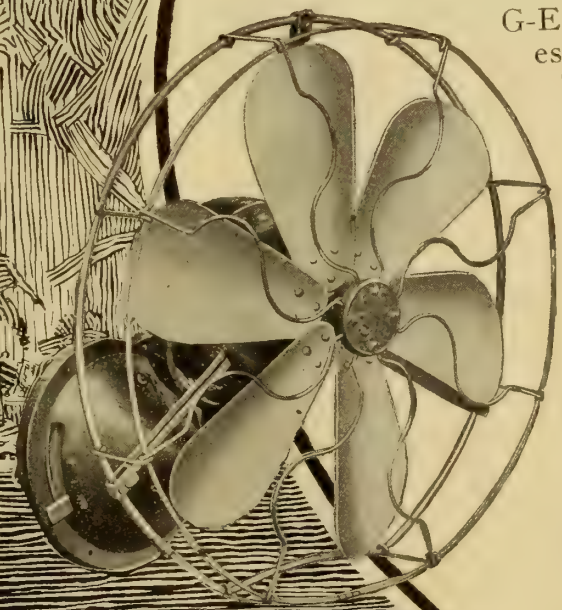
Coolness

Bring it into your theatres with G-E Fans; as they noiselessly swing from side to side, they search out the stuffy corners, keeping the air in motion—fresh and cool.



G-E Oscillating Fans are built especially for Moving Picture Theatres. Look for the famous G-E monogram in the center when buying fans.

For over twenty years the G-E Fans have held the leadership in quality, service and reliability; they cost but a few cents a day to operate with no more attention than oiling once a year.

Your local dealer or lighting company sells G-E Fans. If you cannot get them quickly write our office nearest you.

Move Into the Quality Class

Quality does not imply bigness. However large or small your theatre, you can rise to the Quality class.

Here are some of the theatres that have succeeded by giving their patrons good films by means of White Light Projection. It has paid them in lowered expenses and increased receipts.

What they have done you can do. There is a

Wagner WHITE LIGHT Converter

for every style and size of theatre.

Details in Bulletin 10923 and booklet, "Ghosts."

Experience!!

EXPERIENCE

according to Webster, is to "know or prove by trial," and that's exactly what we have been doing in the handling of projection apparatus FOR MORE THAN TWENTY YEARS!

Is easily the biggest word in the English language. It is the answer to success or failure—efficiency or incompetence!

EXPERIENCE

has neither LENGTH, BREADTH nor DEPTH yet it can be seen—and seen quickly, too, in your purchases of projection apparatus!

Don't regard projection equipment as a mere collection of gears, cast iron, glass and sheet metal. Insist upon service—reliability—dependability—three essentials to be found only in the stable, substantial character of the house that executes your order.

Representative exhibitors of the better class everywhere confine their purchases to us—and the older, wiser and more experienced they are the more certain are we to please them.

KLEINE OPTICAL COMPANY, DISTRIBUTORS OF MOTION PICTURE THEATRE EQUIPMENT

Incorporated 1897—GEORGE KLEINE, President

166 North State Street, Chicago

too bad—

—we're sold so far ahead of our present ability to produce machines that it is out of the question to exhibit at either of the Expositions.

You see, if we did exhibit, it would only add to the number of those who want the Projector and can't (yet) get it.

We surely regret that through these conditions we lose this splendid opportunity of acquainting you with the machine.

but listen!

If a desire for better pictures has aroused your interest in this latest advancement in projection—

—remember that the latch-string is out, and that we will gladly show you this remarkable machine, and demonstrate it under actual working conditions.

Or, if you are not coming to the Expositions, drop us a line, and we'll do our best by mail.

Actors are the pivot of the motion picture business—instruments of public entertainment—they soothe the distressed and make life brighter.

It's Art—their art—and art is a hard master. Many are successful in youth and many have no energy left to provide for their own old age. The pathos of the sick and helpless—our own sick and helpless—should force us to help—we of the film world must—each of us do our share to help—and then the big-hearted American public will open its purse-strings.

The Little Shepherd of Bargain Row

in 5 acts

By Howard McKent Barnes

Directed by Fred E. Wright

The lily springs up from the murky tarn, pure as chastened silver.

The Little Shepherd rose from the muck of the foul tenements as untainted as the lily of the mire.

As the lily radiated beauty and sweetness on the tainted swamp air, She spread love and sunshine amid the dank drafts reeking from the dens of vice.

It is the story of a girl's brave fight from the depths of poverty and vice to the heights of purity and success.

The UNIVERSAL GREATEST PROGRAM ON EARTH

STRAWS do not indicate the way the wind blows one half so surely as the Exhibitors' NET PROFITS indicate "what the public wants" in the matter of pictures. When the Exhibitors of Feature programs quit kidding themselves and begin counting the NET instead of the GROSS, there will be fewer fat fees for the sheriff and many more regular movie patrons in your town. A glimpse at the character of the features released week of May 22 on the Regular Universal Program, as briefly reviewed below, will convince you that when it comes to variety, to stars, to all the qualities that make two and three reel subjects popular, you have to come back to the UNIVERSAL PROGRAM. If you can get its service now grab it quick. If you can't—watch your very first opportunity.

King Baggot in "Half a Rogue." With Edna Hunter and Clara Beyers. From the celebrated story by Harold MacGrath. Directed by Henry Otto. Eighteenth Red Feather Production. Released May 22. Here's a happy combination for you. One of Harold MacGrath's rollicking romances with the punch that has made his books "best sellers" for years; with King Baggot and lovely Edna Hunter; with the direction in the capable hands of Henry Otto, who produced the famous "Undine"; with an unusual cast and the usual lavish Red Feather production. King's reputation as "a gay dog" is largely due to his constant association with "actresses"—he is a playwright by "trade"—and it gets him in bad back in the little town where his aunt-mother lives in the old homestead. The girl lives there, too, and a most absorbing story tells how King let folks know that he wasn't as black as he was painted. Clara Beyers in a vampire character, who wasn't really a rogue, either, adds spice to an all-round fine production. Book this for popularity and profit.

"The Woman Who Followed Me." Two Reel Gold Seal Romantic Drama with Gladys Brockwell and Juan de la Cruz. Directed by Robert Leonard. Released May 23. By Gosh, if Gladys ever started following you the way she did the hee-ro in this punch drama, the chances are you'd forget all about your fin-ancee and foller her around like you liked it. Gladys Brockwell has already made a name for herself on the Universal screen and she gets better every picture. If this cast and story were in the hands of the average "feature" producer the only thing for you to do would be to put your hand on your watch and beat it. Story, acting, and production make this a mighty fine attraction.

Mary Fuller in "The Limousine Mystery." Two Reel Victor Detective Drama. Directed by Lucius Henderson. Released May 24. A detecatif drama as is. That is, as it should be. That is, again, the mystery of the death in the limousine is not solved (and your audiences can't guess how it happened) until the final scene of the picture. "Our Mary" in a new role, that will fill the fans with delight.

Thomas Jefferson in "Corporal Billy's Comeback." Two Reel Laemmle Memorial Day Drama. From the stirring Saturday Evening Post Story by Harry Leon Wilson, co-author of "The Man from Home;" Author of "Ruggles of Red Gap," and many other successful stories and plays. Directed by George Cochrane. Released May 25. Corporal Billy was the last of the G. A. R. boys in town. He had always led the Decoration Day parade, and when they left him out he was heart-broken. How he proved his heroism and showed he was neither too old nor too proud to fight makes one of the strongest Memorial Day stories the Universal has ever presented. Book this special if you are not fortunate enough to be showing the regular Universal Program.

"The Unconventional Girl." With Edith Roberts and Joe Girard. Two Reel Unconventional Drama. Directed by Robert F. Hill. Released May 26. If Edith hadn't been an unconventional girl she wouldn't have tried amateur burglary, nor would she have learned of her lover's perfidy. It is quite possible, too, that she would never have met Joe and a startling climax would have been deprived of a telling love scene.

Harry Carey in "The Wedding Guest." Two Reel 101-Bison Western Romantic Drama. Directed by Jacques Jaccard. Released May 27. Harry is sure some sheriff, and as bold and brave as a real Western sheriff should be. There is only one person he's afraid of and that's old Colonel Dan Cupid. What he does to Harry makes the sheriff throw away his star in disgust. A particularly fine Western, with enough heart punches to make a five reeler.

Ben Wilson in "A Gentle Volunteer." With charming Dorothy Phillips in the title role. Three Reel Memorial Day Rex Special. Directed by Ben Wilson. Released May 28. Book this, good friends. Book it for Memorial Day, or do you call it Decoration Day? A wonderful drama of the Civil War. A really big production. Cut from four reels. You'll wonder how it was done for it's packed so full of action now that it might easily be padded to five reels. This will make a wonderful picture for Decoration Day. Get busy, if you are not fortunate enough to be showing the Universal Program.

WELL PLAYED, CORRECTLY STAGED PICTURIZATION OF CLASSIC.

Dustin Farnum in

DAVID GARRICK

Pallas-Paramount.

DIRECTOR	Frank Lloyd
AS A WHOLE	Delightful
STORY	Well-known classic
DIRECTION	Excellent
PHOTOGRAPHY	Very fine
LIGHTINGS	Effective
CAMERA WORK	Excellent
STAR	Seemed ideal in part
SUPPORT	Very well chosen
EXTERIORS	Atmosphere retained
INTERIORS	Very fine
DETAIL	Remarkably fine
LENGTH	Five parts

HERE we have a picturization of the well-known classic of by-gone days in London. In attempting to portray before the camera a story of this period, the director is marking out for himself a tremendous amount of work in the way of preparing proper detail as to costumes, settings and properties.

The Pallas company must be complimented on the production they have given us and Director Lloyd is surely to be praised for the manner in which the atmosphere of this period has been maintained. The best compliment of all is that the story moves along so humanly you forget the fact that it is a costume production and live the action with the characters.

Since this story is a simple tale of a human incident, the whole is, of course, not a tremendous offering, but it certainly is a little gem, in that it is an almost perfect presentation of a classic.

The photography throughout is remarkably clear, the lightings are good and we have intelligent use of close-ups. The atmosphere is not obtrusive, but still, is in perfect keeping throughout, and the detail has been given very careful attention, even down to the cutlery used at the table in the famous dinner scene.

"David Garrick" has been done before in a less pretentious way in the films, but this offering truly marks the advance which has been made in the production of films in the time which has elapsed between the previous offering and this one.

Mr. Farnum as Garrick seems exactly equipped for the role, because he has always been rather the matinee-idol type and in this, as the gentleman-actor, of the period of powdered wigs and duels, he fits in perfectly.

Winifred Kingston as the merchant's daughter gives us one of the best portrayals she has ever put over in any film offering.

Herbert Standing as the father is excellent. In the remainder of the cast we found some splendid types and every part was nicely handled.

In the titles we found the use of border designs made from old wood cuts, which helped decidedly in maintaining the proper atmosphere. These titles are following, in a way, the thought of Tom Ince, who has been giving us title cards for some time which suggested by the painting thereon the theme of the action at that period in the story.

Taken as a whole, I consider this offering to be one of the really splendid films of recent months, for the reason that it is a finished production, in every way, of a classic which can be shown to any audience with an assurance of genuine appreciation.

It is most decidedly very much "worth-while."

Others in the cast were Frank Bonn, Lydia Yeamans Titus, Olive White and Mary Mersch.

Edna May scores in new film play. Friends of the former "Belle of New York" crowded into the Fulton Theatre last night to see the one-time comic opera star appear in "Salvation Joan," a stirring seven-part romantic drama filmed by the Vitagraph Company.

VITAGRAPH

THE NEW YORK HERALD.

Edna May in "Salvation Joan" was a part of the reincarnation of her famous characterization of the Salvation Lassie in "The Belle of New York."

The New York Times.

Edna May returns as a movie star in "Salvation Joan." The charming beauty that made Edna May a musical comedy favorite is still potent. It looked more like a Monday night at the Opera than a movie first showing.

The World.

Her admirers last night were delighted with her appearance in the familiar costume and in familiar scenes.

The Morning Telegraph

The character of Joan Crawford, heroine of this gripping drama of the screen, is fully within the dramatic and emotional grasp of Edna May.

Brooklyn Eagle

Edna May as a screen player makes good—there is no doubt of that.
The cast is of unusual quality, whether we speak of leading players or of those portraying character parts. The staging is sumptuous.

The Sun.

Still they "Follow On," when "The Belle of New York" returned to a voiceless theatre last night there was just as vigorous applause as when she used to sing that tantalizing song about the crowds that followed her. The old fever was again made manifest in a big crowd in the Fulton Theatre, where she once more wore the Salvation Army uniform.

Evening Sun

"Salvation Joan" is similar to Miss May's most noted role in that she portrays a Salvation Army girl and she makes a charming figure on the screen.

N. Y. Journal of Commerce

Miss May, since her retiring from the stage, proves that she lost none of her talent as an actress.
The photography of the picture is wonderfully good, and the star, as a portrayer of emotions, left nothing to be desired. She was especially attractive in the Salvation Army uniform.

New York American

Another film debut of unusual importance occurred at the Fulton Theatre, last evening when Edna May, clever actress and noted beauty, appeared in a new film drama, entitled "Salvation Joan."

THE WORLD RENOWNED COMEDY KING

FRANK DANIELS

For many months leading American exhibitors wrote the Vitagraph requesting a series of superlative one-reel comedies.

For many months Vitagraph sought a comedian who was different and who would be able to take his place at the head of all the motion picture fun-makers.

They finally sought out FRANK DANIELS.
That was the beginning—and the end is not yet.

THE ESCAPADES OF MR. JACK are the first samples of the soundness of the exhibitor's theory as to the market for superlative one reelers and redound to the credit of Vitagraph for selecting

A Contributing Factor

AS a bank is judged by its reserves, so you will find it wise to consider a film service in relation to its resources in capital and—in men.

V. L. S. E. owes its substantial success, not alone to the strength of its product, nor to the unassailable fairness of its marketing methods.

A very vital contributing factor to this success has been the efficiency, the interested earnestness and the high general calibre of its sales force.

This force is made up of the type of men who appreciate the value of permanency in their business association—

> Who are vitally concerned in the merit of the product they represent, and jealous as to the correctness of the principles and policies they are asked to employ in marketing that product—
>
> Who seek to give the best of that which is theirs in the furtherance of their customers' interests, and so demand that they shall be unfettered by office politics or like handicaps—
> Who ask only to stand on their own feet and to be measured solely by that which they accomplish, not only for their company, but for their trade.

It is because these principles are so stolidly implanted in the very foundation of this organization that exhibitors are assured of always finding the same people with whom to do business.

And it is by reason of these same principles that they are guaranteed a service at all times which goes further than the mere letter of the word, and which, large numbers of exhibitors are good enough to tell us, make for unusual pleasure and profit in their dealings with us.

V. L. S. E., Inc.,
New York.

Gentlemen:—

I seldom pass around the bouquets but feel so inspired at this time I am going to tell you what I think of the "BIG FOUR" service.

First of all I want to compliment the V. L. S. E. organization on their system of booking. There is absolutely no question but that the 'open booking' policy is as far ahead of the regular feature programme service as that service is ahead of the service programme when we used to take what the exchange shipped us and asked no questions. Now that there is some variety to select from I candidly think the BIG FOUR has made a move in the right direction. The others will come.

It has been my pleasure to use the V. L. S. E. service since the first release and picture for picture I have certainly been well pleased. The coming subjects look even better than the average of the past and certainly you have had some of the best pictures ever released on any programme. I am starting now to repeat many of your subjects and find that they take exceptionally well.

I also want to express my appreciation of the courtesies and co-operation received from your office. It is a genuine pleasure for me to be associated with the BIG FOUR FAMILY and I trust that our future business relations will be as pleasant as they have been in the past.

With very best wishes, I am

Very truly yours,

I want every exhibitor in the United States to read what the N. Y. Evening Mail and Wide Magazine of April 22nd say about the new House Peters picture "The Closed Road" produced by that great genius Maurice Tourneur. See the picture. It will show you the quality you will find in all the "new day" subjects now being released on the one a week basis by the World Film Corporation.

Griswold.....George Cowl

Directed by Maurice Tourneur.

Reviewed by Patrick Kearney.

This Paragon feature is one of the few faultless pictures the writer has ever seen. It is faultless as to story, acting and direction. This is high praise to give to a film, but it is well deserved, and only the fact that it is not as to length a pretentious offering prevents its being one of the very best films ever made. A ten or twelve reel production, say, handled in the same perfect style and with the same amount of material, would sweep the country. It is too bad that this one is on such a small scale. As it is, the picture should prove a gold mine for exhibitors.

The story as seen through the film is entirely without trite developments. Every proud to have written. It is entirely original or irrelevant that no one can have the faintest incident is closely bound to every other; there are no forced climaxes or loose ends; everything coincidental or irrelevant that no one can have the faintest out, and the suspense is so well handled that no one can be carefully kept idea, until the very last scene, as to whether the ending will be a happy one or a tragic. The whole thing is a marvel of clever workmanship.

This remarkable dramatic suspense has been created without any of the old-time devices. director. Suspense has been created without any of the old-time devices. Originality marks the director's handling of the last scene, a striking instance of his talent is shown in his staging of the electric chair, about to die. But the governor sends much-used one and so often staged that one might expect it to be trite. The innocent man is in the electric chair, about to die. But the governor sends his pardon. Ordinarily the death house is in a large measure due to the chair; then the messenger suddenly rushes in and stops the man in the But here there is no death house nor electric chair. A switchboard is shown and a hand is seen to move one switch which is in itself a Then at the last minute another hand seizes the operator's and pulls it back. Such a scene, shown when the spectators are at the anxiety-breaking point, should drive any assemblage into storms of applause. It is a stroke of genius, and it is only one example of the sort of thing out of which the film is made.

Another series of scenes, wonderfully effective, is that one showing the agonies of the prisoner on the eve of his electrocution. He goes through various weird nightmares and sees visions, which are shown with excellent double-exposure work.

In fact, there is so much of the out of the ordinary in the picture that it would take three columns to do it justice. The thing to do is to see it, and it is a picture which will please every one.

House Peters and Barbara Tennant play the leading roles, and in support are Lionel Adams, George Cowl and Leslie Stowe.

Goldberg in the Movies

—and the Story of a Young Man's Climb from Nothing a Week to a Millionaire's Income

Goldberg—cartoonist of the N. Y. Evening Mail and creator of "Foolish Questions," "I'm the Guy," "Father Was Right," and a half-dozen other syndicated cartoon successes known to 3,000,000 newspaper reading families all over the United States—has evolved a new kind of moving picture.

The House of Pathé has coaxed Goldberg into the moving picture field, and within a few days the Pathé Exchange, in conjunction with the N. Y. Evening Mail Syndicate, will show Goldberg Animated Cartoons in moving picture theatres in almost every city and town in this country.

For months and months, Goldberg has been sketching away in his studio in the tower of The Evening Mail office in New York, and now the Goldberg movie-comic is ready to step out. People who have seen advance performances of these new funny films say that every foot and flicker is a riot of laughter.

It is not strange that Goldberg has taken so well to the movies. Goldberg, beyond all other American cartoonists, is a cartoonist of action. Goldberg's characters are LIVE, living people. His newspaper cartoons themselves are almost moving pictures.

Goldberg Sees The Fun In Human Nature

But there is always more to a Goldberg cartoon than mere fun and action. Goldberg, in a good-humored way, gets human nature's number. He sees us with our coats and collars off—just as we are. He understands the human race—its foibles and its funny little frailties. And this explains why swarms of people buy papers with Goldberg cartoons day after day.

The biography of Reuben L. Goldberg reads like a moving picture romance, itself. Nine years ago he was graduated from an engineering college. Then he started to work at $12 a week drawing funny pictures for a San Francisco paper, after his father had advised him to stay out of the newspaper business because there was no money in it.

Sometime later he came to New York and got $50 a week from The Evening Mail, and he has been on The Evening Mail ever since. He jumped to $65 a week—then $75—then $100. Then other newspapers began to ask The Evening Mail to share Goldberg with them—their readers wanted him—and his cartoons were syndicated and it was not long before Goldberg had an audience of about 7,000,000 readers a day. At this time his earnings increased to $450 a week. Goldberg has now become a national figure, and 3,000,000 families contribute to his income. A contract just signed with The Evening Mail Syndicate gives him an annual salary of $50,000—and with moving picture royalties and other percentages his earnings the coming year will probably exceed $125,000.

R. L. GOLDBERG

Goldberg is the father of a dozen phrases that have swept the country like popular songs the past few years: "I'm the Guy," "Father Was Right," "It's All Wrong," "I Never Thought of That," and others. He is also the originator of "Old Man Alf of the Alphabet," "Foolish Questions," and other famous cartoon series.

In the new Pathé moving pictures Goldberg will introduce some of his old familiar characters and a troupe of brand new ones, and—for the first time ever—Goldberg's "Boob Weekly."

Get your double share of Goldberg fun—in your daily newspaper and at your moving picture theatre.

You want to know Goldberg. If your newspaper does not have him—ask why.

And ask the manager of your moving picture theatre to book Goldberg soon.

Dear Sir:

I desire to compliment you on the drawing power of your latest serial, The Iron Claw.

I find, upon looking into the matter carefully, that the patrons of my house in which I am showing the picture, are very well pleased and thoroughly entertained. I would heartily suggest that you increase the picture to twenty episodes.

I positively do not think that any harm could come of such an increase, as it would draw for the six episodes without any doubt whatever.

Hoping to hear of such a change, I am,

Very truly yours,

Facts and Comments

DOWN in North Carolina a popular Baptist preacher devoted an eloquent sermon to "Four indictments of the Motion Picture." The reverend Doctor indicts the motion picture on these four sweeping grounds: First, it is "a menace to education," second it is a "menace to patriotism," third it is a "menace to Christianity," and last it is a "menace to character." We are told by this preacher that wherever the motion picture is allowed to open on Sundays "where one person goes to church one hundred go to the motion picture theatre."

"It is estimated," says the reverend gentleman, "that Southern Baptists expend $3,500,000 annually on motion pictures." This is where the shoe pinches. The church has never quite gotten rid of the habit of relying on the "secular arm" for getting people into the church. The Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady pointed this out very sharply to the clergymen who appeared in Washington urging Federal censorship. To be logical our clerical friends ought to start an agitation for the revival of those ancient but unvenerable statutes which made it a criminal offence to stay away from church on Sunday. The churches which cannot successfully cope with the situation described by our reverend friend without invoking the aid of the penal law have obviously failed in their mission.

WHAT we need today is fewer pictures and better ones. We must also come to the proper grading of pictures. There is no institution which can furnish the public with grand opera and Coney Island amusements at the same time and with an equal degree of success. This fact is not apprehended by all of our producers. They are too many of them aiming at the same target with all kinds of ammunition. In the period of crystallization which must follow the present period of overproduction the grading of films is bound to be one of the biggest factors.

HERE is a question freely debated wherever exhibitors meet. Is it possible for a producing company to supply the market with programs and with features at the same time? Of course it's possible, but can it be done with advantage to the exhibitor and with profit to the producing company? Opinions vary but not very much. The most commonly accepted idea seems to be that either the quality of the program or the quality of the features is bound to suffer. If both are kept up to the proper high level the cost is tremendous and makes profits doubtful. We would like to hear from practical exhibitors just what they think of the problem. Free expression of opinions might help and enlighten some of our producers.

INDISCRIMINATE denunciation and destructive policies will never reach whatever evils may exist in the production of motion pictures. The plants and studios where motion pictures are made are human institutions devoted to education and entertainment. Mistakes will always be made, but no fair-minded man or woman even slightly familiar with the development of the motion picture from the earliest days to this present moment will want to deny a marvelous improvement. This improvement has been achieved entirely from within. It has never been seriously contended anywhere or by anybody that censorship established by politicians has improved the motion pictures. The influence of the three legalized censors boards upon the industry as a whole has been absolutely negligible.

PROTESTS are pouring in upon the Governor of New York urging him to veto the Cristman-Wheeler Censorship Bill. These protests come not only from the men interested directly or indirectly in the film industry, but from the great body of the electorate itself. Many persons prominent in the civic and social life of this great state have joined in the protest against censorship as an infringement upon the freedom of expression. It was even thus at Washington, where well-known teachers and editors and clergymen appeared to protest against censorship on the broad grounds of public policy. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD in the last state election sent a representative to appeal to the patrons of the motion picture for their support in the campaign against censorship. At that time we gained the firm conviction that if the issue were submitted to the people they would make a certain end of all legalized censorship.

Judging Plays

By Louis Reeves Harrison.*

SELECTING screen stories is an art in itself. A producer is not to be blamed for picking those least effective and rejecting the strongest. Just as men who are temperamental enough to picture life naturally seldom qualify in commercial procedure, so the good business man has a limited view of what is really artistic. He feels more sure of the commonplace, and he is often jarred by what is strikingly original. A bull in a china shop is an artist in commercial life or a business man in artistry, as a rule, but either may learn—almost any man of intelligence can adapt himself to his circumstances by keeping thoroughly posted on developments in his situation.

One of the first things to consider is whether the story has its roots in human nature and social environment. The best drama is that which reflects modern sentiment, whether in modern or ancient setting, and provides inspiration for all classes of people. A story without a message is a story without a punch. Put the message down in cold type and study it. If it is offered in defense of a creed, or of a senseless fad, it has no appeal to the greatest number, nor to those who wish the greatest number the greatest good.

The theme of a story, however, may be all the stronger in that it protests against conditions which we have learned to tolerate, particularly against evil forces which seem to endure in our political and social conditions, and it may well be worth a trial. The best plays are those in accord with advancing ideals along the lines of what is known to be scientifically true. The worst are those which tend to perpetuate what has been false and misleading in the past.

The setting may be of any time and of any country if the main idea is up to date and in accord with the truth. Consider the Galsworthy play "Justice," now attracting general attention. It is decidedly British in background and treatment, but it depicts an almost universal attitude of humanity against its erring members who have to atone for their sins in prison and pay the penalty a second time if they dare attempt their own redemption. The plea for compassion is in full accord with modern enlightenment and bound to endure until its object is accomplished. In spite of this, according to Mr. Galsworthy, a well-known American jurist said to him, "I don't think your play is adapted to American conditions." So much for the average jurist. He is becoming more or less of an unpleasant farceur to Americans.

We are reaching beyond stale traditions and institutions which have served their time. Part of the mission of the screen is to fall in line, or lead the line, for improvement in everything that pertains to our welfare as a people.

Themes of the last century, themes of a past generation, themes of last year will not do unless they conform to all that we have learned since then. On that account they are dangerous. If a story submitted for examination is false in basic principle, it should be promptly rejected, and why not apply the same rule to old plays? Why perpetuate in them what is bound to be offensive to intelligence and misleading to the great mass. The man who produces such blights on the industry may travel in steamships, but his whole natural tendency is to paddle along in a dugout. He may be greatly pleased that he is getting along so fast, but his is not the force of mind that made higher speed possible.

Secondary in importance is the establishment of character. Creative imagination is measured by the theme and significance of character more than by development—the latter may vary according to the mood and selective taste of the author. He must be able to give convincing portraiture of life to his people, especially when they are fanciful entities, "turn to shapes the forms of things unknown." It is here that his powers of observation and breadth of experience are called upon quite as much as his creative imagination. He must assimilate what he has seen and read into a believable human creature suited to his needs. Such was Shakespeare's way.

"The hastiest analysis of Shakespeare's power," says one of the ablest of modern critics, "detects alike in it and the diction which clothes it a visualization property of magical sensitiveness. I have already compared Shakespeare's mind to a highly sensitized photographic plate, which need only be exposed, for however brief a period, to anything in the life around him in order to receive upon its surface the firm outline of a picture which could be developed and reproduced at will." "Yet Shakespeare's impressions of the persons and things of his environment did not furnish his imagination with all its nourishment. There were, besides, the fancies floating in his mind."

We remember the characters created by Shakespeare quite as well as we remember the stories which established those characters. He grasped a theme from any source, transformed it to suit his day and intrusted its exposition to beings of his imagination who suited its development while embodying in themselves characteristics of universal interest. What his people did with his theme constituted his plot.

It is a fault of selection to lay undue stress upon plot. It would not be easy to make a synopsis of "Hamlet"—just try it—which would convey the full significance of the play. It is even doubtful whether any producer could be led by the best possible synopsis of such a story to further investigation. The mental distress and self-analysis of the leading character, wherein the deepest human interest really lies, does not respond to the demand for "action" and "situation."

It might do, under the circumstances, to assign third importance to what is really a part of the characterization, but a part so often lacking in the conduct of a cast that it can be set aside by itself, the mental science involved, the most fascinating portion of such plays as "Hamlet." The observed facts of what takes place in the mind of a character constitute the most profound and the most interesting of all character revelations. Observation and revelation of what goes on within our thoughts establishes the foundation for what is known as "Psychology."

If it be necessary to reduce judgment of screen stories to a formula, it might read thus: 1. Theme, whether modern, whether in accord with scientific truth, whether of general interest. 2. Characterization, of high importance in large plays. 3. Psychology, and thereafter give attention to Originality, Structure, and so much of Treatment as falls to the author of a story, his style of presenting his subject for ultimate treatment by the director. Better than a synopsis might be a clever preamble, which could be used on the screen, foreshadowing delicately the motif and stimulating curiosity to what is to follow in its exposition.

*Copyright, Louis Reeves Harrison.

The Roots of a New Art

By W. Stephen Bush.

EVERY once in a while a more or less distinguished highbrow scoffs at the idea that the motion picture is an art or has in itself the roots of an art. Lately there have been outbursts of this kind in literary magazines, and in the "art sections" of the daily newspapers. If we kept on ignoring these attacks on the motion picture as a purely mechanical contrivance the belief might grow that we really have nothing like art on the screen.

In a sense all art is mechanical or partakes of the mechanical. The painter, the sculptor and the musician are certain instruments which in their last analysis are mechanical. The builder of dramas, as great an artist as any, must resort to certain mechanical devices to make his work complete. Now the motion picture has elements of all the arts. You and I have seen landscapes or character portraits on the screen, the like of which are unequaled in any gallery. Rembrandt and Tintoretto, unrivaled masters of light and shade and color, have never been able to impart the element of motion into their pictures. Motion, the first and last manifestation of life, is eminently a fit subject matter for artistic treatment. We have not yet reached anything like the furthest limit of camera perfection, but we have proven beyond the peradventure of all doubt that light and shade may be controlled and imitated as much by the camera as by the brush and the palette. Just as the human power and perception behind the camera determines the use of the camera, so the power and perception behind the painter's brush determines the use of his instruments. There is art in the efforts of both—camera man and painter.

Do you believe for one moment that successful grouping can be done by a man who has not the rudiment of the sculptor's mind? Sculpture is largely a question of pose and poise. The eye of the sculptor instantaneously detects the possibilities of beauty and power in any given group of human beings. The motion picture more than statuary depends on backgrounds. The successful director must be something of a sculptor and something of a painter at the same time. Is the creation of atmosphere an artistic effort? We know it is when the effort is successful. Neither painting nor sculpture nor even architecture has the facilities for creating atmosphere which are possessed by the screen.

So much in a cursory way for the theory of the thing. What about the practice? We should like to take one of the hypercritical detractors of the screen by the hand and show him to what wonderful extent the motion picture has stimulated and improved the artistic sense and increased the artistic perceptions of the American public. We are not as a people suspected of any passionate appreciation of art. I have met poor Italian sextons living on twenty cents a day possessed of more artistic instincts and judgment than a dozen Pittsburgh millionaires. Now there is scarcely one motion picture which does not embody some touch of art. It may be crude, but it is there. Some mind gifted in artistic perception, even a trifle above the average, has put it there, and it is struggling to get into the mind of the man who sees the picture.

If there were no room for artistic expression on the screen would the greatest actors and actresses of our day have come before the camera? There is such a thing as an artistic conscience, which defies mere offers of money. I do not believe that Forbes-Robertson or Sothern or Hackett or even lesser lights would or could consent to desecrate and mock their art just for the sake of a little easy money. No amount of specious argument will induce a great artist to sell his soul and all his God-given talents for money against his better instincts. The great men I have named and many more whom I might name felt in their innermost hearts that the motion picture is a real and precious medium of artistic expression, otherwise they would never have been attracted by it.

The motion picture is the most popular and therefore despite all carping critics the most useful of all the arts. It makes good in the realm of art the old political and economic maxim: The greatest good for the greatest number.

A Note of Warning to Producers

By W. Stephen Bush.

IN a recent conversation with an American prominent in British film circles for many years the question was brought up whether upon the conclusion of peace in Europe conditions would revert to a normal basis. I ventured to hope that the new British import duties on films might be abolished or at least substantially reduced. My friend laughed at the idea. "Have you," said he, "calculated the interest on the British war debt? The Government of Great Britain will need the film tax for many years to come." At the same time word comes from Germany to the effect that all foreign films are barred by imperial decree. The Government of Italy is for some reason best known to itself putting obstacles in the way of the export of film. The sale of American made films in England has notoriously decreased. The palmy days of 1912 have gone never to return.

From time to time I see articles in the French motion picture journals and in the French secular press as well agitating against American films. For stating these obvious and palpable facts I have recently been taken to task by an esteemed British contemporary and by a distinguished French contemporary. I suppose the nervous tension now prevailing in Europe is beyond our power to understand.

What we on this side are naturally concerned about is the future of the American-made film in Europe. Let us be candid with ourselves. The prospects are not any too bright. We must look for other fields to conquer and there is no doubt whatever that these fields lie to the South of us right here on our own hemisphere. Having absorbed this fact the next big fact to be assimilated is this: The Latin-American market is not going to come after us. True, so great has been the need of films in our sister republics that at this moment there are several buyers for the South American market "in our midst." Some of these buyers describe the Latin-American market as a sad and hopeless proposition. "You can't sell more than four copies to save your life," laments one; "your American ideas don't go with us," says another. A third man will tell us that France and Italy have preempted the Latin-American market for at least a generation or two.

The real facts collected by impartial and disinterested persons are quite different. The motion picture theatres of Argentine and Uruguay and Brazil and Chile and Peru are fully up to our own average and in some cities like Rio de Janeiro and Buenos Aires the number of high-class motion picture theatres is exceptionally large. The prices of admission are at least ten per cent higher than ours. In taste and culture and refinement the audiences in the big cities of South America are, to say the least, the equal of our best.

Why is it then that but a miserable twelve per cent. of the films used in South America are of American origin? The answer is simple enough. The business in Latin-America outside of Cuba, the West Indies and Central America is controlled by two monopolies. These monopolies are making huge profits year after year and they have not the slightest desire to share their good luck with the Yankees. They are not at all interested in American films, in fact they don't care whether the American film comes south or stays north. With the most primitive implements they are reaping a wonderful harvest, why should they look around for improved machinery? Whether they are right or wrong the American producer who sees the gates of Europe slowly shutting in his face ought to get to work and enlarge his market in the new field. He will never be able to do it at long range. He must invade South America. If the profits of the monopolies now controlling the market are any criterion he ought to quadruple and quintuple his output for South America with any sort of persistent and intelligent effort.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, through its Spanish edition Cine-Mundial is in close touch with this market, it is not only a splendid advertising medium but it is in a position to render exceptional service to any producer contemplating an invasion of Latin America. Write either to THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD or to Cine-Mundial.

Remember Projection Day

IT IS of the utmost importance that you be present at Madison Square Garden at 2.30 P. M. Wednesday, May 10, to hear an address by F. H. Richardson on practical projection.

This address is one you cannot afford to miss if you are interested in the welfare of the moving picture industry, and the improvement of the performance in your own theater.

Mr. Richardson is not a new comer amongst us. For almost seven years he has been the recognized authority on matters pertaining to the practical projection of pictures. For almost seven years his entire time and energy has been given to the study of projection. He is in intimate touch with thousands of exhibitors, and moving picture machine operators, as well as exchange men and producers, and this fact has given him exceptional opportunities for the acquirement of expert knowledge.

We believe that the exhibitors of New York and vicinity could not in any possible way expend an equal amount of time to better advantage than by listening to Mr. Richardson's address, which will be amply illustrated by large drawings and photographs.

Remember the time and the place; Wednesday, May 10, at Madison Square Garden.

PICTURE PLAYERS JUBILEE PLANNED.

Under the auspices of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League, New York branch, plans are being formulated for an All Star Movie Jubilee, to be held at the Hippodrome on Sunday, May 21. It is stated that the receipts will be donated to the Actors' Fund and for the fight against censorship. Arthur D. Jacobs has been engaged to complete the arrangements. Mr. Jacobs says that many manufacturers have announced their willingness to take part in the entertainment.

BARRY RESIGNS FROM POWER'S.

William (Bill) Barry, one of the most popular and best known men in the motion picture industry, former secretary of the Screen Club, and for the past several years advertising manager of the Nicholas Power Company, manufacturers of motion picture machines, has announced his resignation to take effect May 1. Mr. Barry has secured an interest in the Monroe Press, an old established printing house, and judging from his work while with the Power's Company, the success he merits will be no doubt assured.

Grand Central Palace Opens

Exhibitors' Exposition Starts Under Splendid Auspices—Exposition Hall Well Filled.

THE Third International Exposition of the Motion Picture Art, under the auspices of the National Exhibitors' League of America, opened on Monday afternoon, May 1, at the Grand Central Palace, New York. Without exception it is the largest and most elaborate affair ever presented by the organized exhibitors. The exhibition hall at the Palace is filled with exhibits, which represent every big producing firm in the country. These firms will present personally to the public at their booths many of their big screen stars.

Monday was Allies Day and under the direction of the British Relief Association. The patronesses included Mrs. Whitelaw Reid, Mrs. Edwin Gould, Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnet, Mrs. Bradley Martin, Mrs. E. H. Harriman, Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, Mrs. Orme Wilson, Hon. Gifford Pinchot and others. The reception committee today who welcome the visitors are Major Louis Livingston Seaman, president of the committee, chairman; C. K. F. Andrewes, Mrs. Percy H. Darbyshire, Mrs. Oliver Herford, Miss May Noulton, Mrs. Walter Mulliner and Cecil N. Ponsonby. Exhibits of the latest medical and surgical appliances used at the front are demonstrated by uniformed nurses.

The exposition opened officially at 2 o'clock with a brief address by B. A. Rolfe, managing director of the Strand. The Strand Orchestra of more than sixty pieces furnished the music. Many notable fetes are to be seen.

The amateur scenario, a prize of $100, was won by David Schechner of 30 Pitt street. His scenario was entitled "His Daughter's Sacrifice." Honorable mention went to Benj. Barrish of 1447 Wilkins avenue, Brooklyn, with a scenario entitled "The Regeneration."

The men in charge of the exposition have planned a series of agreeable surprises for those who attend. From the inception of the idea of holding these expositions, they have meant more perhaps to the motion picture industry than anything else attempted. This year no expense has been spared and everything has been arranged without view to limit of any kind.

Lee O. Ochs, president of the Exhibitors' League of America, declared:

"We will present for the approval of the public this week the greatest motion picture exhibition ever attempted. There has been nothing left undone, and there will be nothing to wish for when the doors of the exposition are thrown open Monday morning. We have had wonderful co-operation from the manufacturers and big producing companies and we desire to thank them publicly for their support.

"In point of beauty, completeness and also for surprises and entertainment, this affair will go down into history as having been the greatest ever produced."

The members of the various committees express themselves as more than pleased with the way matters have shaped themselves during the past week and with what they will be able to offer to the public next week.

When the exposition is formally declared open, the crowd will at once plunge into a wealth of gaiety and frolic. It is expected that from early morning until late at night there will be a ceaseless flood of mirth and pleasure.

The Week's Program.

The program for the week follows:
Monday—Allies' Day.
Tuesday—Jewish War Sufferers.
Wednesday—German Red Cross.
Thursday—Cripples' and Orphans' Day.
Friday—California Day and Frolic Night.
Saturday—Actors' Fund Day (motion picture).
The committees are as follows:

Jewish War Sufferers—Felix M. Warburg, chairman. German Red Cross—Louis Weickman, executive secretary of German Red Cross of America, chairman; Karl Neuhoff, Christian Froeb and Chris Rebahan. Allies' Day—Mrs. Oliver Herford, chairman.

Executive Committee—Lee A. Ochs, Louis F. Blumenthal, Benjamin Lyons, I. Hartstall, Samuel Trigger, William Hilkemeier, Gus Koenigwald, Charles Haring, Otto Lederer, Charles Steiner, Max S. Oestreicher, John J. Wittman, Henry Cole, John Bolte, Abe Coleman, Frank Peters, D. Newman, H. Newman, Sam Suchman, J. J. Haggerty, A. Bauernfreund, D. Picker, N. Goldman, William Brandt, Ben Tittle, Louis Lavine, John Manheimer, Sam Lesselbaum, Julian Loeb, William Hollander, J. C. Mooney, R. Israels, J. Foster, C. Schwartz and M. Glynn.

Board of Trade Show Opens May 6

List of Concerns Who Will Be Represented at Madison Square Garden a Long One—Arrangements Complete for Entertainment and Edification of Public.

ON Saturday, May 6, at 3 o'clock the exposition of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America will open at Madison Square Garden, and continue daily, from 11 A. M. to 11 P. M., until and including Sunday, May 14. The exhibitors are giving their support and co-operation to the Board of Trade Show and will be in attendance daily after the close of their own exhibition at the Grand Central Palace, all differences between the two organizations having been satisfactorily settled as announced last week. All the exhibition space at Madison Square Garden has been sold. The exhibitors include the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, Mutual Film Corporation, Vitagraph Company of America, J. H. Hallberg, Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, Paramount Pictures Corporation; Famous Players Film Company, New York Morning Telegraph, Nicholas Power Company, Fox Film Corporation, International Film Service, Houston (Texas) Chamber of Commerce, Motion Picture News, National Cash Register Company, Bell & Howell, Simplex Photo Products Company, Typhoon Fan Company, Motion Picture Magazine, Eastman Kodak Company, Acme Lithograph Company, Novelty Slide Company, Motography, Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company, Cooper Hewitt Company, Motion Picture Appaatus Company, National Carbon Company, Universal Electric Stage Lighting Company, Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, Moving Picture World, Unicorn Film Corporation, Kinetikartoon Company, Children's Program Society, Essanay Film Manufacturing Co., Lubin Manufacturing Company, Selig Polyscope Company, The Recitagraph Company, Chicago; Animated Target Company, Skee Ball Company, Japanese Floral Features Company, Wisconsin Seating Company, Self-Raising Seat Appliance Company, W. J. Madden Candy Company, Film Fire Protection Company.

Many manufacturers and "last hour" exhibitors are now trying to obtain space, and efforts are being made to provide accommodations for them in other sections of the building, the Arena and the first balcony spaces all being taken.

Special importance is attached to the many business discussions and trade talks that will be held daily during the exposition that are designed to insure a closer co-operation among the various branches of the industry in future work for its advancement and development. This has always been the purpose of the Board of Trade conducting an exposition, though ample provision has been made to attract the general public and special features have been provided for each day in addition to the making of pictures in a specially constructed studio, the showing of the biggest and best first runs, a monster band and orchestra for concerts and also to provide music for the dance floor that will be open to the public as well as to the actors and actresses from the companies of the various film producers who have exhibits in the show.

Each day of the exposition has a special designation, as Exhibitors' Day, Manufacturers' Day, Distributors' Day, California Day, Bankers' Day, Fire Insurance Day, and Board of Trade and Bureau of Standards Day. In conjunction with the questions considered the exposition's progam includes a Fashion Day and a Society Day, each of which is becoming a new and important factor in the motion picture field.

Few, if any subjects, are of more interest to the exhibitor or theater owner and the manufacturer of films, than the insurance problems, fire appliances and safety devices, construction of studios, vaults, inspection rooms, the general reduction of fire risks and insurance rates, and the securing of better protection against accidents and property loss in studios, exchanges and theaters. All these matters will be considered on Fire Insurance Day and discussed by experts, including New York Fire Commissioner Robert Adamson and Chief of the Fire Prevention Bureau Hammitt.

The importance of financial support to any industry is too generally recognized to call for any explanation of Bankers' Day, when subjects of interest to the film industry will be discussed by members of the American Bankers' Association.

In the list of important subjects that will be intelligently discussed at the Madison Square Exposition are the "Educational Value of Motion Pictures," covering their importance in our schools and the education of future generations; the "Motion Picture Machine and Its Evolution," "Value of the Motion Picture in Crime Detection and Police Work;" "The Moralizing Force of Motion Pictures," a subject recognized and appreciated by leading clergymen; "Recruiting the Army and Navy by Motion Pictures," the importance of this field having been shown in England, and the "Motion Picture and Commercial Progress," a broad and important subject appealing to practically every branch of the industry in the world, one small sub-division of the broad subject being presented in the fact that commercial travelers in many lines are now carrying portable projectors on the road with film displaying their factories and products. The Universal Company will announce the winner of its "Handsomest Man" contest at the Madison Square Garden Exposition on Wednesday, May 10th.

California Day has been designated to commemorate the arrival of a special train of motion picture favorites who are coming to the exposition at Madison Square Garden, supplemented by members of the California Society in New York, and also of the special exhibit made by the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce.

The general features of each day's program will be as follows: 11 A. M. to 2 P. M., pictures with pipe organ accompaniment; 2 to 3 P. M., dancing with ragtime dance orchestra; 3 to 5.30 P. M., presentation of feature pictures with symphony orchestra; 5.30 to 7.30 P. M., pictures with pipe organ accompaniment; 7.30 to 9 P. M., dancing with ragtime dance orchestra; 9 to 11 P. M., making motion pictures.

The program for the week will be as follows:

Saturday, May 6—Grand opening, 3 P. M., one hundred actors and actresses on the stage, Rialto Theater Symphony Orchestra; "America," audience joining in chorus; address of welcome, Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, president of the Board of Trade; introduction of and addresses by United States, State and city officials; official unveiling of the Motion Picture Board of Trade emblem; "Board of Trade March," composed by Samuel L. Rothapfel, Rialto Symphony Orchestra; grand parade, 1,000 motion picture stars.

Sunday, May 7.—Actors' Fund Day; famous soloists; Universal Film Manufacturing Day; feature pictures, 11 A. M. to 2 P. M., including the celebrated spectacle, "From the Manger to the Cross."

Monday, May 8.—Bankers and Business Men's Day; "Relation of the Banker to the Motion Picture Industry;" "The Motion Picture as One of America's Great Industries," John R. Freuler, President Mutual Film Company; Wm. A. Johnston, editor Motion Picture News; Society and Fashion Day.

Tuesday, May 9.—California Day, Organization of Bureau of Standards; Essanay Day.

Wednesday, May 10.—Projection Day, 2.30 P. M., Concert Hall, Nicholas Power, Vice-President of Board of Trade, presiding. Address by F. H. Richardson, "Startling Facts Concerning the $40,000 a Day Losses Incurred in Projection of Pictures;" "Projection and Projection Machines," J. H. Hallberg; open discussion; Mutual Day.

Thursday, May 11.—Paramount, Lasky, Famous Players, Morosco.

Friday, May 12.—Fox Film Corporation Day.

Saturday, May 13.—Battleship Day, Marjorie Sterrett; Preparedness, Army and Navy and National Guard Day; Picture Play Directors, Vitagraph Day.

Sunday, May 14.—Children's Day, grand finale; International Film Service.

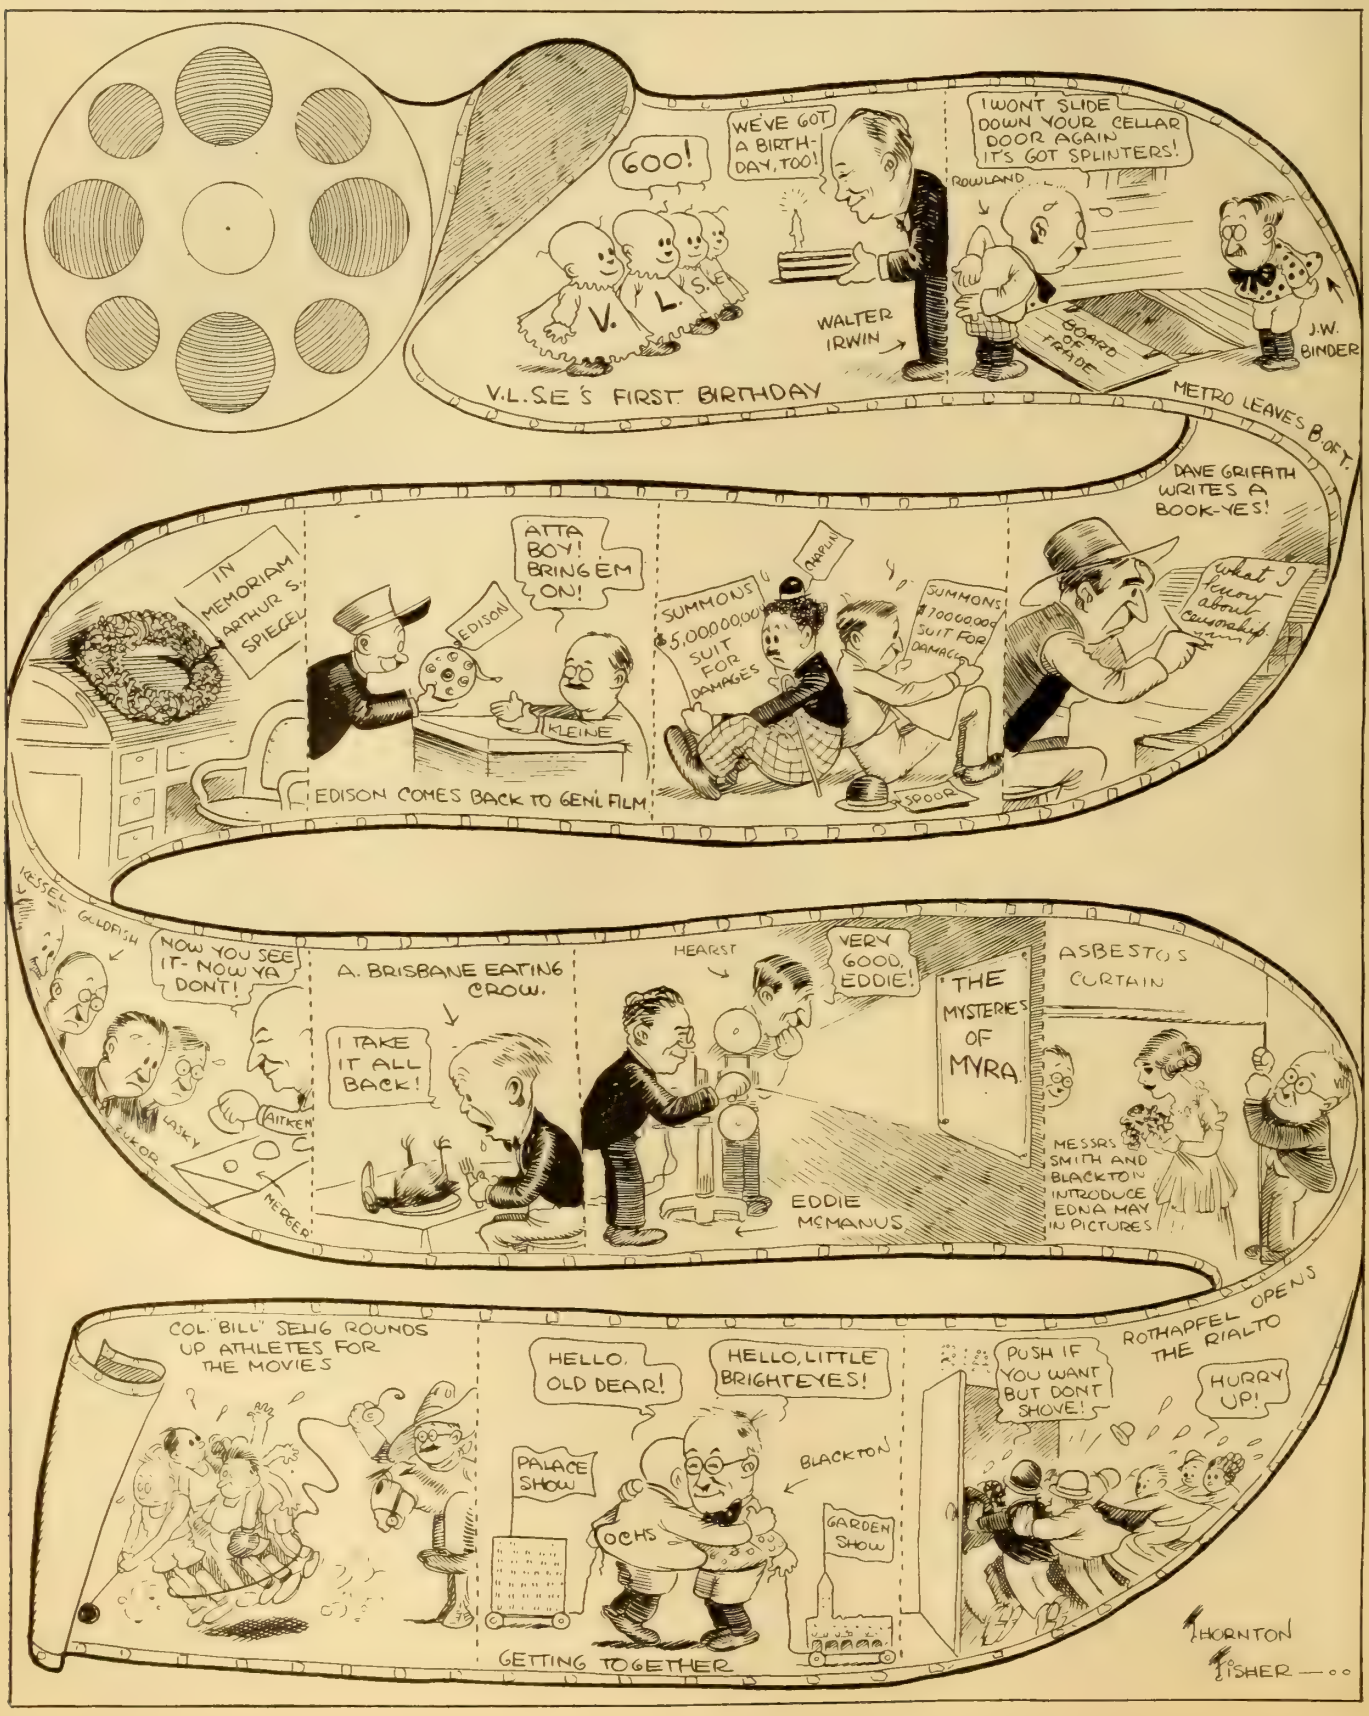
THE RIALTO FILM CORPORATION.

The Rialto Film Corporation has been organized under the laws of the State of New York, the financial backers of the institution being several capitalists of Detroit, Michigan, the majority of the stockholders of the company, however, being Messrs. I. & S. T. Goldberg, the heads of the Lillies Cigar Company of Detroit and Chicago, a concern that is rated as one of the largest cigar manufacturers of the United States. Jesse J. Goldberg is the general manager of the company and Messrs. I. & S. T. Goldberg being the president and treasurer of the corporation. The offices of the company are in the Candler building annex, 218 West Forty-second street, New York.

RUDOLPH HANDLING FEATURES.

William H. Rudolph, formerly with the Buffalo Times Film Service, resigned several weeks ago to exploit a series of war pictures. His headquarters are in Chicago, Ill.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD NEWS REEL for APRIL



Big Film Merger Under Way

Famous Players and Lasky Companies Negotiating With Triangle Heads Looking to Union of Studio Facilities.

THE latter half of the last week in April was marked by much talk of a merger between the companies contributing to the Triangle program and the Famous Players and Jesse L. Lasky companies. The story broke in the New York newspapers on the morning of Thursday, April 27, in the form of a statement from the Triangle offices to the effect that as a result of a meeting of officials of the concerns in Los Angeles the last two named companies had been merged with the Triangle Film Corporation, the new concern to be known by that name. It was stated in the announcement that the Paramount Pictures Corporation, the company through which the Famous Players and Lasky products are distributed, would not share in and was not concerned in the new alignment. This latter statement was immediately disputed by W. W. Hodkinson, president of the Paramount, who called attention to the fact that a twenty-five-year contract existed between the Famous Players and Lasky companies with the Paramount.

Those who took part in the Los Angeles conferences were Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players; Jesse L. Lasky and Samuel Goldfish, heads of the Lasky Company; Ad Kessel and Charles O. Baumann, of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, representing the Keystone and Kay-Bee studios; Henry E. Aitken, president of the Triangle and also of the Reliance and Majestic Companies; H. B. Smithers, of the banking firm of F. S. Smithers & Co., New York, and Oscar Gubelman, of Knauth, Nachod & Kuhne, bankers, New York. All of these, with the exception of Mr. Lasky, who makes his home at the coast, Mr. Aitken and Mr. Bauman, returned to New York on Friday, April 28. The latter two were expected in New York on May 2.

On Friday evening Mr. Goldfish issued a statement that the Famous Players and Lasky Companies would continue as formerly to release subjects bearing the names of their respective companies through the Paramount, that there had been no intention of doing otherwise, and emphatically denying that the negotiations had been concluded. Mr. Zukor issued a statement on Saturday in which he confirmed the reports of negotiations and recounted conditions that confront producers today. Mr. Lasky in Los Angeles outlined to the Moving Picture World correspondent some of the aims of the producers and bankers. The Triangle Company issued a statement, quoting a telegram from Mr. Aitken, in which he said among other things that the individual component parts would to some extent sink their identity in the new organization. Mr. Kessel would not talk; he said it was too soon.

From what has been gathered East and West it is plain that up to the present moment not a paper has been signed, although all the parties concerned seem to be optimistic that the deal will go through.

The chief aim of the new organization will be to secure the interchange of studio facilities, which will be materially enlarged, and of directors and players. The value of this will be more pronounced in the making of the unusually large subjects contemplated. As an illustration, it was pointed out that it would be possible for D. W. Griffith to direct Mary Pickford in a twelve-reel production to be staged at the big Lasky studio in Los Angeles and that the positives to be taken from the negative might be printed at the new Lasky laboratory in that city, the capacity of which is greatly in excess of present requirements. It would mean the doing of laboratory work either in the East or the West, according to convenience instead of all the Triangle printing being done in the East, as is now the case.

The number of directors in the proposed company will be fifteen, representing the bankers as well as the producers.

The actual making of pictures will rest in the same forces that are now producing the various brands. In other words, the new company will retain all the constructive and artistic brains now represented in the concerns.

One of the reasons for holding the conferences in the West was to enable the bankers to see for themselves the physical properties controlled by the various companies.

There is an intimation that Adolph Zukor will bulk big in the management of the holding company, which it is said the Triangle will virtually become.

The size of the proposed capitalization—$25,000,000 is the sum most frequently mentioned, although as high as $100,000,000 has been named—indicates even by the former figure that the new concern will not be restricted in its acquisitive activities to the brands already represented by their owners. It is a fair implication that what has become public is only a beginning.

Mr. Zukor's Statement.

"The genuine and most important object of the affiliation of film interests for which these conferences were arranged," said Mr. Zukor, "is the tremendous advantage that will thus be created for the production of bigger and better pictures. The coalition of producing facilities, equipment and staffs that would result from this arrangement would increase the efficiency of each of the companies involved in a remarkable degree. Talking for the Famous Players Film Company, I need not tell you that ever since its organization, more than four years ago, we have accepted every opportunity presented, and have constantly sought new means to produce greater and better photoplays.

"History repeats itself, even in the film business. The same unfavorable conditions that existed in the industry four years ago have returned in a larger degree today. Then the easy success that had been won by film producers had led them to lower their standards and produce such inferior subjects that the public was already becoming tired of the consistently poor merit of the average moving picture program and was deserting the photoplay theaters in alarming numbers. The Famous Players was organized at that time in recognition of this situation and with the determined purpose to raise the falling standards of screen production. Similar disadvantages have again arisen. Due to destructive competition and new detriments, photoplay merit seems again certain to be lowered. Such an affiliation of interests as is now contemplated would remove at once all the unnecessary obstacles that have so far impeded the fullest progress of the photoplay art. In the event of the culmination of the efforts to form this amalgamation, the various companies affected will retain in every respect their total individualities and inherent organizations.

"It does not acquire any particular emphasis to indicate that the recipients of the greatest benefit of such an amalgamation would be the public and the exhibitors.

"It must be remembered that the great problems of the film industry are centered in the producers. Distribution of motion pictures, like the circulation of any other mercantile product, is a mechanical process, and can be simply regulated and conducted, but the producing faction involves all the hazards and difficulties of creative art, and upon the foundations of this branch of the trade rest the structure of the entire industry. The producing of a motion picture is a work of art, subject to all the varying influences that any artistic creation is dependent upon. When the photoplay is already produced it then becomes a canned product, and in this condition falls under the head of ordinary business. The problems that confront the distributor of this product are elementary, and can be solved by the adoption of usual business methods. But a producing policy upon which depends artistic advancement and the very life or death of the industry is one fraught with constant anxieties and perplexities. It is to minimize these deterring influences and so make possible the greatest advance of the art that I have permitted the Famous Players Film Company to become an active factor in the proposed amalgamation."

COPYRIGHT INFRINGEMENT SUIT.

The Bobbs-Merrill Publishing Company, of Indianapolis, has filed a law suit charging the Equitable Moving Picture Corporation and the World Film Corporation, of New York, with an infringement of copyright of one of the plaintiff's publications. The bill asks for an injunction pending the trial of issues, for damages, to be ascertained, and an accounting. The complaint sets up that the defendants have written, projected and are showing a photoplay called "A Circus Romance," which is alleged to be a direct violation of plaintiff's rights. Situation, scenes and other portions both of the plot of the novel and play, it is charged, have been used bodily in the photoplay. The complaint does not set these alleged violations out in full, but reserves this phase for trial on the issues.

L. R. STARK JOINS METRO SCENARIO STAFF.

L. R. Stark, who has had four years experience in various lines of the motion picture industry, has accepted a position with the Rolfe Photoplay, Inc., as assistant to Harry O. Hoyt, head of the scenario staff in the Rolfe studio. Mr. Stark will devote his time to reading scenarios submitted through Arthur James, Metro's scenario editor, and also reading books that give promise of being suitable for picturization.

Grand Opera for Pictures

Victor Herbert Writes Cue Sheet for Thomes Dixon's "The Fall of a Nation."

THE troubles in Ireland lend peculiar significance to latest labors of that celebrated native-born Irishman, Victor Herbert, who is likewise America's greatest composer. President of the Friends of Irish Freedom and prominent in many other Hibernian organizations, Mr. Herbert is writing the music for "The Fall of a Nation," in the shadow of the world war and at the very moment of the long-expected Irish rebellion.

The libretto of "The Fall of a Nation," is by Thomas Dixon, author of "The Clansman," "The Leopard's Spots," "The One Woman," "The Foolish Virgin," and "The Birth of a Nation" scenario; the musical score is by Victor Herbert, composer, bandmaster, symphony director, author of the only strikingly successful American grand opera, "Natoma," and of more than forty popular operettas. The collaboration of these two master creators is one of the sensational departures of the picture season in the novel field of that which they style "cinema grand opera."

Victor Herbert.

"The Fall of a Nation" will be produced at a Broadway theater, New York, next month on a scale of magnificence commensurate with what is said to be the most costly and elaborate production that has yet come out of the Los Angeles producing district. The secret of Victor Herbert's connection with it has been closely held and is now for the first time disclosed. For the last eight months Mr. Herbert has been writing the operatic score for full orchestra, based on Mr. Dixon's carefully timed continuity story. For the last two weeks he has been revising the score, page by page, in exact accord with the screen showing of the successive reels as they have been shipped to him from the Coast. His assistant director, Harold Sanford, is in Los Angeles rehearsing musicians in the work.

Herbert was induced by his admiration for the genius of Thomas Dixon to make this extraordinary departure from his usual musical activities and to plunge into "pictorial grand opera." It cannot be too strongly emphasized that the character of this attempt is entirely different from anything that has preceded it. Herbert has written a creative instrumentation—an original contribution to the world's music—from the first bar to the last.

The famous composer comes well by his artistic inheritance. Victor Herbert is a grandson of Samuel Lover, the Irish painter, actor and author, who wrote the rollicking "Handy Andy," "Harry Lorrequer," and other stories. Born in Dublin he was educated first in his grandfather's house in London and later, both as to general culture and musical training, in Germany. He lived for many years on the Continent, then in the eighties was brought to America by Anton Seidl as concertmaster and cellist. Here his abilities rapidly developed. In addition to writing many classical pieces for the cello, piano and grand orchestra, Herbert entered the musical operetta field and with extraordinary fecundity turned out several scores of the most sparkling comic operas and musical comedies in which Francis Wilson DeWolf Hopper, Frank Daniels, Lulu Glazer, Fritzi Scheff and other favorites starred. He was for several years bandmaster of the 22nd Regiment, succeeding Patrick Gilmore, but left it to direct his own symphony orchestra. Several of his musical comedies are now on the road, and others are planned for next year.

"The Fall of a Nation," produced by the National Drama Corporation, has a thoroughly American story, and Mr. Herbert is said to be at his happiest in the operization.

Unicorn Service Now Releasing

General Manager Ike Schlank Reports Eighteen Exchanges in Middle West in Full Operation.

IKE SCHLANK, general manager of the Unicorn Film Service Corporation, last week returned from a trip through the Middle West. Mr. Schlank reported the complete formation of eighteen exchanges now ready to handle the weekly program of twenty-one reels. As was stated last week these are to be in one and two reels, evenly balanced between drama, comedy and western subjects.

J. A. Eslow, formerly New England manager of the Universal and now Western manager for the Unicorn, has started for the Pacific Coast and will immediately begin the work of rounding up a competent staff of office managers. Fred B. Murphy, formerly of the United Film Service of Boston, has been appointed Eastern division manager of the Unicorn.

Mr. Schlank, long time showman and exchangeman of the Middle West, has again left New York for a visit to the South. His trip will include stops at Washington, Atlanta, New Orleans and Dallas. In these cities he will endeavor to have working organizations by May 15.

The officers of the Unicorn are Leslie R. Palmer, a member of the Federal Reserve Board, president; J. A. Coran, vice president; Ike Schlank, vice president and general manager; Alwyn Ball, Jr., prominent New York real estate operator, treasurer; J. A. McKinney, formerly a director of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, secretary.

At the headquarters of the Unicorn, 126 West Forty-sixth street, it is said that the exchanges so far opened are in full blast.

At Leading Picture Theatres

Programs for the Week of April 30 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"David Garrick" at the Strand.

AS ITS contribution to the Shakespeare tercentenary the Strand Theater, for the week of April 30th, offered a film adaptation of the play "David Garrick," a Pallas-Paramount production, which features Dustin Farnum. Garrick, it will be recalled, was one of the foremost actors of his era. The time of the action is 1742, and for the taking of the picture the old Drury Lane Theater was authentically reproduced. The same care was given to the costuming of the play.

Other features for the week were a comedy, a cartoon comedy, and the latest news in pictures. The musical program included a solo by William F. Myers, solos by Grace Hoffman and Bruce Weyman, and a special overture by the Strand Concert Orchestra of thirty pieces.

"The Moment Before" at the Broadway.

Pauline Frederick, in the latest Famous Players Paramount picture, based upon Israel Zangwell's "The Moment Before," appeared at the Broadway theater. In this photoplay Miss Frederick adds a new role to her screen repertoire, that of a gypsy maid. The opening scenes show a titled English woman who has an intense fear of the noon hour. When her husband is killed, the Countess goes to church, arriving just before noon. Suddenly the bells peal forth and the woman falls prone upon the floor, her hand stretched forth as if to shut out a terrible vision. Then the scene fades out, and the woman has sloughed off twenty-odd years and is a gypsy. The film goes on to unfold the story of the past, as it looms before the distracted eye of the Countess. The usual comedy and news films were also on the program.

"The Bugle Call" at the Rialto.

"Buster" Collier, the star of a Triangle picture at the Rialto, and a son of the comedian, William Collier, appeared in a stirring military drama, "The Bugle Call." Thomas H. Ives produced the picture, and has indulged his panchant for Indians, soldiers, rough riders and border characters, in this touching story of a lonely frontier army post. Little "Buster" plays the part of the motherless son of the commanding officer. It is a consistant story of pronounced human interest, with a vein of comedy running through. Features of the topical and educational series were a visual history of the development of the dance in Spain, and a study of the little-known, rock-bound island of Corsica.

Closing of the Knickerbocker.

The Knickerbocker theater closed its doors Saturday night, April 29, as a motion picture house, the first showings of the Triangle Film Corporation having been transferred to the Rialto. Next September the Knickerbocker will return to the form of entertainment with which it was first identified.

Actors' Fund Activities

Fund Day at the Palace and Garden Exposition—What the Various Cities are Doing for the Cause.

AT the first great combined motion picture trade carnival in America at Madison Square Garden and Grand Central Palace, and the final grand fireworks of the two shows will be one day in each devoted to the Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors' Fund. The money obtained from the two expositions on these days will be contributed toward the $500,000 donation of the film industry for the million dollar endowment of the Actors' Fund of America.

Committees for the motion picture campaign for the Actors' Fund, are booming this worthy charity everywhere and Samuel Goldfish, chairman, is daily receiving encouraging reports from hundreds of little towns as well as big cities throughout the United States. Already nearly two thousand theater owners and exhibitors have pledged themselves to donate 10 per cent. of their gross receipts on May 15, National Motion Picture Tribute Day, and, it is expected that over eleven thousand exhibitors will have signed up. Aaron J. Jones, of Linick, Schaefer & Jones, Chicago, chairman of the Chicago committee, expects 400 theaters in Chicago and vicinity to respond favorably and indicates that his committee will send a check for $100,000 to the National Campaign offices. Special tribute performances and grand balls are being given in all the large cities from coast to coast and on Sunday, May 14, one of the big Boston theaters will be the scene of a great function held for the campaign. Other large affairs are taking place within the next few days in Philadelphia, Buffalo, Omaha, San Francisco, New Orleans, Detroit, Seattle, and Dallas, Tex., and the Grand Tribute will take place at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York City, on Tuesday, May 16.

In keeping with Mr. Jones's $100,000 boast, Mark M. Leichter, secretary of the branch committee which is booming things in the City of the Golden Gate, sends this message to Mr. Goldfish: "You can talk about the East, but—but, well, just watch the West."

In Pittsburgh the committee, headed by Al W. Cross, are meeting with such official appreciation and sympathy that it is expected that the Mayor and Common Council will allow a temporary lifting of the hard and fast Pittsburgh Sunday ban and permit shows in the better class motion picture houses on the Sabbath with collections instead of paid admissions. All the money taken in over actual expenses at these performances will go to the cause.

The Pittsburgh Screen Club is circulating broadcast at 10 cents each tickets which will be accepted as admissions to any of the principal motion picture houses in Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia between now and July 1. The dimes collected in this manner are being sent to the fund. The tickets are printed to show the object of the plan and thus make effective advertisement of the campaign.

The grand ball, which is being given in Philadelphia in connection with the various activities for the cause, is to be as great a social success as it will be a financial one. The committee of patronesses includes such names as Mrs. Cornelius Stevenson, Mrs. William Yorks Stevenson, president of the Plays and Players Club; Mrs. Samuel Chew, president of the Charlotte Cushman Club; Mrs. Otis Skinner and Mrs. R. Emmet Hare.

The Boston campaign is being sponsored by the best people in the city, and various functions which are to be held to boost its contribution to the good work. An energetic committee of film and newspaper people is headed by Moe Mark of the Strand theaters. He is assisted by George K. Robinson, Al Newhall, Salita Solano and Harold D. Valpey. Mayor Curley is the honorary chairman of the committee, and Governor McCall is expected to head the honorary committee for the grand tribute performance on the Sunday preceeding National Motion Picture Tribute Day. A grand motion picture ball is also to be held in Boston, at which a unique scheme of prizes and surprises has been devised. At the grand tribute matinee a succession of "personal appearances" is being arranged in which Nat Goodwin and Pauline Frederick, both natives of the city, will appear.

The Buffalo Screen Club is behind the activities of that city, and the principal theaters in Buffalo are advertising its grand ball with special announcement slides and all the hotels, restaurants and cabarets are selling tickets for it. This affair will be held in Elmwood Music Hall, the mecca of all such doings, and the Seventy-fourth Regimental Band and Schultz's Orchestra (one of the best in Western New York) will play alternately. Here also there will be important "personal appearances" of favorite stars of the screen. The picture house managers have rallied to the support of this undertaking in a fashion which will be long remembered. It is from them that the backbone of the $500,000 canvass must come and they are supplying it with a will and enthusiasm which not only does them credit but has outdone the expectations of Mr. Goldfish and his associates on the National Executive Committee of the campaign. More numerous every day are the responses to the official appeal coming in to headquarters reiterating the offer to give more than the 10 per cent. asked on national picture tribute day. This spirit can but find a responsive chord in the hearts of the general public.

Clement Easton

ON ANOTHER page of this issue will be found an article on the Superman of pictures, entitled "What to Photograph—A Prophecy," written by Clement Easton, recently directing for Essanay at Chicago.

This timely foreword comes from the pen of a quiet man who has not been much in the limelight, but who has been producing and thinking for the past four years. In that short period Mr. Easton has thoughtfully gone about placing his mark on the product of the Edison, Universal, Thanhouser and Essanay concerns. He has not made any particular stir in his field preferring rather the form of expression which is the result of careful study to the more sensational and ephemeral. However, the strictures of present day working conditions extant in the most of our studios have developed Mr. Easton into what might be termed a militant, and today he stands out for better creative work which comes only through better producers.

Clement Easton.

As a soldier of fortune, who has won and lost his full share of opportunities only to find his fit place at last among the practicing exponents of this new art, Mr. Easton issues a call to the capable doubting Thomases to throw in their measure of brains toward bringing forth from a jumble of clap-trap, quasi-realism and illiteracy in screen offerings those possibilities on which a new art may be founded.

After a much needed rest in his Staten Island bungalow, we hope Mr. Easton will again be found producing the better pictures.

CHANGES IN V-L-S-E EXCHANGE STAFFS.

The promotion of J. C. Kendall from booker to salesman is announced by Manager C. E. Holah of the Cincinnati branch office of the Big Four. Mr. Kendall has earned an enviable reputation by his sales promotion work, and during several years spent in the motion picture business has accumulated a fund of experience likely to prove of great value to him in the future.

At the Dallas office the engagement of J. A. Steinson as salesman has caused widespread satisfaction among the trade. Prior to his joining the Dallas staff Mr. Steinson was an exhibitor at McAlister, Oklahoma, and booked V-L-S-E features at his theater. Having a large circle of acquaintances among the Oklahoma exhibitors, he will be held responsible for that territory, in which it is confidently expected that he will reap rich results.

GENERAL FILM COMPANY, INC., MOVES.

The General Film Company, Inc., has moved its headquarters from the Fifth Avenue building to the Passavant building, 440 Fourth avenue, corner of 30th street, where the top floor has been entirely remodeled, with a view of providing the necessary requirements in the way of space for the different departmnts.

The branch office of the General Film Company, Inc., will remain at West 23d street.

H. O. Davis Talks System

General Manager of Universal City Describes Some of the Innovations He Has Brought to Industry.

THE making of pictures can be systematized to a greater extent than can the making of anything else, or at least equal to it, declares H. O. Davis, the second vice-president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and general manager of Universal City, which is another name for the West Coast studios of the company. Mr. Davis has been in New York for three weeks on business of the Universal, chiefly, he said, for the acquisition of stories. Mr. Davis was talking with a World man who had called on him at the home office of the Universal. The head of the big studio is a man of genial personality. You don't talk with him a minute before you feel that here is a man who can't see the "temperamental" stuff, who believes that actors and directors should be willing to acquiesce in the same general business rules that obtain in all well-regulated establishments.

H. O. Davis.

Mr. Davis admitted that there had been misgivings on the part of the more prominent of the factors making up the working forces of Universal City following the installation of his methods for the making of pictures. The general manager believes the initial reluctance, even opposition, has been changed—that now the employes of Universal City, the directors especially, are convinced that the Davis system has resulted in all-around benefit; that it is in the interest of the director as well as of the company, in the interest of efficiency as well as of economy. Today the cost of a subject is estimated before a scene is taken. Mr. Davis states that the result in a period of two months, covering 100 pictures, shows a variation of but 5 per cent. from the first estimate of cost, which he believes an accomplishment that may favorably compare with work along other and radically dissimilar lines.

"In the making of pictures there has been and is now being spent a lot of money that never shows on the screen," said Mr. Davis. "I believe in putting 99 per cent. of that cost right on the screen. My first aim has been to have the stage prepared for the director—as he wants it, where he wants it, and when he wants it. The director should be able to concentrate all his faculties on his story, his mind free from worry over details that can better be attended to by others. His players should live their parts while the picture is in the making, and that making should proceed so smoothly and rapidly as is consistent with quality work that the story is always uppermost."

Mr. Davis called attention to the fact that he had been able not only to control cost but also to improve quality. When he took up the position of general manager of Universal City last December his first move was in the property room. Everything was indexed and a place provided for it. The classification extended over every phase of picture-making right up to the director and then stopped, the idea being to relieve him of responsibility. He is able to think of his story, to dream of it.

On the production side the entire force of the Universal was thrown into one stock company, breaking up the system of each director having his own group of players. Each director and his company are chosen with regard to the subject to be filmed, with an eye to adaptability and types. When a story has been selected it is put in work in the continuity department—which is the successor of the script department. Upon completion it is discussed by the construction department, the director and the art director, its cost estimated and submitted to Mr. Davis for his O. K.

When the director steps upon the stage in the morning everything is prepared for him to "shoot." The construction department, much of the work of which is done at night, has taken care of that. The property room has placed upon the stage the things requisitioned. The dressing squad takes hold, the expert drapers, the picture hangers, the rug men, each to their division of the work, following the specifications of the property sheet and the scene plot. When all is finished the art director inspects and approves. Throughout the making of the picture the construction department is working with the director, anticipating by as many as forty-eight hours sometimes his requirements. Every morning Mr. Davis knows the progress up to the night before of every picture and its cost to that hour. Each night the construction department examines all scenes taken during the day.

One of the results of these innovations, Mr. Davis pointed out, is that where formerly five to six weeks were devoted to the making of a five-reel picture it is now accomplished in from fourteen to nineteen days. Where there were twenty-six companies at Universal City there are now sixteen. These will be increased to twenty. Where formerly directors were saying, "It can't be done," not only are they now contented, but applications are coming in for positions as directors.

"I don't believe," said Mr. Davis, "that after two or three months' trial of this system any of the directors voluntarily would return to the old haphazard way of doing things. I believe also that by reason of this system we are making pictures at Universal City as good as or better than are being made elsewhere. We are going to increase the quality. We must do so, for critics are being made every day. The public is all the time getting more exacting in its picture requirements.

"What have I been doing in New York? Buying stories. I think the story is the most important thing around a studio. It is the foundation of the picture, and not enough attention has been paid to it. We won't start a subject unless we are satisfied with the story. I have bought between forty and fifty. We have definite ideas as to the kind of stories the public wants and that is the kind we are buying—good wholesome tales of everyday life. We are manufacturing emotion, laughter and tears—that is what we have to sell; and forced situations do not sell. We are trying to put on the things that will sell.

"Yes, we have merged our script department into the continuity department. We are trying to get away from the story which is written under stress. Our former staff writers are now fixing up the stories we buy. Of course, if one of them feels like writing a story, if he has really got one in mind and has the time to do it right we will take it. But we are seeking the fresh viewpoint, we are trying to keep as far away as possible from the hackneyed."

Patents Company Sued Again

Included With General Film and Others in Action Commenced by Theater Film Service of San Francisco.

SUIT has been brought in the United States District Court by the Theater Film Service Company of San Francisco against The Moving Picture Patents Company, General Film Company, Vitagraph Company of America, Biograph Company, Edison Manufacturing Company, Thomas A. Edison (Inc.), Kalem Company, Pathe Freres, Lubin Manufacturing Company, Gaston Melies, George Kleine, Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, Selig Polyscope Company, Armat Moving Picture Company, Frank L. Dyer, Henry N. Marvin, Jeremiah J. Kennedy, William Pelzer, Jacques A. Berst, Albert E. Smith, Sigmund Lubin, William N. Selig and George K. Spoor, in which the plaintiff sues for $600,000 triple damages on an alleged damage to its business of some $200,000 since 1910.

The plaintiff company was incorporated in 1909 and was for years thereafter engaged in shipping and receiving films all over the Pacific coast and other parts of the United States. It did business under regular license with the ten firms and persons complained of and was in he open market for business. There was no interruption of its business with customers and the various manufacturers until late in 1910, when the license was cancelled without notice by the General Film and Moving Picture Patents companies.

The defendant companies are charged with being an unlawful combination in restraint of interstate commerce and it is set forth that the licensed manufacturers and others are wholly in ownership and control. In asking for relief the plaintiff cites the decision in the case in the Pennsylvania district wherein the United States sued the Patents company under the Sherman and Clayton laws as an unlawful combination. Palintiff claims all rights under the Clayton law and asks triple damages of $600,000.

GERMAN TRADE NOTES.

THE Reichskanzler's announcement prohibiting the importation of numerous dispensable articles among which heading celluloid is included, is causing much agitation throughout the local film industry. The object of this measure is to raise the standard of German money in foreign countries as the more goods that other countries buy from Germany and the less that Germany is forced to purchase from outside sources, so will the money rates on German currency be raised in foreign countries. The Reichskanzler reserves the right to make exceptions to this rule and has already notified custom officials to permit some limited amounts of film in values from fifty to five hundred marks to be admitted. Goods which were paid for previous to this ordinance may also still be brought into the country.

It is rather doubtful if the object desired, i. e., the raising of the German money standard in foreign countries, will be greatly assisted through the prohibition of film importation as from the following figures may be seen that even in peace times the import from the present neutral countries was not very great.

In times of peace 142,600 kilograms of films were imported into Germany, including 128,300 kg. from America via England, 6,600 kg. from Denmark, 3,200 kg. from Switzerland, and 4,500 kg. from Austria. The exportation amounted to 65,700 kg., of which amount 5,400 kg. went to Denmark, 2,700 kg. to Holland, 25,400 kg. to Austria, 4,400 kg. to Switzerland, 4,000 kg. to Spain, and 23,800 kg. to America.

The importing houses will naturally be the ones most affected by this ruling, some of them will probably have to close their doors. On the other hand, the German manufacturers will be greatly benefited by this decree, as they will now monopolize the home market. The local film producers will also be compelled to make more single-reel subjects as the country has hitherto depended almost entirely upon America and Denmark for these vital parts of a program.

The manufacturers are perfectly satisfied with the new ruling, whereas the importers and a majority of the theater owners are opposed to the measure. This was evidenced at a special meeting of the Society for the Protection of the General Interests of the Cinematograph and Allied Trades, which was called together to discuss the new decree. Among those who spoke against the measure was Oscar Einstein, Carl Laemmle's German representative, whose business stands to be greatly impaired. After thoroughly discussing the question the Society finally passed a resolution greeting the import prohibition as a measure for the national welfare but desiring that the decree be annulled so far as the allied countries are concerned. Pressure is now being brought to bear upon the Reichskanzler to change the law as embodied in the above resolution.

General-Manager Skaarup of the Fotorama Film Company, Copenhagen, and Mr. Josef L. Loris of the A-Zet Film, Vienna, are in town purchasing films for their respective firms. Among the large number of subjects bought, these gentlemen have also secured the rights for the Atlantic Film Aarhus's latest feature, "Das Spiel ist aus," Mr. Skaarup for Denmark, Sweden and Norway; Mr. Loris for Austria-Hungary and the Balkans.

Richard Oswald's screen adaptation of "The Tales of Hoffmann," which played at the Marmorhaus fully came up to all expectations. A large array of Germany's best photoplay stars, beautiful decorations, picturesque exteriors taken in old romanitc Jena, and a carefully treated scenario earned the universal approval of public and press.

The Kammerlichtspiele showed the Nordische film, "Das jungste Gericht," a remarkable film in every respect, embodying stirring sensational scenes, excellent acting and superb staging. The film is one of the most perfect ever seen in this country.

Joseph Delmont, film director, journalist, and world traveler, who is well known in American film and theatrical circles, returned to the Italian front after a few weeks furlough spent in Berlin. Mr. Delmont, an Austrian by birth, served at the outbreak of hostilities as a volunteer in the German army throughout the campaign in Poland and was later called to the colors by his native land where he is at present officer of a machine gun corps.

The Spanish dancer, Rita Sacchetto, who also stars for the Nordische Company, was engaged to personally appear in a provincial theater. It was necessary for the theater manager to apply to the town council for a concession permitting the dancer to perform. One member of the board objected to Miss Sacchetto's appearance, maintaining that since the government has forbidden the importation of furs, silk and perfumes, why the luxury of a Spanish dancer? Nevertheless the council gave the desired permission with but one dissenting vote. J. A. FLEITZER.

BEATRIZ FIGHTS FAKE SCHOOLS.

Through the enlistment of the support of Governor Hiram Johnson of California, Beatriz Michelena, celebrated prima donna star of "The Unwritten Law" and a long list of other celebrated photoplays, has started a definite movement against fake schools of motion picture acting that is expected to become national in its scope and significance.

With this end in view, Miss Michelena made a special trip to Sacramento, the state capital, and in a five-hour conference covered the situation with the chief executive. It was the first time that the evil of these schools had ever been called to the Governor's attention and he was prompt in promising his support to any action that promised to adequately eliminate it.

Beatriz Michelena and Governor Hiram Johnson of California.

Following up this advantage, Miss Michelena is now interesting the leading legislators of the state in a bill which will be brought before the Assembly and Senate at their next session, and she is sanguine in her expectations that it will be passed by almost unanimous vote. Thus far she has not found one dissenting voice to the remedy she proposes.

The plan which she herself devised in detail calls for the regulation of all schools of motion picture acting in the state by a commission appointative by the Governor and composed of recognized authorities in motion picture producing circles. Any school to operate must be sanctioned by a commission license, which may at any time be summarily revoked. The commission, after licensing a school, will be expected to keep it under closest scrutiny.

DEATH OF EMMETT A. WILLIAMS.

Emmett A. Williams, for two years cameraman with the Famous Players-Mary Pickford Company, died on Friday, April 28, at New Rochelle, N. Y., of aseptic poisoning. He was twenty-three years old. Before going to the Famous Players Mr. Williams had for six years been in the employ of the Thanhouser Company. He had been married a year and a half. He leaves a wife and three brothers.

The funeral was largely attended. Prominent among those present were Miss Pickford, Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Zukor, Al Kaufman, James Kirkwood and H. Lyman Broening, who represented the Cinema Camera Club, of which Mr. Williams was a member. There were many beautiful floral tributes.

What to Photograph---A Prophecy

The Superman of Motion Pictures.

By Clement Easton, Director Essanay Studio.

WHAT TO PHOTOGRAPH asks a question and finds a reply in the definition of the super-producer. And, the definition of the super-producer, is the man who knows what to photograph.

How to photograph has received its answer in the highly technical achievements shown in the motion picture of today, and is the first step out of the chrysalis toward the ultimate producer.

He who has learned how to photograph has learned the alphabet of this new language; has mastered the rudiments of his tongue; has made himself familiar with the grammar of motion pictures.

There is little material on the screen today which can be termed literate. I refrain from using the word scholarly. The day of the scholar of motion pictures has not arrived, though we believe we see its forecast.

Most of the screen entertainments are, in fact, illiterate.

For the better understanding of the comparisons drawn, I wish to encourage this inference that the screen product is the offshoot of literature. Very likely there will evolve from the present condition of cinematography a new art; but it will always bear a parallel to literature.

Literature is perhaps the clearest medium of expressing an author's artistic thought. At least, literature is the perfected medium most used to express ourself. And, as the screen product is the replica of the author's mind, or his perspective, so is it through the author related to that other and larger field of his expression, Literature.

Morley has set forth the definition of literature, as we understand it, in the following quotation: that class of writings " * * * where moral truth and human passions are touched with a certain largess, sanity and attraction of form."

There is no question in my mind of the ultimate classification of motion picture literature into the dime novel, current fiction and standard works. Adaptations and scientific pictures—although this latter has found a stable position for itself in educational circles and as a kind of entertainment appealing to many otherwise uninterested in the screen—are not considered.

There are changes going on in the picture industries pointing toward their respective classification as above; only there is a blindness, an indefiniteness about the change that promises to bear downward and suffocate the struggling producer in the muddy bottom of avarice.

The superman alone will rise above and stem the tide that must eventually reach its usefulness under his control.

Fortunately, we learn quickly. There is already a tendency to recognize individual ability. This is largely due to the scarcity of good picture material; and we turn for new to the few men who know what to photograph. The field is limitless. There is a veritable continent lying in wait for the De Sotos, Columbuses, Stanleys, Pearys.

The how of photography is a mechanical achievement and has its definite limitations. It admits of just so many combinations and effects which are apprehensible. We have a score or more of excellent technicians—men who have actually made a name for themselves in the short interval since their introduction—whose fame is only comparable to the trick photography with which they are so adept. They flash before us in a pyrotechnic bound, bow, exhibit empty hands, and lo!—a rabbit takes form and ambles away. But what was it interested us? How it was done. That explained, the trick repeated a few times, and we are bored.

Today the layman has reached that stage in his motion picture education where he becomes an efficient critic. The technique of the lens and the screen are no longer the mystifying things they were. We are becoming tired of artisans. We cry: "Where is the artist?" We do not want to buy a mechanical toy. We are surfeited with the babble and persistence and ingenuity of many salesmen. "Where is the artist?" We would rather know nothing about How of pictures; we are to be charmed, that is all, but charmed by things charming. What have you got?" is all we ask. And the answer will have to be: What to photograph.

To begin with, the super-producer will not be dependent on his manager, or his scenario department, for material. If there are no manuscripts available, he will create his own material. He and he alone will decide what to photograph. And having determined what vehicle, script, story he is going to translate, his next concern is in the translation.

Beyond the simple statement that an artist styles himself by his translations, there can little more be said in exposition of the title of this article. But artistic translations are the crying need of motion pictures today.

My wife and I are incompatible. We meet on the screen at the breakfast table. We possibly have a few formal words, to register a coolness between us. I read my paper while she casts reproachful glances at me over her coffee. I voice my sentiments in a sub-title as I leave for the office, viz., "I won't be home for dinner." Wifey gives way to tears. There we have the percentage on translations of this particular domestic infelicity. And the scene can mean anything or nothing. Until we learn what translations to make, we, too, will be classed among the dime novelists.

It is popularly quoted of famous authors how they have lavished hours and days of thought over the form of some particular expression—translation. And that brings us to another phase of commercialism in pictures: Indigestion.

We offer undigested pictures to a dyspeptic public.

We have a few staple articles on the shelf, in all conditions of adulteration and decay. In this particular they are quite often offered as novelties. And purblind salesmen trust to the somniferous condition of an ill-nourished public to overlook the deceit. Here again we note the trade on the how instead of the what to photograph.

In our struggle to surpass our brother prestidigitators, we have inveigled our artist neighbor from his field the stage, where, through laborious years, he has at last evolved an accepted form of art, hoping to infuse the screen with that artistry it now lacks. The idea is just as sound as it ever was. Why is it that the improvement is scarcely seen in most cases; in others not at all; while the few successful actors to be counted on the hands?

First and last, because of the need of intelligent direction.

Their resources are misdirected. Their unfamiliarity with camera requirements means nothing. When an empty headed doll can, in the course of a few months, reach fame, first, through an acquired technique, think you a trained professional needs must fail because of conditions? This is the producer's excuse for ignorance.

And what is it the actor lacks by way of direction? The what to do. Blinded by the idea that he must learn a new language, he abandons the forms of expression he has mastered and believes them useless. With this surrender goes the surrender of his individuality, to this extent—he allows the director to do his thinking for him. And the director of today is not a trained thinker. When one looks to such men for creations in the name of Art one looks in vain.

It is quoted of a noted director that he prefers to employ people who "look the part" in preference to acknowledged artists who may not. And he trusts to their learning the proper characterization under his direction.

I make mention of this here in calling to view the deplorable conditions that have arisen under the wholesale application of this specious theory. Certain it is that efficiency and ability have been pushed aside for pretty faces wherever the above excuse has been even remotely applicable. It takes a combination of rare natures in the artist and his or her director to transmute beings of inexperience into full fledged and various personalities. In just that degree of fitness for a certain role is Miss Blank UNFIT for the next, where fitness depends on physical attributes.

Beauty, personality, adaptability, are all matters of opinion. Any one-man selection is bound to jar a neighbor's. I own close friendship for a recognized portrait painter who cannot "see" one of our universally idolized screen stars. Just as much difference of opinion exists among those less qualified to judge.

The finest of pen portraits leaves something to the imagination.

Personally, I believe many people who fit a part physically need only express themselves to express the role, under the theory that our physique is the outward manifestations of ourself. But, that again is a question of what to photograph (who to photograph), solved or not according to the discernment of the producer.

We are passing through a period of inflated values.

Let the producer of today, if he has it not, acquire something of that improvement which characterizes the handiwork of our men of literature; let him commune with himself and establish some ideals; let him devote more and regular time to self improvement and study; let him read and absorb; let him hold night vigil and wrestle with his angel.

NEW THEATER FOR SPRINGFIELD, MO.

The Alhambra Theater Company, Springfield, Mo., will open in May a photoplay house seating 700. It will be devoted to the exploitation of the motion pictures. H. H. Hughes is to be the manager of the structure.

Mutual Program

Two Masterpieces De Luxe and a Flock of Shorter Subjects Scheduled for Week of May 8.

"SOUL MATES," from the American studios, with William Russell and Charlotte Burton in the principal roles, and "Her Father's Gold," a Thanhouser production featuring Harris Gordon, Barbara Gilroy and Louise Emerald Bates—the latter making her bow in feature productions, the Masterpieces De Luxe Edition, head Mutual releases for the week of May 8.

"Soul Mates," prepared for the screen by J. Edward Hungerford from Edward A. Kaufman's popular story "Soul Mates," is an exceptionally stirring drama of high finance, love and intrigue, the scenes of which are laid in Wall street and in the fashionable set of the metropolis. It was screened under the direction of William Russell and his supporting cast, besides Miss Burton, includes Leona Hutton, Henry Keenan and several others of equal note.

"Her Father's Gold," the Thanhouser contribution to the De Luxe features of the week, is important for several reasons, principal among them because it serves to introduce Louise Emerald Bates as a star of these Masterpieces De Luxe. "Her Father's Gold" is an unusual adventure drama, having to do with a young girl's search for a hidden treasure, in which she is joined by a young newspaper reporter. Harris Gordon essays the role of the reporter. Barbara Gilroy is seen in the role of the girl who seeks and finally finds the treasure, and Miss Bates appears as a crook, an intensely dramatic role which has much to do with the unfolding of the story.

Short length features for the week of May 8 lead off with the three-reel American-Mutual drama, "The Profligate," the chief roles of which were assigned to Edward Coxen and Winnifred Greenwood. It is an unusually interesting drama, in which Miss Greenwood and Mr. Coxen essay their difficult roles with unusual charm and forcefulness. "The Profligate" will be released May 11.

Four two-reel subjects of wide variety in themes complete the Mutual short-length features to be released during the same week, "The Touch of the Key," from the American studios, which goes to the public on May 8, heads the list. The story had to do with a young girl newspaper reporter, who after a series of strange adventures manages to secure a "scoop" for her paper. Vivian Rich, Alfred Vosburgh and George Periolat have the principal parts.

The Thanhouser two-reeler for the week will be released May 9, under the title of "When She Played Broadway." In this comedy-drama the leading role is played by Gladys Hulette, supported by Howard Mitchell and others of the Thanhouser stock company. The story revolves about a young actress and the adventures that befell her in her comic opera career.

"The Blindness," from the Mustang-Mutual studios, for release May 12, and "The Ordeal," from the Horsley-Mutual studios, which goes to the public on May 13, complete the two-reel subjects. In the former Rhea Mitchell and William Stowell are the featured players, while Margaret Gibson has the lead in "The Ordeal." Miss Gibson is supported by a company of noted players, especially chosen for these two-reel features, in which she is the star. The Bostock animals add considerably to the interest of the production.

"The Kiddies' Kaptain Kid," to be released May 8, featuring Riley Chamberlin, Walter Hiers and Louise Emerald Bates and "Freddie's Frigid Finish," released May 13, with Jay C. Yorke and Frances Keyes, are the Falstaff comedies for the week. The Vogue comedies include "Germantic Love," with Arthur Travares and Madge Kirby and "A Mix-Up at Rudolph's," with Paddy McQuire and Rena Rodgers. They will be released May 9 and May 14, respectively.

"Skelly's Skeleton," with Carol Halloway and John Sheehan, and "No Title," with Oral Humphrey as the featured player, are the "Beauty" offerings of the week. "Skelly's Skeleton" will be released May 10 and "No Title" May 14. "Jerry's Perfect Day" is the title of the Cub comedy, featuring George Ovey. It will be released May 12.

Second of the "Reel Life" releases from Gaumont studios is scheduled for May 14. This interesting subject, named in honor of the Mutual Film Magazine, contains a wealth of interesting matter, consisting of the rebuilding of a railroad, the eclipse of the sun, one of the most unique of its kind ever photographed, and some unusual close-ups of the sprightly cuttle-fish.

Mutual Weekly No. 71, with a number of exclusive pictures just received from Mexico, and See America First, including a trip through Atlanta, Ga., complete the releases. Mutual Weekly No. 71 will be released on May 10 and "See America First" the same day.

Patrick J. Calhoun

UNCLE SAM can go as far as he likes in Mexico. Patrick Calhoun, new Essanay heavy, may even run down to Chihuahua some week end and help him out. Patrick once was a civil engineer in the land of Villa and villains (we know they aren't pronounced alike) and that's where he got his experience for heavy leads. Further, inasmuch as a Mexican once presented him with a perfectly good ounce of lead—in the right thigh after Calhoun had cut him off of the company's payroll—Patrick cannot get wildly enthusiastic about our brethren to the south.

Patrick J. Calhoun.

Mr. Calhoun was born July 19, 1886, in Bray County, Wicklow, Ireland, and was graduated from the Engineering School of Trinity College, Dublin. He came to America in 1906 and undertook civil engineering for Western railroads. Three years were spent in Mexico.

He always wanted the stage, however, and won a place in stock in Los Angeles. Since he has been in vaudeville and on the legitimate stage he has played in support of such stars as Henry Miller and Robert Mantell.

With Essanay he has played in "The Little Shepherd of Bargain Row," "The Dixie Winner," "A Rose of Italy" and several other productions.

JACK SHERRILL IS OFF TO CALIFORNIA.

The mountain has been coming to Jack Sherrill right from the outset, saving this popular young leading man the perplexities of the ancient philosopher Mohammed. The mountain of success has steadily drawn nearer him until he is now well on his way to its peak. In the very first production in which he took a small part his expressive acting and clean-cut "screening" were noticeable, and caused a steady climb to fame through a succession of well handled parts in "The Builder of Bridges," with C. Aubrey Smith; "Just Out of College," by George Ade; "John Glayde's Honour," again in an important part supporting Smith, "The Woman in 47," with Alice Brady, and finally as Steve O'Mara, the woodsman lover in "Then I'll Come Back to You," the lead opposite Miss Brady. Not audiences alone, but exhibitors and producers, have noticed with uncommon interest the career of Jack Sherrill, and now several offers from California are taking him to the sunny climate to investigate its possibilities and continue his work out there.

GEORGE H. SMITH RETURNS TO ENGLAND.

George H. Smith, London representative of the Vitagraph Company, who has been in the United States for the past two months, sailed for home on May 2. Mr. Smith's visit was for pleasure as well as business. During his stay here he visited friends and relatives in California. In speaking of the big western state he is as enthusiastic as a Native Son. In company with William F. Rock, president of the Vitagraph Company, Mr. Smith was in attendance at the exhibitors' exposition at the Grand Central Palace on the opening day.

"Who's Guilty?" Series Ready

First Release Scheduled for May 8—Eight Installments Have Been Completed and Delivered—Interesting Questions Portrayed.

IT NOW is certain that before May 8, the date of release of the first photo-novel in Pathe's "Who's Guilty?" series, produced by Arrow Film Corporation, at least eight and probably nine of the fourteen photo-novels comprising this series will have been delivered by the producers to Pathe.

Anna Nilsson and Tom Moore.

This in itself marks a record in photo-play production even for a record-breaking series.

It has made possible the delivery by Pathe to the many newspapers which will run the "Who's Guilty?" stories of six complete novels prior to the publication of the first one. Thereby the newspapers have been enabled to give these stories unusually fine space and layouts.

It has been decided to release these pictures in the following sequences: "Puppets of Fate," on May 8; "The Tight Rein," on May 15; "The Tangled Web," on May 22; "The Silent Shame," on May 29, and "Sowing the Wind," on June 5. These are the first five of the "Who's Guilty?" series.

All of these photo-novels are problem plays that present a terrific indictment of certain present-day habits and conventions of society. They are concerned with the moral guilt of the men and women back of those immediately guilty. They are pages of life as it is lived by us all, showing us as creatures of environment and circumstance and caught in the whirlpool of our strenuous existence.

Miss Anna Nilsson and Tom Moore, the co-stars of the "Who's Guilty?" series, are seen in a variety of roles that call for the highest histrionic ability. No two of the stories are alike in plot, set, or costume; the result has been to tax to the limit the energies of the players, of Howell Hansel and Lawrence B. McGill, who are directing the "Who's Guilty?" stories, and Hickson, the Fifth avenue modiste, who has designed Miss Nilsson's gowns exclusively for the "Who's Guilty?" series.

"Puppets of Fate," the first of the series, hinges on the moral and legal right of a surgeon to perform a serious operation on a member of his own family. Medical and surgical ethics frown on such a practice; but there is no legal prevention of it. When the surgeon in "Puppets of Fate" makes his big mistake it is left to the audience to determine who actually is guilty—the surgeon, his wife, a wealthy widow, who has perhaps overencouraged his ambitions, a fellow-surgeon, or the latter's wife.

In the same manner the right of a parent to determine whom his son shall marry is presented in "The Tight Rein." Out of the desire of a Puritanical mill owner to weld two fortunes through the mating of his son with another mill owner's daughter comes a cataclysmic tragedy that affects the son, the daughter, the parents and many others.

In "The Tangled Web," the third of the "Who's Guilty?" series, there is presented the problem of love versus money, the primal intinct of a woman to possess her husband's love rather than to be merely the choicest possession his money has brought him. It concerns itself, too, with the validity of a marriage which has been entered into through a fraud perpetrated on one of the contracting parties, an offense for which there is but little legal redress.

The fourth of the series, "The Silent Shame," attacks the divorce evil, which now is arousing the interest of ministers, jurists, law-makers and laymen everywhere in the United States. Between South Carolina—where there is no divorce under any conditions—and Nevada—with its complacent Reno—there is a wide gulf. But it is no wider than between the right and the wrong of it as portrayed in this tremendous "Who's Guilty?" story.

A too hastily formed judgment of an innocent man's act—whereby he is forced to take up the life of a haunted and hunted criminal—is the basis of "Sowing the Wind." The economic struggle—a wealthy wife and a poor husband—is shown in "Sold Out," the sixth of the "Who's Guilty?" series. "Truth Crushed to Earth" concerns itself with the attitude of parents toward their children, of punishment given in moments of passion, of truth and honor crushed when they should be rewarded. "The Weaker Strain" asks the question, Should a wife be dependent on her husband or has she a right to a career of her own, gained solely by her own efforts?

It is on big but homely themes like these that the "Who's Guilty?" pictures have been built. It is believed that a new dramatic note has been reached in this Arrow-made series released by Pathe.

Rebellion Delays Miss Close

English Star Misses Sailing of Liner Finland When Passenger Service to Ireland Is Stopped.

FRIENDS in New York City who expected to welcome Miss Ivy Close on the liner Finland, of the American Line, are now feeling a share of anxiety as the result of cabled advices from the player's London representative. "Miss Close stranded in Ireland by discontinuance of passenger service" were the brief contents of the cable.

Whether Miss Close was in a section of Ireland unaffected by the rebellion and has merely suffered the temporary inconvenience of waiting for the lifting of the British Government embargo on passenger service, or whether she is in more serious danger is not known. It is believed that Miss Close was making a last visit to her estates in Ireland which have been earned by her successes in England, and on the Continent before sailing for what will probably be a long stay in this country.

Vola Smith Joins Universal

ONE of the most beautiful young actresses appearing before the camera is Miss Vola Smith, who has been engaged by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company to work opposite Carter De Haven, the well known Broadway star, under the direction of Richard Stanton.

Miss Smith is a native of Buffalo, New York, and for four years was a student of dramatic art, but never appeared upon the professional stage, although she had taken a number of parts in amateur performances.

Vola Smith.

Two years and a half ago D. W. Griffith engaged her for the Biograph Company and she began work in New York city. Her clever work and pretty face soon brought her leading roles and she appeared in such successes as "Two Girls of the Hills" and a number of comedies, later playing the featured lead in "Lorna Doone," "Black Sheep," "Captain Fracasse," "Masks and Faces" and "Life's Stream." Recently she has been working at the West Coast studios of the Biograph Company.

Miss Smith is very young, with good features, big brown eyes, and has a wonderful expression for the screen. Both Stanton and De Haven are congratulating themselves at being able to secure Miss Smith's services.

"I have no fads but my work," said Miss Smith. "To me work before the camera is only a pleasure and I look forward to it from day to day and am always studying how I can improve my parts."

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

ALL SET AT MINNEAPOLIS.

Arrangements for Motion Picture Exposition Which Takes Place on May 2 to 5 Have Been Completed—Big Attendance Assured.

AT least 2,000 will attend the convention and show of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of the Northwest in the Armory at Minneapolis May 2 to 5, according to C. E. Van Duzee, manager of the convention, who makes his estimate on the advance demand for tickets. A combination ticket, which sells for $2.50, will admit the holder to all events of the program.

Kimball and Cobb Film Manufacturing Company of Minneapolis has been selected as the official photographers for the convention. The company will make a 2,000 foot film in two reels which will be offered for bookings as soon as the convention closes. The company must erect a special studio at the Armory.

A number of features are being planned for the show which are counted on to interest both the film men and the general public. An interesting display of the first types of motion picture machines will be arranged and should prove popular.

Many film men were certain the convention with its facilities for taking pictures, showing film stars in the flesh and all branches of the film business, would prove of great educational value. That their surmise was well placed is proved by the announcement that A. P. Hollis, lecturer in the extension department of the North Dakota Agricultural College at Fargo, N. D., will attend the convention to inspect the latest films and machines. Mr. Hollis will make a special study of the moving picture business from an educational standpoint. He already is making prominent use of films in his lecture work and is an advocate of a more extended use of the picture in all class work at educational institutions. He will be asked to address the convention.

Minneapolis will find particular interest in the fact that the ten local girls who are selected as the best doubles of popular screen stars in the Minneapolis Tribune contest, will be given a part on the convention program.

It has been announced that W. J. Sweeney of Chicago will attend as representative of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America. He will be given an opportunity to take part in the program.

Short advertising films of the convention are being shown in theaters in the Northwest and the railroads are beginning their campaign of blanketing their lines with literature concerning the big show.

CLEVELAND CLUB WOMEN PICK PROGRAMS.

Eight Chosen Programs Being Shown in Local Theaters Under Patronage of Northeastern Ohio Exhibitors' League.

By Hubert Persons, Cleveland Correspondent of the Moving Picture World.

EIGHT programs, carefully selected by the civics committee of the Federation of Women's Clubs after two months' work, are to be run Fridays or Saturdays in seven motion picture theaters here for the next six weeks or more. The programs arranged as a part of the "Better Films" movement of the club women. were decided upon after the club women had viewed scores of films and held numerous conferences with officials of the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League.

Benjamin J. Sawyer, president, and C. A. Megown, special representative of the league, were particularly active in aiding the club women to select the films they want to show.

Every exhibitor whose house is to be used in showing the "Better Films" programs, will file an elaborate report with the league for the purpose of keeping a record of the results obtained from the programs. The club women contend the picture business needs uplifting and that if selected programs are shown, the tone of the business will not only be raised, but the box office receipts will be increased. The women are taking care of poster and newspaper advertising.

Miss Bertelle M. Lyttle is chairman of the civics committee and Mrs. Elmer G. Deer, secretary. The eight programs in the "Better Film" campaign are as follows:

Program No. 1.—"The Making Over of Geoffrey Manning" (Vitagraph), a romance of today's industrial life; "Hats Is Hats," a comedy (Vitagraph); "Human Movements Analyzed" (Pathe); "Children of the Netherlands" (Pathe).

Program No. 2.—"Lonesome Heart," life in the orphanage and Samantha do not agree (American); "Seeing America First," a cartoon comedy (Gaumont); "Mr. Jack the Hash Magnate," a Hearst comedy with Frank Daniels (Vitagraph).

Program No. 3.—"Hazel Kirke," a Pathe feature drama (Pathe); "A Runaway Horse;" "Bamboo and Its Uses" (Pathe); "Our Feathered Friends at Dinner" (Pathe).

Program No. 4.—"Today and Tomorrow" (Pathe); "Si Smith's Conviction;" "From Jungle to Trouble;" "The Thinking Cockatoo" (Powers); "Insect Celebrities" (Pathe).

Program No. 5.—"Adventures of a Madcap," a Jackie Saunders drama (Pathe); "Engineering Feats in Oregon" (Pathe); "The Matsushima Islands of Japan" (Pathe); "The Eveless Eden" (Kalem).

Program No. 6.—"Little Mary Sunshine" (Pathe); "Seeing America First" (Gaumont); "Keeping Up With the Joneses," a cartoon comedy (Gaumont).

Program No. 7.—"Miss Warren's Brother" (Vitagraph); "Her Dream Life" (Selig); "Making Over Father" (Beauty).

Program No. 8.—"The Slim Princess," George Ade comedy (Essanay); "Seeing America First" (Gaumont); "The Runaway Leopard" (Pathe); "The Valley of the Chamonix," snow and winter sports (Pathe).

The following theaters have agreed to show the programs Friday nights: the Marquis, 1755 Crawford road; the Angela, 9107 Buckeye road; the En-Joy-U., Lake avenue, near Detroit avenue; the Boulevard, 9904 Lorain avenue; Funland, St. Clair avenue, near E. 105th street.

Saturday nights: The Wind-a-Meer, Euclid avenue, and Lake Front avenue, East Cleveland; the Deucan, 8437 Broadway.

The club women are having more than a thousand posters printed advertising the programs. These will be placed in stores, school houses and public libraries. The theater owners give their houses to the club women without charge, but the gross receipts are retained by the exhibitors.

CAPITOL DISTRICT EXHIBITORS ACTIVE.

Hold Big Meeting and Banquet at Albany Passing Resolutions of Importance—Plans for the Future.

THE largest meeting of exhibitors ever held in the history of the Capitol District took place at Albany, N. Y., on the night of Thursday, April 27. Over one hundred exhibitors attended representing fully 70 per cent. of the theaters in the district. Not only did Albany, Troy and Schenectady send generous delegations, but many of the smaller communities in the district were represented. Among the latter were Hoosick Falls, Gloversville, Watervliet, Rennsellaerville, Saratoga Springs, Schuylerville, Amsterdam, Milford, Waterford and others. The city of Utica was represented by the former state treasurer, Edward H. Linton, and his partner, J. K. King.

The affair which has held in the big banquet hall on the third floor of Keeler's well-known hostelry at Broadway and Maiden Lane, Albany, had been arranged under the joint auspices of the three local organizations of exhibitors and the managers of the Pathe and the Universal Film Exchange, the latter being represented by Alfred Epstein and C. C. Charles respectively. Music and singing accompanied the dinner, at the end of which L. A. Buettner of Cohoes, president of the Troy local organization, opened the proceedings in a brief speech congratulating the Tri-city locals on their strength and progress. He introduced W. Stephen Bush of the staff of The Moving Picture World as the toastmaster of the evening. Speeches lauding organization and harmony were made by Mr. Buettner, C. C. Charles,

Alfred Epstein, J. M. Mullin, E. M. Saunders, George Wright, Samuel Sucknow, State President Lee A. Ochs, and C. Frischknecht.

After the social features of the banquet, a business meeting was held, the toastmaster acting as chairman by unanimous request of the meeting. A resolution was adopted to hold a ball under the auspices of the Tri-City organizations some time next fall. A joint meeting for the discussion of the preliminary steps is to be held at the next session of the Schenectady local. The following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved, that the motion picture exhibitors of the Capitol District condemn the so-called Christman-Wheeler censorship bill because it seeks to restrain the freedom of expression contrary to all American traditions and contrary to every constitutional guarantee and furthermore because it seeks to impose an unjust, unnecessary and burdensome tax upon a great industry which is of incalculable value to the community as an educational factor no less than as an entertainment for the great masses of the people."

Upon motion of Mr. Weidman of Albany a committee was appointed to get a thousand cards immediately, and fill them with the signatures of citizens protesting to Governor Whitman against the signing of the Cristman-Wheeler bill. The following committee was appointed: Mr. Behmaier, representing Schenectady; Mr. Buettner, representing Troy, and Mr. Wright, representing Albany.

Upon motion of Mr. Ochs the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"The motion picture exhibitors of the Capital District hereby heartily approve of the action of the Metro Pictures Corporation in withdrawing from the Board of Trade as a protest against the invasion of the rights of the exhibitors to hold their annual exposition in New York City."

Before the meeting adjourned it was generally asserted that Governor Whitman is inclined to veto the Cristman-Wheeler censorship bill. It is understood that the regents do not want to exercise any such functions as this bill would saddle them with and they moreover resent the action of the authors of the bill who never thought it worth while to consult them before introducing the measure into the Legislature.

Hear Richardson on Projection

Time, May 10, 2.30 P. M.—Place, Madison Square Garden.

LAST week we made editorial notice of the fact that Wednesday, May 10, is to be "Projection Day" at the Madison Square Garden Exposition. At 2.30 P. M., on this day, F. H. Richardson, editor of the Projection Department of the Moving Picture World, will deliver an address on practical projection.

This address will be of intense interest to producers, exchange men, exhibitors, and moving picture machine operators, but we woud like to impress upon the producers, in the strongest possible way, the importance of their presence upon that occasion.

Mr. Richardson makes the claim that mistakes in the operating rooms of moving picture theaters are costing the industry from forty to fifty thousand dollars per day in needless waste, all of which reacts directly and indirectly upon the producer, the exchange man, and the exhibitor.

The foregoing figures are not designed to represent anything more than the actual damage done. It does not represent the loss to the industry occasioned by inferior projection of the picture due to the aforesaid causes.

Mr. Richardson claims, and is prepared to demonstrate the fact, that at least four-fifths of this tremendous loss is very easily preventable. In other words that the loss is needless, and is due wholly, solely and entirely to lack of understanding on the part of the exhibitor, the exchange man, the producer and the moving picture operator.

The foregoing claims may seem exaggerated, but it must be remembered that during the almost seven years that Mr. Richardson has been connected with the Moving Picture World he has handled a great volume of correspondence relating to practical projection; has answered the questions propounded by operators, exchange men, exhibitors, and producers all over the civilized world, and has conducted one of the important departments of this paper, yet in all that time he has very seldom been proven to be in the wrong in any statement he has made. With this fact in view we take the position it will be extremely advisable for exhibitors and operators to attend this meeting, and that it is an imperative necessity that producers and exchange men be present.

Remember the day, Wednesday, May 10; the hour, 2.30 P. M.; and the place, Madison Square Garden.

It is said that good projection is the backbone of every successful motion picture exhibition. The more managers and owners of theaters appreciate this fact the more efficient and competent operators there are the better for everybody. The man in the booth is far more important than many exhibitors imagine. The day when experts only will be found in the booth is bound to come. The lecture of Mr. Richardson is full of practical value and therefore no man interested in motion pictures can afford to stay away from Madison Square Garden on May 10.

GOV. HARRINGTON SIGNS CENSOR BILL.

Despite the fact that the Baltimore exhibitors made a strong fight in opposition to the passing of the censorship bill by the Maryland Legislature, it has at last become a law by the Governor affixing his signature to the measure.

The law states that not more than two members of the board of censors shall be affiliated with the same political party, so it is assumed by this that a woman may be appointed to the board. There will be three persons appointed and each will receive a salary of $2,400 a year.

The Maryland Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage made a resolution, a copy of which was sent to Governor Harrington, asking that a woman be appointed on the censorship board. In this resolution they also commend the 1916 Legislature for passing and the Governor for signing the bill.

DES MOINES HAS A SCREEN CLUB.

Motion picture men of Des Moines, Ia., have organized a screen club. The charter members of this organization are A. Blank, L. A. Sheridan, M. J. Frisch, Abe Frankel, R. S. Ballantyne, Harry Hiersteiner, C. W. Jeffries, R. C. Le Beau, C. P. Rich, C. E. Smith and V. B. Lederman. The officers are C. E. Smith, president; Abe Frankel, vice president; Harry Hiersteiner, secretary, and A. Blank, treasurer.

The object of the first meeting held was to co-operate with the Iowa Exhibitor's League for their convention on May 23-24. It is intended to give a big ball and banquet on May 24, under the auspices of both the league and the club.

EXHIBITORS AT DECATUR, ILL., ORGANIZE.

The Exhibitors League and Theatrical Managers Association of Decatur, Ill., has been organized with these officers: President, Ray Colvin, Orpheum theater; vice-president, Daniel Higgins, Paris theater; secretary, Charles E. Dorgan, Strand theater; treasurer, Mrs. Emma J. Striewing, Crystal theater.

A BIG THANHOUSER NIGHT.

The big night for the Thanhouserites in New Rochelle came off with a howling success at Germania Hall Thursday night, April 27. It was a grand ball and minstrel show, given by the players for the benefit of the studio's relief fund. The first estimate of the returns shows that at least $850 was realized from the sale of tickets, cigarettes, souvenirs, etc. This money will be made the foundation for a fund from which performers who appear in the studio will be given aid and relief whether ill or destitute. For this worthy purpose over 1,000 people were assembled at the ball when Frederick Warde, the eminent tragedian, made the opening speech. After his ovation Director Frederick Sullivan took the conductor's baton, while the orchestra played "The Lost Chord," an overture composed by Mr. Sullivan's uncle, of Gilbert and Sullivan fame. The same selection was sung during the minstrel show by Thomas Burke and the Thanhouser sextette. Wayne Arey was interlocutor, and Gordon Hollingshead, Walter Hiers, Harry Bates and Billy Bowers held down the ends. Billy Bowers, the same old Billy, whom lovers of burnt-cork comedy of the last generation can never forget. He was decidedly the hit of the evening. Frank Farrington appeared in a specialty and Ray Dunne in a solo. The grand finale was a patriotic review in which Uncle Sam and various patriotic characters, together with the well known Red, White and Blue, which was born "forty-five minutes from Broadway," brought the audience to their feet.

Frank Grimmer, in charge of the arrangements, made good, as also did other members of his family, notably Grimmer's Orchestra, which rendered the music magnificently.

The grand march was led by Florence La Badie and the Thanhouserites extended the courtesy to the Universal by honoring Harry Benham with a place beside her.

Chicago News Letter

By JAS. S. McQUADE.

FUNKHOUSER HAS A BOSS.

The Law Makes Chief of Police Healey the Final Judge in the Censorship of Moving Pictures in Chicago.

THAT full powers of censorship of moving pictures and of stage productions are vested only in Chicago's chief of police has been shown in the formal opinion of Corporation Counsel Ettelson, which was made public one day last week.

Much criticism of Mr. Ettelson was indulged in because of his decision in designating the final judge in Chicago censorship, as reported in my last letter. He, therefore, has cited the law and the authority on which he based his opinion A brief summary of the latter is given herewith:

The first provision of the censorship ordinance holds that exhibition of a moving picture in the city is unlawful unless a permit is first obtained from the general superintendent of police.

The second provision says in part that all pictures shall be shown to the general superintendent of police, who shall inspect or cause to be inspected such plates, films, rolls or apparatus, or such picture or series of pictures, and within three days after such inspection he shall either grant or deny the permit.

The third provision is to the effect that it is the duty of the general superintendent of police to refuse permits for immoral pictures.

The fourth provision allows an appeal to the Mayor in the event a picture is rejected.

"In every provision of the law," says Mr. Ettelson, "the chief is named. I wonder why the second deputy has been allowed to exercise this power when the law so plainly states itself.

"How this ordinance could have been in existence for three years under Mayor Harrison and one year under Mayor Thompson, with the second deputy exercising the power of the chief, is more than I can see. I told the chief the law is being violated every time a permit is issued by Second Deputy Funkhouser, and he suggested that a conference be held between the mayor, the chief and myself, at which the whole situation will be gone over thoroughly."

According to the corporation counsel Chief of Police Healey need not be present at exhibitions of photoplays in the moving picture censorship bureau to see whether or not they are fit for production in Chicago. He may accept the report of a personal representative, even though the latter's views fail to coincide with the "final" word of the second deputy superintendent.

Chief Healey issued a "pink" permit for "The Little Girl Next Door"—which was refused any permit by Second Deputy Funkhouser—on Thursday, April 27. This means that it can be shown to adults only.

Remarkable Demand for "Gloria's Romance."

I have learned from George Kleine's Chicago office that the business connected with the pre-service and regular release bookings. "Gloria's Romance" has grown to such proportions that the opening of new offices in certain districts has become necessary.

In St. Louis an office has been established in the Empress building, on "Film Row;" another was opened in Indianapolis last week, and another will be established in Detroit on May 1.

For the regular release of "Gloria's Romance" the Chicago office alone had, on April 28, no less than 18 first-run play dates contracted, at hitherto unheard of prices for a two-reel subject, and similar success has been reported throughout the middle and far west. Included among these regular bookings are the five houses of Lubliner and Trinz, this city, and the Ascher Bros.' chain of eight houses—two days in each house.

In St. Louis Frank Tate, of the Vaudeville Theater Company, which controls the Columbia, the King's and other theaters, has arranged to present "Gloria's Romance," on the pre-service plan, at both the theaters named for a period of 20 weeks. The Triangle pictures, in addition, will be run at both these houses. In Kansas City the Willis Wood Theater will run the Billie Burke novel for 20 weeks, on the pre-service plan.

The Palace, Des Moines, owned by J. Milosiowsky; the Jefferson, Fort Wayne, owned by W. C. Quimby, and the Family Theater, Davenport, Iowa, owned by J. Mittlebusher, have contracted for pre-service bookings. The Turner & Dahnken circuit of houses on the Pacific Coast has arranged for pre-service bookings as follows: Seven days for each release in San Francisco, the same in Portland, Ore., four days for each release in Oakland and Sacramento, and three days for each release in Berkeley, San Jose and Reno. In Denver the Isis has signed for pre-service, for a weekly showing, or a period of 20 weeks.

These are only what film men call the breaking of the surface, but they are wonderful showings for so short a time. Besides, the other sections of the country have not been touched on in this superficial report.

Miss Billie Burke is evidently a magnet of wonderful power in the film field, and from what can be judged of the moving picture novel of Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Hughes by the first filmed chapter, a review of which appears elsewhere in this issue, the future seems to promise a record breaker for "Gloria's Romance."

On Segregation of Colored People in Theaters.

A colored man was arrested in Evanston, Ill., one night last week, after he had refused to take a seat assigned him in the Triangle theater, a moving picture house in that town. He was conducted to the seat by Abraham Seaman, the manager, but refused to occupy it. Instead he proceeded to occupy one in another part of the house, but was prevented from doing so by the manager. An altercation followed, during which, the manager alleges, the colored man threatened to shoot him. A policeman was called and the man was arrested on the charge of disorderly conduct.

The colored man charges discrimination, alleging that the owners of the Triangle and two other theaters in Evanston discriminate against colored people by placing them in certain sections. On the other hand, Manager Seaman declares that each ticket sold at his house bears the printed notice: "We reserve right to designate seats for our patrons."

A similar case occurred in the Majestic theater, Jacksonville, Ill., some time ago. G. M. Luttrell, the owner and manager, had two cases brought against him by the Rev. Dr. Scruggs, pastor of a colored church, on behalf of two minors (colored girls) for damages because of the segregation of colored patrons in his theater.

The suit was heard before a justice of the peace, of Jacksonville, both cases being tried before the justice without a jury. The defendant was found not guilty and both cases were appealed by the plaintiff to the Circuit Court of Morgan County. At the November term, 1915, the case was tried before Judge Norman L. Jones and a jury and a verdict was returned in favor of the defendant.

The plaintiff entered a motion for a new trial, which was overruled by the court and judgment entered on the verdict in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiff took orders for an appeal to the Appellate Court. The time for perfecting the appeal was allowed to expire by the plaintiff and no further proceedings have since been taken.

Chicago Film Brevities.

The Palace, Racine's new photoplay theater, and the finest in the city, was opened Sunday, April 23. The house cost $60,000 and has a seating capacity of 900. It is owned by Arthur Friedman, of the Friedman's big department store, in Racine, who is also general manager. The Palace is up to date in every particular—in ventilation, in protection against fire, in decoration, appointments, etc. Particular attention was centered on the projection of pictures in the construction of the new house. Frank L. Hough, general manager of the Kleine Optical Company, was consulted by Mr. Friedman and the architect of the house, with the result that the structure was actually built around the screen. All the projection apparatus was installed under Mr. Hough's supervision.

Four pages of the Racine Journal-News in the issue of Saturday, April 22, were devoted to the announcement of the opening. In the announcement General Manager Friedman stated:

"I have secured the very best pictures obtainable, and will show the international stars in their latest and best photoplay productions; also amusing, clean comedies and the most interesting travel subjects, with a complete change of program, daily." A Hope Jones Unit orchestra has been installed, and Mlle. Meier, a noted musician, has been engaged to play it. The admission is 10 cents.

The Gumbiner Brothers have added their beautiful new theater, the New Regent, at 6824-28 South Halsted street, to the list of modern structures now devoted to moving pictures in Chicago. The house was opened Friday evening, April 28, at an invitation presentation, and the seating capacity of 1,000 was taxed to accommodate the attendance. Triangle, Metro, Paramount, World and other features will be shown exclusively. A special feature of the programs at the New Regent will be the accompanying music. Emmett Robert Gaderer, organist and musical director, who is a specialist in adapting and arranging musical programs for pictures, has been engaged. Mme. Emma Alermi, soprano, sang several numbers at the opening and was highly applauded.

Edward Levin, manager of the Langley theater, 706 East 63rd street, this city, during a call at this office last week, stated that he had just installed a $10,000 Seeburg pipe organ in the Langley. He reported good business, with programs consisting of Triangle, Metro, World, Equitable, Fox and other makes. The Langley seats 900 people and the admission is 5 and 10 cents. Levin & Waiss are the owners, the manager being the son of the senior partner.

Selig's six-reel feature film, "War-Torn Poland," was given its premier in this city at the Star theater on Monday, April 24. The Star seats 2,200 people and was crowded from 1 o'clock in the afternoon until nearly midnight, many being turned away. The demand for this feature was so great that the Star management continued the engagement the following two days. Much enthusiasm was excited by the exclusive scenes from the European battlefields. The pictures show vividly the devastation wrought by the war in Poland, and the hardships and terrors suffered by the people of that unfortunate country. Several leading Polish societies of America have taken unusual interest in these films and will likely use them in aid of the Polish relief fund.

W. H. Clune, owner of the Clune theater, Los Angeles, and prominent in other film ventures, was in the city last week, accompanied by his associate, Lloyd Brown. While here arrangements were made with the management of the big Auditorium theater to run "Ramona" at that house for an indefinite run, opening Monday, June 19. "Ramona," a twelve-reel photoplay, is based on Helen Hunt Jackson's famous novel, and has aroused considerable interest and comment throughout the country. It is now in its fifth week in New York city. Mr. Clune was especially pleased at being able to secure the Auditorium, because of its large stage, the largest in the country. This will enable him to use in their entirety three massive settings, which are required for the presentation, and which represent the three periods of the story.

The first and second episodes of "The Mysteries of Myra," by the International Film Service, were shown at the Palace Music Hall, this city, Thursday morning, April 27. The event was invitational and the pictures were viewed by a large audience. The talented director, Theodore W. Wharton, and his brother, Leopold D. Wharton, are in charge of the production, and that is sufficient, with such a subject, to guarantee a successful issue.

The Mothers' Club of Evanston, Ill., the oldest of its kind in the state, has arranged to give moving picture shows especially designed for children, at the Noyes school. The members recently raised money for a stage curtain and a projecting machine by giving a vaudeville entertainment, and in the coming winter the children will have all the pictures that they want of the suitable kind.

The following bills have been announced at the prominent down-town theaters in Chicago for the week beginning Sunday, April 30:

Studebaker—The second successful week of Charlie Chaplin's "Carmen" terminated Saturday, April 29, and the following week's bill includes Dustin Farnum in "David Garrick" (Pallas), the Pathe Weekly, a Paramount pictograph and George Kleine's scenic pictures.

Fine Arts—"The Ne'er Do Well" enters its fourth week after achieving the three most successful weeks known at this house.

Colonial—Kitty Gordon in "Her Maternal Right" (World); Harry Watson in "Bells and Belles," a Musty Suffer comedy; a Burton Holmes travelogue, and the Hearst-Vitagraph Weekly.

Strand—This will be anniversary week at this house, and to celebrate it becomingly the management has secured Mme. Mariska Aldrich, the Hungarian dramatic soprano and a member of the Metropolitan Opera Company, as soloist. She will be accompanied by Allene Hale, pianist and harpist, who has come into prominence in connection with the appearances of Mme. Schumann-Heink and David Bispham. These artists will be supported by the celebrated Strand Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Warde Johnstone. The moving picture program includes "A Child of the Paris Streets" (Fine Arts), which features Mae Marsh, Robert Harron and Tully Marshall, and a Nestor comedy, "Her Hero," with Billie Rhodes and Lee Moran.

Ziegfeld—"The Come Back" (Metro), starring Harold Lockwood and May Allison, supported by a number of short subjects, including a topical picture, a scenic, a comedy and animated cartoons of Mutt and Jeff.

La Salle—Charlie Chaplin's "Carmen" has been so successful at this house that it has been contracted for a third week. Also on the bill is "The Moment Before" (Famous Players), featuring Pauline Frederick.

James L. McGee has been appointed business manager of the California interests of the Selig Polyscope Company. Mr. McGee left Chicago for Los Angeles on Thursday, April 27, and after a brief stay there he will return east to accompany the Selig company of players to St. Louis and Vicksburg, where special scenes for "The Crisis" will be filmed. Mr. McGee joined the Selig company seven years ago as a player and in the course of time was promoted to the position of business manager of Selig's Edendale studio. Thomas Nash has been appointed manager of the Selig producing forces on the Pacific Coast. "Tom" is widely and favorably known in moving picture circles and started with the Selig company sixteen years ago.

Announcement has been made that Orchestra Hall will open with cinema concerts on Saturday, May 6. The policy of open booking will be maintained, as will also a weekly change of program. A diversified program of photoplays, comedy and novelty pictures will be given. The feature of the opening program will be "The Law Decides" (Vitagraph), released through V-L-S-E, Inc. Music will form an important part of the entertainments. A full orchestra of Chicago Symphony players, under the direction of Arthur Dunham, will furnish the music. Miss Jenny Dufau, of the Chicago Opera Company, will be the principal soloist for the first week. The prices will be 25 cents, 50 cents and 75 cents.

Buffalo Has Producing Company

New Organization Is Called the Overland Film Producing Company.

THE Overland Film Producing Co., Inc., one of the lately started film concerns, with their headquarters in Buffalo, N. Y., evidently are going to be one of the largest films of its kind in the country, as they intend to erect a chain of twelve studios to produce and release one six-reel feature weekly on state rights plan.

James Calnay, the promoter of the Overland Film Producing Co., of Buffalo, N. Y., is known as one of the most able men in the film business, being an expert in this line. The Overland Company is now working on a six reel feature, which is to be released about the first of September, the title of the play being "Man's Fate Is Woman." We understand this play is to be something exceptional, a heavy society drama, with plenty of strong moral points. The story was written by Mr. Calnay, who is to direct and to be featuring in the play.

MOSS MOVES.

On and after May 1, 1916, the general booking departments, the B. S. Moss Theatrical Enterprises, Inc., B. S. Moss Motion Picture Corporation, and the Amalgamated Vaudeville Agency will be located on the eleventh floor of the Godfrey Building, 49th street and 7th avenue, New York.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

"CIVILIZATION" A GREAT SUCCESS IN LOS ANGELES.

Thomas H. Ince's Photodrama Draws Crowds at Majestic Theater—Producer Receives Many Congratulatory Messages.

"CIVILIZATION," Thomas H. Ince's great photo-spectacle, enters its second successful week at the Majestic theater in Los Angeles. That this drama has struck a responsive cord in the heart of the public is demonstrated daily by a patiently waiting crowd in front of the box office of the theater. From almost every part of the state we are informed Mr. Ince has received messages and telegrams congratulating him on the production of this picture.

A message from Harry H. Culver, the noted California realty magnate and founder of Culver City, says: "After witnessing 'Civilization,' I wish to attach my name to the list of the many admirers of your wonderful production. The manner in which you handled the delicate impersonation of Christ, intermingled with the realistic war scenes, could not help but leave in the minds of all those who have had the pleasure of witnessing the production, the effect of a divine sermon. Looking at it from all angles, it is no doubt the most efficient production that I have ever witnessed.

Sincerely yours, HARRY H. CULVER."

David A. Hamburger, the millionaire Southern California merchant, also was profuse in his praise. In a letter to Producer Ince, he says, in part: "I enjoyed it more than any performance of any kind that I have ever witnessed on the screen. It furnishes food for deep thought. * * * You certainly have shown a spirit that is worthy of admiration and the production itself is proof of your masterly ability in which you have made such a great success."

Still another flattering letter was received by Ince from W. E. Good, vice president of the Kilts and Jackson Company, who, in part, writes: "It is wonderful and to describe it I can only quote my wife, in a remark made as we were leaving the theater, that 'Surely, the mind back of it all had not an inspiration, but a vision.' It is destined to make a great impression, not only upon the people of this country, but upon the nations of the earth, as well."

Producer Ince has not yet decided whether he will take the production to New York City, Chicago or Washington first. He may take it to the capital and there give a private showing to the President, his cabinet and all the other Government officials.

Certain nights will be set aside at the Majestic theater to show the film to some large organizations in Southern California. One night the California National Guard will view the picture; another, the Chamber of Commerce; another night for school teachers, civic bodies and other public organizations.

STUDENTS' RATES FOR CAESAR.

Los Angeles Pupils May Witness Outdoor Shakespeare Play at Reduced Price.

It is planned to permit four thousand school children of Los Angeles to witness the Shakespeare tercentenary presentation of "Julius Caesar," May 19, for 50 cents apiece. This is half the price of regular admission, and as it has been figured the cost of the production will make it necessary for every seat to be sold for at least 75 cents, the Actors' Fund will lose $1,000.

Only one ticket will be sold to each pupil. The different schools will distribute the tickets. It is planned to place the seats for the school children between the main tiers and the stage, so they may be in a position to see everything. Construction work on the scenic effects is progressing rapidly at the Beachwood Natural Amphitheater in Hollywood. Rehearsals are progressing well and indications are that this production is to be the best ever presented.

That the public generally is much interested in the production of Julius Caesar is indicated by the large number of people who visited Beachwood canyon Sunday. The site of the production is only a short distance from Hollywood boulevard. Hundreds of pedestrians and many automobile parties looked things over. The location is very beautiful, and the amount of work that has been done is surprising. Everything points to the most remarkable outdoor performance that has ever been given a Shakespearean drama.

More than two thousand men participated in the rehearsal for the battle and mob scenes for the performance and later a call was issued by Raymond Wells, director of the production, for the services of 3,000 more persons.

MABEL NORMAND WILL HAVE STUDIO OF HER OWN.

Mable Normand, the former Keystone star, arrived in Los Angeles last week to begin her new duties under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince. She immediately went to her home in Hollywood and is now awaiting word from Mr. Ince to start work before the camera in her first Ince-Triangle vehicle. The announcement has been made that Miss Normand will not work either at Culver City or Inceville, but will have a studio all her own.

A four-acre tract of land, midway between Los Angeles and Hollywood, has been acquired and work on the construction of a new studio has already been started. Mable will here preside as queen over a large company of players who will be used as her permanent supporting cast in each of the plays in which she will appear.

She will have her own director, who has not yet been appointed, but each play will be made under the personal supervision of Mr. Ince, and be released as a Triangle Kay-Bee subject.

The first scenario is being prepared by J. G. Hawks of the Ince staff of writers.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

Colonel Schuyler Colfax and Frank S. Noble, of the Eastman Kodak Company, have returned East after a brief sojourn on the Coast.

When in Los Angeles Colonel Colfax and Mr. Noble together with the local representatives of the company paid a visit to Universal City.

Selig's Zoo of late has been the scene of some interesting rehearsals for the entertainment which is to feature the Fraternal Order of Eagles' Boosters Club picnic next Sunday.

John Robinson, the Zoo manager, will present a number of novel animal stunts, particularly for the entertainment of the children. "Bessie," the racing elephant, which was to have taken part in the big race at the picnic with Mayer Sebastian mounted as rider, had to be sent away this week on location. "Bessie," with several of her companions, is being filmed in a jungle scene cast in India, out in the Malibu hills. It will take more than three weeks to make the pictures, so "Bessie" cannot get back in time to take part in the race.

A final rehearsal of the Charlie Murray farce comedy with Mabel Normand, Guy Woodward, DeWolf Hopper and other picture stars in it will be held at the park this week.

Visual education in the county schools will cost Los Angeles county a minimum of $5,105 and a maximum of $10,105 per year, according to the carefully-prepared report of County Superintendent of Schools Mark Keppel, which was filed with the Board of Supervisors Saturday last week.

In his report Mr. Keppel stated about 115,000 grammar-grade children and 25,000 high school children, residing in districts outside of the six communities in the county which have their own superintendent, will be benefited by the new department.

The visual director of education is to be supplied with films, slides, projection apparatus, a hall in which films can be censored and properly arranged for educational reproduction, other paraphernalia and several assistants. A budget of $10,000 has already been allowed by the Board of Supervisors for the beginning of this work.

According to the suggestion of Mr. Keppel, everything is practically ready to proceed with the work as soon as the board gives its final approval, which is expected on Tuesday this week, when the matter will be presented for action.

The plans of the committee were laid before Mayor Sebastian some time ago and it was represented to him that by a systematic campaign the present conditions among the youth of the city may be improved by providing free motion pictures in connection with the various playgrounds and schools of the city.

Allan Dwan, the Fine Arts director, believes in having music played on the side lines while he is directing a scene. He says that music aids the player to assume the artificial dramatic spirit and also makes an actor's work more uniform.

The Fine Arts producer is now directing a picture with Lillian Gish.

This is the first time that she has ever been directed by Allan Dwan.

The story is laid in Kentucky and Miss Gish plays the part of an unsophisticated Southern girl. The part is intensely dramatic and Director Dwan feels that Miss Gish will be seen to exceptional advantage in this Triangle play.

In the cast appears also Sam DeGrasse, playing the role of her sweetheart; Spottiswood Aitken, as her father, and William De Voull and Jennie Lee as the two faithful colored servants.

William Christy Cabanne, the well known Fine Arts director, celebrated his 28th birthday this week and in honor of the event a birthday party was given him at the Fine Arts studios. Among the prominent players who attended the celebration were De Wolf Hopper, Douglas Fairbanks, Dorothy Gish, Norma Talmadge, "Bobbie" Herron, Constance Talmadge and others.

William Christy Cabanne was born in St. Louis, and received his education at the St. Rose Academy and Culver Military Academy in Culver, Indiana. He served three months in the navy, and then received his appointment at Annapolis. In 1908 he made his theatrical debut with Laura Nelson Hall in "Salvation Nell." A few years later he met Mr. Griffith, who engaged him for the Biograph Company, and soon after was promoted to producing ranks. His next affiliation was with the Reliance and Majestic brands and when the latter company joined the Triangle, he was retained as one of the principal producers. His most recent production is "Reggie Mixes In," starring Douglas Fairbanks.

The Press Club of Los Angeles recently entertained De Wolf Hopper and Douglas Fairbanks at their club rooms. The occasion was hailed in advance as "Comedy Night." Miles Oberholt, a local newspaper man, arranged the affair which was considered a huge success.

It is needless to state that Mr. Hopper recited "Casey at the Bat," to comply with an unanimous request; and "Doug" Fairbanks told some good stories and recited choice poetry. A number of the newspaper men made speeches in which they paid tribute to the talent possessed by the guests of honor.

As a surprise of the evening the lights were dimmed and scenes from De Wolf Hopper's play, "Don Quixote," and Fairbanks's picture, "The Habit of Happiness," were projected on a small screen. Hopper and Fairbanks then took turns doing a "Burton Holmes" by explaining some of the incidents that had occurred at the time the scenes were staged.

"A Can of Tomato Soup" is the name of a one-reel comedy this week completed by Director Millarde, at the Kalem Hollywood studios.

The story deals with a rich uncle, who regards actresses with no little scorn. His nephew marries Ethel, whose career on the stage is well advertised by her endorsement of a certain tomato soup and her picture on each can. Uncle visits the newly married pair and demands tomato soup. The complications that follow are amusing and Ethel finally confesses to her past, but uncle is won over by her winsomeness—and good tomato soup.

Gus Leonard plays the uncle, with Ethel Teare and Jack MacDermott in the leading parts.

H. M. Horkheimer, president of the Balboa Amusement Company, returned this week from New York with the information that his merger of five big moving picture concerns with the Balboa has practically been formed and that an official announcement will be made within a few days.

Billy Russell, the stalwart featured American leading man underwent a birthday on April 12, and he forgot the blamed thing until he was surprised by a flock of players from the studio, who stormed his ranch-home, where a spaghetti feast had been prepared by Mons. Robert Klein, Ashton Dearholt, contributed to the spread with the making of a special dish, to which nobody seemed able to fit a name. There was music and dancing. The Temple City Quartet, Nate Watt at the mandolin, Dick Rosson as violinist and Baumann Johnson as soloist providing entertainment. The evening was one of impromptu novelties, and the whole affair was a complete surprise to the American Film Company lead, who was host.

John H. Fisher, president of Redlands Chamber of Commerce, has returned from a trip to Japan, where he went to get "props" for a Japanese picture to be taken by one of the Los Angeles film concerns. "I bought everything from a paper lantern to a throne," said Mr. Fisher. "In Japan everyone seems to be friendly to the United States and everyone gave me all the help they could in getting what I wanted."

To his already versatile role of comedian for the Kalem Company, author and playwright Bud Duncan has added a business career. Mr. A. O. Duncan, the well known ventriloquist and Bud's father has patented a puzzle on the "Pigs in Clover" order. Bud has secured the agency for the Pacific Coast and already the puzzles are being sold by the better stores.

J. P. McGowan this week purchased for the Signal Film Corporation eight coyote pups to be kept at the studios for use in some of the forthcoming Western productions of that concern. The little family was captured in the San Gabriel canyon and offered for sale by a rancher of that locality.

In the face of this recent addition, it begins to look as though recent reference to the establishing of a zoo at the Signal studios might become a serious reality rather than a matter for good natured "jollying."

George Beban was the honored guest at the Saturday night festival of the hours of the Pals Club this week and he told them how to act like an Italian.

The Los Angeles Pictorial Weekly, a motion picture newspaper devoted entirely to the happenings of this locality, has just been started by a group of well known moving picture men. J. Farrell Macdonald, formerly director general of the Biograph; J. G. Mackenzie, of the same company, and Percy W. Higginson, are directing the organization.

The company announces that in case of especially important happenings the pictures will be made and shown on the same day that the event occurred.

Night work is no joke and in order to make it less irksome at the Signal studios, Helen Holmes and J. P. McGowan, featured leads with that company, one night this week acted as hosts to the remaining members of the "Whispering Smith" company at a barbecue spread, which was kept hot until after 3 o'clock in the morning and served whenever the players felt inclined to partake of it.

Four shoats were barbecued in the open air and served with all the "trimmings" in the way of salads, hot bread, coffee and the rest that goes to make up the real, old-fashioned Western barbecue. The innovation was such a "signal" success that it is probable that it will be made a regular affair in connection with any night work that may be deemed necessary at the studios in the future.

That indeed is the proper spirit. And it is only regretted that the offices do not keep open all night.

Lois Weber, Universal's star and director, who, in private life is Mrs. Phillips Smalley, has departed for New York. She is accompanied by her sister, Miss Ethel Weber, who assists her in writing and producing the big films. This is her first visit to the East in four years, and she plans to remain there several weeks, her headquarters being the Astor Hotel, where her old friends will have the chance of greeting her. Among her most noted film features are "Hypocrites," "The Dumb Girl of Portici," "Sunshine Molly" and "Shoes."

For the benefit of the Actors' Fund members of Balboa's staff are putting on an elaborate program at the Laughlin theater in Long Beach. Jackie Saunders will be seen in her original travesty, "How Movies Are Made," directed by Harry Harvey. Others on the program will be Ruth Roland in songs; E. J. Brady, as "Chinatown Charlie;" Daniel Gilfether, in Shakespearean readings; Reaves Eason in a monologue. Additional contributions will be made by Marie Empress, Roland Bottomley, R. Henry Grey, William Conklin, Mollie McConnell and Alice Maison.

Vola Smith, who has played leading roles for the Biograph for the last two years, has signed with the Laemmle firm and has started work at Universal City under the direction of Richard Stanton. She will play a vamp lead with Carter De Haven. Miss Smith is a beautiful type of young American womanhood, nineteen years old and she is well fitted to play leading parts. In this picture she will smoke her first cigarette and don the first snake gown, but pictures are pictures, she says.

Going at a terrific speed, near 83 miles an hour, Ashton Deerholt, juvenile lead for the American at Santa Barbara, nearly lost his life when the big racing car in which he was riding, turned turtle on an embankment of the race course. With him was Jack Mulligan, present owner of the car, which formerly belonged in the Oldfield racing stable. Deerholt thought the car would do a hundred, but it did only 83, and shortly after the speed indicator showed that rate, the car jilted the track and rolled down the bank, but happily neither of the men were hurt.

Here is a new one, "A Gutter Magdalene." It is the chosen title of the latest Fannie Ward production from the Lasky studio. It was made by Producer George H. Melford, who, by the way, has just bought a new car. We saw him with it, so we know, and are only waiting to see how it rides. However, this play is a good one and should make an inviting release for the big exhibitors. Miss Ward is supported by Jack Dean and a cleverly selected cast.

Al Santell, who taps out comedy scenarios for the Flying A, has given to the world a new and clever comedy in "A Germ Gem," which has been finished by Director Oral Humphrey.

Ed Sloman has also finished a drama from the typewriter of Julian Lamothe, entitled "A Man's Soul."

Wallace Reid and Dorothy Davenport spent the week-end at the beach at Santa Monica this week. J. Barney Sherry was another player to sojourn at the sunny southland's resort. Many photoplays are now going down to the water's edge each week to partake of a short vacation and a swim.

Thomas Meighan, handsome leading man for Lasky, has submitted a clever idea to the Actor's Fund committee of the Coast whereby some money can be realized for the big campaign fund. He suggests that prominent stars, who are continually being requested for autographed photographs, write the applicants stating that for a small sum, say 25 cents, such a picture will gladly be mailed, the money to go into the fund.

Miss Ruth Stonehouse, who is appearing for the Universal in "Peg O' The Ring," is a clever young woman, and deserves much credit for her strenuous campaign to become a star. She is indeed a star and a popular one. She is not only popular on the screen, but she is a delightful little lady to meet on the real stage of life. She is an excellent dancer, and she can play a Ukelele like a Kanaka.

Santa Barbara reports say that Carl M. Le Viness, while motoring up from Los Angeles, encountered a couple of wayfarers along the Rincon and very generously lent them a lift along the wearisome road. In fact he lent a very liberal lift and this was observed by the Ventura speed cop, who, a bit later, wrote out a receipt in the amount of $10 and informed Mr. Le Viness it would not be necessary to appear in the police court the following day.

J. Warren Kerrigan will never rest until he has bagged a full-fledged San Diego county coyote, but the other night at the Maryland Hotel after three weeks in the neighborhood, he announced that a second trip will probably be necessary before he can accomplish his heart's desire.

With twenty-five Universal players, Kerrigan has been at Pine Hills Lodge, engaged in the creation of a five-reel feature, "The Silent Battle." The scene is supposed to be laid in the Canadian forests, but the woodlands of Pine Hills and vicinity served the purpose fully well. Miss Lois Wilson, winner of several picture beauty contests, is the leading woman.

While at Pine Hills, Kerrigan spent several hours every night coyote hunting. He was armed with a Winchester, a six-shooter and a bowie knife, but failed to score.

"I heard 'em howling and barking at the moon not ten feet away," said Kerrigan upon his return, "but I couldn't see one of the blooming birds."

Kerrigan says he hopes to return soon to take some pictures at the Tijuana race track—also to resume his coyote expeditions.

A shack has been built on top of a high cliff over on Santa Cruz island, and most any time now it will be blown to pieces for a scene in "The Secret of the Submarine," directed by George Sargent. The company will be engaged across the channel several days. Workmen were sent over with several hundred feet of lumber last week and all this had to be conveyed to the top of the cliff. Tom Chatterton and Juanita Hasen figure in this stirring scene.

The Long Beach Press says that H. A. Anderson has plans in course of preparation and negotiation pending for the erection of a two-story theater building on Pine avenue, one of the main streets of that city. The structure will have seating capacity of 900 and is to cost about $15,000. A large pipe organ will be installed.

LUBIN GENERAL FILM RELEASES.

"Skirts and Cinders," written by Rex Taylor and directed by Edwin McKim, is released by the Lubin Company May 8 through the General Film Company. As the star of burlesque type, Davy Don falls heir to a greater swarm of tribulations than ordinarily may be compressed into one act. His able assistants include Patsy De Forest, Florence Williams, Francis Joyner and George Egan.

"The Wheat and the Chaff," written by Joseph McLoughlin and directed by Melvin Mayo, under the personal supervision of Captain Wilbert Melville, is released by the Lubin Company May 11 through the General Film Company. Three acts of pulsating drama, with a strong story and surprise finish. The cast includes Adelaide Bronti, Ruth Saville, Evelyn Page, Cecil Van Auker, Allan Forrest, George Routh and Walter Spencer.

"Jenkins Jinx," written by Dave Reed and made into one-act comedy by Clay M. Greene for the Lubin Company, is released May 13 through the General Film Company. A particularly malevolent hoodoo causes baleful complications in a story capitally revealed by June Daye, Adelaide Hayes, Margaret Moore, Francis Joyner, John Shermer and Kempton Greene.

OBSERVATIONS
BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

A MOST sensible and gratifying prelude to the opening of the Motion Picture Board of Trade and Motion Picture Exhibitors' League expositions in this city was the joint conferences between the two organizations at which the differences which had arisen were amicably adjusted. What threatened to strangle the dove of peace which had been hovering over them about two weeks before they were to open the expositions was swept away and both organizations proceeded with their undertakings with a friendly and co-operative spirit and good wishes toward each other that afforded genuine pleasure to all branches of the business.

There were a few people who harbored the mistaken impression that a continuance of the rupture without efforts to adjust it would have been good policy on the part of the organizations as the spirit of rivalry would have been an excellent and opportune form of advertising whereby the financial returns to each exposition would be greatly increased. Indeed, not a few people not engaged in the motion picture business expressed the belief that the situation was created for that purpose. But there are more important considerations dependent upon a peaceful and genuine co-operative spirit of the varied interests in the moving picture world than expositions, and the exhibitors and Board of Trade did the right thing at the right time when they buried their differences before the opening of the events. As important as expositions are to all directly concerned they, after all, are but temporary affairs. Whether successful or not they have little or no bearing on many vital questions pertaining to the business as a whole that arise during the fifty-one weeks of the year when there are no expositions and when united interests working in full harmony is highly essential. The relentless warfare being waged by unreasonable reformers, blood sucking grafters and square-headed politicians upon the moving picture industry is one of the conditions that can in no way be remedied or affected by the results of expositions, except to bring financial returns to the treasuries of the organizations to aid in their maintenance and help defray the great expenses they are obliged to meet during each year to fight off the grafting wolves. But with disruption existing in the ranks, of what value would these financial returns be to the industry?

It is not claimed that if the Board of Trade interests and the moving picture exhibitors were not working in harmony any of them would deliberately injure or refrain from protecting the welfare of the moving picture industry. Their self-protection would not allow any of the interests to do that, yet, in a measure, they would indirectly do it. All might be working—and working hard—for the same end, but with the spirit of co-operation wanting they could attain little. History of the business has shown this. With each interest having its own plan of action frequent clashes have occurred and when the attainment of the desired end has appeared within easy reach of has slipped through the hands of all. It will thus be seen that however loyal the individual interests might be to the present and future welfare of the moving picture business, they reduce the value of their work to a minimum if they do not go at it in a spirit of unity.

It is sincerely hoped and believed that when official reports are made after the close of the Board of Trade and Exhibitors' expositions they will show that both attained brilliant success in all respects; but, still more, is it hoped that after the close of the expositions the results of the conference of peace held just previous to the expositions will remain intact and continue so for all time.

* * *

In the fight against censorship at Albany the moving picture people are forced to report "We have met the enemy and are their prisoners." But let us hope the situation will be only one of brief duration. There are decided indications that it will while the so-called reformers and their political cohorts have succeeded in having the Cristman-Wheeler censorship bill passed by both houses at Albany, there is reason for believing that the bill will not become a law. Governor Whitman has assigned a date for a hearing on the bill and it is expected that the session will be one of the most important that has been held during any previous fight against censorship. While Governor Whitman has made no statement or otherwise indicated his views on the merits of moving picture censorship, there are grounds for belief that the Cristman-Wheeler bill is not in a form that will merit his approval of it. There is a strong opinion in circles other than the moving picture field that he will veto the bill for reasons other than constitutionality or necessity for censorship. It is stated upon what appears to be good authority that, in the opinion of the Governor, censorship duties should not be placed upon the Board of Regents. However true this may be, it is a certainty that the Governor is not inclined to make the Board of Regents a department in which revenue measures are involved. The Board is really a part of the Department of Education and he is opposed to that department having charge of revenues. This he thinks is a function of the state, or some department created by it other than the educational departments. It is quite likely that the Governor will be influenced to some extent by an unfavorable spirit toward the bill on the part of the Board of Regents. They did not seek the responsibility, nor were they consulted on the matter, by the advocates of the bill or members of the Legislature. If they had been they undoubtedly would have declined to favor the bill. They feel that it is a forerunner of legal entanglements for them which will ultimately divert their attention from legitimate duties for which the Board of Regents was created.

This whole censorship game, especially in this state, has been brought about by an effort on the part of officials and organizations to evade performance of duties for which they were created. The reformers say there are police regulations but the police do not enforce them; but they fail to justify their neglect to make the police do their duty. The police are silent on the matter, evidently because they feel their regular duties keep them busy and they are not disposed to become theatrical critics unless they come across open violations, or complaints are lodged with them. It is no secret that many of the police are favorably disposed toward censorship. This is due in part to a philanthropic spirit towards some fellow creatures who are out of political jobs. With censorship in force these "poor devils" would stand a chance of landing well padded berths and the police themselves would be relieved of what is now one of their duties by a practical nullification of the police regulations so far as they apply to moving picture theaters.

But there are other shirkers who, through censorship, hope to divert their duties upon the state and the cost upon the already heavily burdened taxpayers. They are the so-called reformers and their allies. Both the state and taxpayers are taxed for their support, besides revenue received by volumes of private subscriptions, and bequests from estates of deceaseds. Most of their time seems to be spent in trying to find loopholes through which to put upon others through legislation duties which they should perform themselves. It is not going outside the bounds of reason to say these shirkers are influenced very much by monetary considerations. It is far more profitable for them to be making frequent trips to and conduct fights at Albany and Washington than it is for them to remain on their own dung hill and watch over their chickens like the faithful old rooster. It is painful to see the trend of a majority of the college graduates of today who enter the ministry and their semi-clerical colleagues. Their first thought seems to be the reform business. Preaching the gospel is secondary. Naturally, in the start they stick to the Bible pounding, but when they have secured a good pulpit at a good salary they attain the political fever and in time become inveterate lobbyists. Their religious training, they believe, makes them superior to all other forms of mankind and no others can discriminate between right and wrong. To this day they preach about the oppression of the puritanical preachers of the old days, but they have not a word to say in behalf of the layman victims of their own puritanical methods. The warfare against moving pictures has brought to light with more distinctness than any preceding movement a condition of affairs among the clergy that must sooner or later attract public criticism, if not censure. The desertion of pulpit duties for lobbyist work has become so pronounced that even many bona fide reformers admit that a limit has been reached. The duty of the clergyman is to tell the people from his pulpit what the laws should be and not enroll himself with a cohort of politicians to lobby for the crowding of the statues with laws which to his "holier than thou" mind are the sinews of perfect government. He may preach laws, but let him give the other fellow a chance to weigh his judgment and wisdom. He may be right, but he is not infallible.

New Vitagraphs

A Blue Ribon Feature, Three Comedies and a Newspaper Drama, for Release During Week of May 8.

"BRITTON, OF THE SEVENTH," a five-part Blue Ribbon Feature, is Vitagraph's big offering for the week of May 8. "His Dukeship, Mr. Jack," "The Double Double Cross," and "Out Ag'in, In Ag'in," provide three reels brimful of fun while "O'Hagan's Scoop," the three part Broadway Star Feature, is a gripping drama.

Scene from "His Dukeship, Mr. Jack" (Vitagraph).

"Britton of the Seventh," written by Cyrus Townsend Brady, and picturized by Col. Jasper Ewing Brady, is a tale of frontier days and the famous Seventh cavalry.

This picture, taken in the vast plains of Texas, is ably enacted by Charles Kent, Bobby Connelly, Harry Northrup, Ned Finley, Darwin Karr and a list of prominent Vitagraphers. The services of a company of the Fourteenth Cavalry, now engaged in the Villa hunt in Mexico, and a tribe of Indians from the reservations in Oklahoma, were also enlisted to make this production.

In "His Dukeship, Mr. Jack," the latest of "The Escapades of Mr. Jack," Frank Daniels has an excellent opportunity to exhibit the wonderful character work which earned him the title of "The Comic Opera King." Alice Washburn and Adele deGarde assist Mr. Daniels in the enactment of this picture which was produced by C. Jay Williams.

"The Double Double Cross" is another single reel comedy in which William Dangman takes the leading part. He is assisted by Lucille Crane, Winthrop Mendell, Jessie Miller and William Lyttel, Jr. This picture was written and directed by Frank Currier.

"Out Ag'in, In Ag'in" is a fast moving comedy written by George McManus and directed by Lawrence Semon. Hughey Mack, John T. Kelly, Kate Price and Jewell Hunt play the important parts.

"O'Hagan's Scoop" is a newspaper drama in three parts, written by Ross D. Whytock and produced by Harry Davenport. The stellar roles are in the capable hands of Harry T. Morey and Belle Bruce, who have the assistance of Robert Gaillard, Thomas R. Mills and Harry Davenport.

Milton E. Hoffman Joins Lasky

Leaves Peerless Company to Become General Manager of Lasky's California Studios.

MILTON E. HOFFMAN has left his position as general manager of the Peerless Feature Producing Company at Fort Lee, N. J., to accept the position of general manager of the studios of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company at Hollywood, Cal.

In eastern film circles few active men in the industry are better known than Mr. Hoffman, who has been prominent since its organization, in the practical affairs of the World Special Film Corporation. He was general manager for the Peerless company for the past two years.

Milton E. Hoffman.

Mr. Hoffman has achieved exceptional success in the motion picture field following a thorough understanding and experience in the theatrical business. His first position of importance in the film industry was in 1905 and 1906 when he was associated with Philip Gleichman in the National Film Company of Detroit. Subsequently he was publicity manager for the Coliseum Garden in Cleveland, Ohio, and afterwards for Luna Park of Cleveland. This was followed by a period as manager and publicity agent for the Vaughan Glaser Stock Company, a position he held for more than two years.

Mr. Hoffman's theatrical experiences have been active and varied. He was manager for William Faversham at one time, treasurer for William Morris, Inc., and business representative of Felix Isman. He has been manager also of his own theatrical stock companies in Rochester and Syracuse, N. Y., and built and staged "The Blindness of Virtue" which has since become a success in motion pictures.

In September, 1913, he again became associated with Mr. Gleichman, who at this time was connected with the World Special Film Corporation. During his long association with the World company he held nearly every position of importance in the organization and achieved a wide reputation for his business acumen and business-like methods.

Mr. Hoffman's position with the Lasky company is specially created as he will displace no one at the studio organization.

ESSANAY LEADING MAN MARRIES.

Edward Arnold, one of Essanay's leading men, was married April 20 to Harriet Marshall of Richmond, Va. Mr. Arnold came to the Essanay company in Chicago from Richmond, where he was playing the lead in stock. It was while playing there that he met Miss Marshall, and the love romance started. The marriage was celebrated in Chicago, only the immediate relatives attending, after which a reception was given to twenty people in the Walnut room of Hotel Sherman. Mrs. Arnold is a beautiful southern girl of a prominent Richmond family. She is a talented musician, a graduate of the Boston Conservatory of Music. Mr. Arnold has made a rapid success in motion picture work, jumping quickly to leads in the short time he has been with Essanay. The prominent plays in which he has taken the leading role are "The Primitive Strain," "I Will Repay," "The Last Adventure," and "The Danger Line."

BUSHMAN BUYS ESTATE.

The 115-acre estate which Francis X. Bushman, the Quality-Metro star has been leasing and maintaining as his home since last fall, and which was the property of the late George Blakiston, has now become his property, the deal being consummated through the office of F. N. Iglehart & Co. It is said that about $65,000 was paid for the estate. It is beautifully situated near Riderwood in the Green Spring Valley, and is one of the finest pieces of ground in the county. The buildings upon the land consist of a handsome residence of stucco with 16 rooms, two nearby tenant houses, stables, a greenhouse and a garage.

"Social Pirates" Limited

Kalem Declines to Extend Series Beyond Fifteen Episodes as Requested by Many.

THE spirit of the letters from hundreds of exhibitors urging us to make preparations to extend the 'Social Pirates' series beyond the fifteen weeks originally announced is certainly encouraging," declared Mr. Wright of the Kalem Company to a world representative last week.

Scene from "The Social Pirates" (Kalem).

"But we feel certain that exhibitors will agree with our decision after hearing our explanation."

"It took many, many months of preparation to decide on the fifteen stories comprising the Bronson Howard series and on the other details. We applied every possible test to every episode and were therefore not speaking in an offhand manner when we promised that, as strong as the first episode was, each following release of the series would be better than the preceding one.

"We haven't forgotten that promise. Exhibitors have been so kind as to assure us that the five episodes already released have more than lived up to the promise. So that now our position is that of pride which we do not wish to endanger.

"We would rather have the series end in a burst of glory with the fifteenth episode than take the possible chance that the sixteenth would drop even a shade from the high standard achieved. And, frankly, I feel certain that it would have to drop, for I do not believe it is possible for anyone to keep up the swift pace we have set for ourselves beyond the fifteen week mark.

"I might say, though, that we are devoting considerable attention to the preliminary details of our new series. While it is not yet possible to make public any details I might give exhibitors just one little hint: The new series will have all the qualities that made 'Stingaree' so popular. That's a 'word to the wise' that should promise even bigger box-office receipts than 'The Social Pirates'."

METRO ENGAGES R. C. SMITH, PHOTOGRAPHER.

Robert C. Smith, who has the distinction of making more individual photographs than any man of his age in the United States, but who turned his talents to motion pictures more than six years ago, has been engaged by the Popular Plays and Players as head cameraman for all of Mme. Petrova's features made for the Metro program. For many years, Mr. Smith was in charge of the Dietrich Brothers famous boardwalk gallery in Atlantic City, where in season he had as many as forty photographers working under his direction.

GEORGE W. SMALLEY DIES.

Phillips Smalley, the well known actor-director of Universal City, recently received a cablegram that his father, George W. Smalley, a famous journalist, had died at his London home. The deceased was in advanced years, but the cablegram contained no information as to the immediate cause of his death. George W. Smalley was one of the last of the famous war correspondents and journalists of the Civil War days.

Mrs. Katherine Carter Embarks in New Enterprise

In Conjunction With Gustave Frohman a Big Educational Bureau Is Called Into Existence.

FROM an announcement just received it looks as though combined forces and combined ideas were going to do things in a big way for the educational picture field. Contracts have been signed by Mrs. Katherine Carter and Gustave Frohman to place the management and distribution of all educational subjects under Mrs. Carter's direction in her new association with the Gustave Frohman Photoplay Exchange of Boston, Mass.

For a number of months the interest of New England exhibitors has been centered upon the unique ideas of Mr. Frohman as to the types of photo dramas and educational subjects advocated in his many talks delivered before clubs and college associations in Boston. The artistic building completed in March for the Gustave Frohman Exchange has gradually become the center for films on subjects such as Mr. Frohman advocates, and of decidedly good photographic quality.

In this work of obtaining clean, dramatic features and unusual educational films, Mrs. Carter's close contact with, and thorough knowledge of all producers will be most effective. Her wide reputation among school and church interests will make the service of her department vitally helpful to such institutions, as well as to the exhibitors in whose audiences Mr. Frohman's ideas have created a new interest in pictures.

The Exchange will be unrestricted in the sources from which it will draw material to conform with the standards laid down. In its relations with exhibitors, single features will be supplied, or programs with a uniform standard contracted for. In educational and religious service, intelligent study of the needs of each case will determine the films supplied, and advice in selecting projection equipment will be a valuable aid.

The Boston building will make an ideal base, from which activities will be developed elsewhere. This building has large vault capacity for the fireproof storage of film, and an exhibition room of unusually attractive size and appointments. For larger gatherings and press showings, Mr. Frohman has placed at the disposal of exhibitors the Copley theater, which he also controls. A branch of the exchange is to be opened in New York immediately. Mrs. Carter will divide her time between the two cities, the New York branch providing important facilities for the selection of subjects.

Mrs. Carter sees boundless possibilities for the development of the plans she and Mr. Frohman have begun. Her intimate experience with picture audiences of all types will be used in planning to supply the needs of every field of entertainment and instruction in which the motion picture can be a leading factor. Many of the uses which the film can fill have not as yet been thought of, while in other branches an urgent demand exists, which no organized service has thoroughly met.

World Films For May

"Brady-Made" Products Augurs Well for Month of Flowers—Eight Releases Scheduled.

DURING the forthcoming month, beginning this week, the World Film Corporation will offer eight famous players in five of the newer productions which have been supervised by William A. Brady throughout. The productions, as listed for release now, coincide with the new policy as announced by Mr. Brady several weeks ago, in that diversity and variety of types would be second to quality.

May 1.—Clara Kimball Young will be seen in "The Feast of Life," a Chautard production, staged in the interior of Cuba and said to equal Miss Young's production of "Camille." A superb cast supports her.

May 8.—The renowned Kitty Gordon, last seen in "As In a Looking Glass," makes her appearance in "Her Maternal Right," staged by John Ince under the Brady supervision, from a very strong and unusual story from the pen of Willard Mack and replete with tense and picturesque situations.

May 15.—Robert Warwick, the noted stage and screen player, comes again into the World program, this time in a play entirely different from anything he has yet appeared in, entitled "Sudden Riches," and based on a story by E. Richard Schayer. "Sudden Riches" affords Mr. Warwick ample opportunity to display both his talent and attire, it calling for versatility and wardrobe to the extreme.

May 22.—Alice Brady, last seen in "Then I'll Come Back to You," makes her appearance in a powerful dramatic document, "Tangled Fates," wherein her dramatic training stands her in good stead.

May 29.—Mollie King, recently seen in "A Woman's Power," makes her second World appearance in "Fate's Boomerang," which was staged in the mountain country about North Carolina and Tennessee and which, owing to difficulty of finding proper locale, required more than two months to complete.

With the beginning of the releasing quarter, starting May 1 and ending July 31, the "Brady-Made" product will have begun to show its potency. The list of forthcoming releases following the last week in May includes among other noted stars Carlyle Blackwell, Gerda Holmes, Holbrook Blinn, Ethel Clayton, Robert Warwick, Clara Whipple, Muriel Ostriche, Frank Sheridan, Edna Wallace Hopper and House Peters. Mr. Peters, now permanently with World Film, will characterize that program about seven times a year, while Gail Kane will be seen at equal periods.

Paramount Program Novelties

Week of May 15 Offers a Number of Features of Interest.

SHORT reel features released by the Paramount Pictures Corporation on the program for the week of May 15th are headed by the Paramount Pictograph, showing unusual and remarkable films on scientific subjects and topics of the day. The other single reels are the fifteenth release of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures, "Among the Head Hunters," and the fun film, "The Police Dog in the Park," Paramount-Bray Animated Carton, by C. T. Anderson.

Various stages of the chicken industry, from the hatching of the first chicken to its highest development, are interestingly shown in the fifteenth release of the Paramount Pictographs, which include a continuation of Henry Reuterdahl's screen arguments for naval preparedness and the Trickids release, "Happifat's Dream."

Afternoon tea dances are unheard of festivities in the neighborhood of Bontoc in the Philippines, but important occurences are celebrated by the Canyao, a ceremony partly religious and partly social, combining dance and sacrifice, as Burton Holmes shows in the fifteenth release of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel-Pictures, "Among the Head Hunters." The beating of big gongs and the sound of many barbaric voices, raised in weird chants, makes this native dance mysteries and hypnotic. Head hunting used to be good sport all the year round in the vicinity of Bontoc, and careless strangers were apt to find themselves sacrificial victims in the Canyao. Thirty-four miles from Bontoc Mr. Holmes leads his travellers into the land of the Ifugao people, who have astonished the world with their engineering feats, irrigating mile after mile of rice terraces, which line the walls of their lovely valleys.

C. T. Anderson's police dog, already featured in the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoons in "The Police Dog on the Wire," and "The Police Dog Turns Nurse," will appear in the twentieth release of these drawings that move, as "The Police Dog in the Park." Strolling in the park the police dog becomes interested in the flirtation of a nurse and a policeman and immediately decides upon an affair of the heart with a small dog accompanying the nurse. His flirtation is shown in an amusing series of films. Colonel Heeza Liar, leading man of the Bray studios, will be seen on the screen hereafter at least once a month, according to his creator, J. R. Bray.

Big Four Programs

V-L-S-E Announces List of Attractive Feature Releases for May.

THE V-L-S-E releases for the month of May include a number of features of unusual power and drawing attraction. Among the stars listed appear such names as Dorothy Kelly, Bobby Connelly, Harry Morey, Louise Beaudet, Fritzi Brunette, Rosetta Brice, Richard Buhler, Lillian Walker, Donald Hall, William Gillette, James Morrison, Belle Bruce, Kathlyn Williams, Guy Oliver, Anita Stewart and S. Rankin Drew.

On May 1st Vitagraph presents "The Law Decides," in five reels, with Dorothy Kelly and Harry Morey in the leading roles, assisted by the famous child star, Bobby Connelly. This is a Blue Ribbon feature, written by Marguerite Bertsch and produced by W. P. S. Earle. The plot deals with an evil influence introduced into the married life of John Wharton and his wife, Florence, by his step-mother, Mrs. Wharton, who schemes to supplant the wife in the husband's affection in favor of her daughter, Beatrice.

On the same day Selig releases "At Piney Ridge," presenting Fritzi Brunette in the role of a mountain girl heroine, which is in five reels and depicts a story of betrayal, revenge and sacrifices made for love's sake, in which the feminine star is accorded many opportunities to display her emotional talents. She is supported by a strong cast, including Al W. Filson, Leo Pierson, Edward J. Piel and other noted players.

Another of Daniel Carson Goodman's remarkable psychological dramas in five reels is scheduled by the Lubin Company for May 8th. It is entitled "Love's Toll," and features Rosetta Brice and Richard Buhler.

On May 8th Vitagraph exhibits "Britton of the Seventh," a stirring five-part war drama of the Indian plains. This feature is rightly listed as an all-star cast, presenting as it does Darwin Karr, Ned Finley, Lionel Belmore, Harry Northrup, Logan Paul, Eleanor Woodruff, Eulalie Jensen, Marion Henry and Rose Tapley. Cyrus Townsend Brady is the author of this tragic tale of early days in the boundless West, which begins with an Indian raid on a settlement, and the slaying and scalping of two members of the Seventh Cavalry. Tony Britton, first lieutenant of the Seventh, leads an expedition to revenge his fallen comrades.

For May 15th Vitagraph will show a six reel drama entitled, "The Ordeal of Elizabeth," featuring Lillian Walker and Evart Overton.

An epoch-making event in the world of motion pictures is scheduled for May 15th by the presentation of the Essanay feature, "Sherlock Holmes," with William Gillette posing as Conan Doyle's famous detective. A competent cast supports Mr. Gillette, Alice Faulkner appearing in the feminine lead as Marjorie Kay; Ernest Maupain, as Prof. Moriarty, the emperor of crooks; Edward Fielding, as Dr. Watson, Holmes' faithful chum and assistant, and other well-known screen favorites.

On May 22 Vitagraph presents "The Redemption of Dave Darcey," written by Charles T. Dazey and produced in five reels by Paul Scardon. The plot is one of intense heart interest, simple in construction, yet alive with exciting situations. James Morrison, Belle Bruce, Billie Billings and Mary (Mother) Maurice, are featured in this production, which is replete with dramatic incident.

Kathlyn Williams, Guy Oliver and Harry Lonsdale appear in the Selig five-reel feature, "Into the Primitive," to be released May 29. The plot is taken from the novel of the same name by Robert Ames Bennet, which ranked among the foremost of the "best sellers," a few years ago. It deals with the adventure of a party shipwrecked on a desert island, the love of a resourceful Yankee engineer for the heroine, and the manner in which he finaly proves himself worthy of her love, despite the fact that a great gulf yawns between their social stations.

Another May 29th release is the five-part Vitagraph drama, "The Suspect," featuring Anita Stewart and S. Rankin Drew. In this production Miss Stewart is seen to good advantage in a role totally different from anything in which she has yet appeared. The feature was written by H. J. W. Bam and directed by Mr. Drew.

Triangle Stars in May

Fairbanks, Collier, Dorothy Gish, Bessie Barriscale, Mae Marsh, Hart, Hooper and Warner Have New Pictures for Spring Audiences.

EIGHT different stars in a similar number of Fine Arts and Ince pictures of great variety, and twice as many Keystone comedies from the Sennett studios, are on the entertainment bill of fare to be set before Triangle audiences during the month of May. The outstanding features are the first appearance of William Collier as a light comedian of the screen, and the second picture Mae Marsh has completed since the Triangle was organized. Douglas Fairbanks, Dorothy Gish and De Wolf Hopper have new Fine Arts plays and Ince presents Bessie Barriscale, William S. Hart and H. B. Warner. Nearly all the popular Keystoners will be seen before the arrival of the month of brides.

Week of May 7 introduces Collier and Fairbanks. The latter's "The Good Bad-Man," for which he wrote his own scenario, was selected by S. L. Rothapfel to dedicate his new Rialto theater. "The No-Good Guy" is the title of the five-reel comedy which Ince liked so well that he engaged Collier for a new picture along similar lines. As a ne'er-do-well spendthrift the comedian rides on the water wagon for a brief period, drives his automobile into a department store, goes to jail for reckless driving, becomes a detective, is successful in his first case and discovers the big criminal and the only girl at the same time. Enid Markey reappears after a long absence as a clever female detective. Charles K. French, Robert Kortman and J. Frank Burke head the supporting cast.

The popular woman stars, Dorothy Gish and Bessie Barriscale, furnish the May 14 features. Miss Barriscale has a powerful play based on a scenario by James Montgomery, author of "Ready Money," "The Aviator," and other stage successes. C. Gardner Sullivan collaborated on the screen version, which bears the name, "Not My Sister." Dorothy Gish is a modern Joan of Arc in "Susan Rocks the Boat." Again she has the support of Owen Moore. Reading of the adventures of the Maid of Orleans she is inspired to start an up-to-date uplift movement.

Week of May 21 brings forward Mae Marsh in "A Child of the Paris streets," in which she is a little Apache, and William S. Hart, making his last appearance for some time in his familiar western characterization. The picture is called "The Primal Lure." Hopper is "Mr. Goode, the Samaritan," and Warner stars in "The Market of Vain Desire" at the end of the month.

Essanays for May and June

Important Multiple Reel Features and Numerous One and Two Reel Subjects in the List.

PRESIDENT GEORGE K. SPOOR of Essanay states that his company's offerings for May and June make as substantial a program as yet produced by Essanay. While there is no more thorough disciple of the doctrine of short subjects than Mr. Spoor in the whole film business he is not overlooking the advantages of the feature film—where a story sufficient for a feature film exists.

He declares that the most obvious requirements of features are better stories and stronger casts. Dozens of subjects from recognized writers are rejected by Essanay before one believed of sufficient power for feature length is selected. Beyond this these stories—the success which has met recent released will testify to their worth—it is not Essanay policy to make them the vehicle for the exploitation of one star supported by an indifferent cast.

"That Sort," a five-reel picturization of Basil McDonald Hasting's play, soon to be released, offers an example of this method. In it are four players of national reputation, Warda Howard, Ernest Maupain, Duncan McRae and John Lorenz, together with the best Essanay has in its company in support of them. So it is with "According to the Code," also in five acts, which includes Lewis S. Stone, Marguerite Clayton, E. H. Calvert and Sydney Ainsworth in its cast.

William Gillette in "Sherlock Holmes," now ready in eight acts, is also supported by an exceptional cast, which includes most of the players who were with him on the stage and numerous Essanay actors, headed by Ernest Maupain.

"The Little Shepherd of Bargain Row," just issued, in five acts, also maintains the established Essanay standard. Sallie Fisher, the famous musical comedy star, is featured with Richard C. Travers and John Junior. The supporting cast contains such well known players as John Cossar and Patrick Calhoun.

But with all this array of talent in its multiple reel features the shorter pictures have received just as much attention. In the three-reel offerings for May the best actors Essanay has are to be seen. Bryant Washburn and Nell Craig are to be seen in "Once a Thief." Ann Kirk, Edmund F. Cobb, together with Patrick Calhoun, Richardson Cotton and others appear in "A Rose of Italy," a delightful little story. "The Jester" is a decidedly novel love story with John Junior and Gertrude Glover. "The Schemers" completes the three-reel offerings for May.

"The Song in the Dark" is a two-reel reissue due May 30 featuring Richard C. Travers. "The Condemnation" is an original two-reel offering with Darwin Karr and Nell Craig. Lillian Drew, Harry Dunkinson and Edward Arnold are the principals in "A Return to Youth—and Trouble," a two-reel light comedy adaptation from one of Albert Payson Terhune's short stories. "The Double Cross," also in two acts, is offered with Elizabeth Burbridge and Patrick Calhoun.

Leading the one-reel offerings are the new George Ade fables, "The Fable of the Willing Collegian Who Was Hunting for a Foothold," was filmed with some of the leading business professional men of Chicago taking part. Others just completed are "The Fable of the Good Fairy With the Lorgnette and Why She Got It Good," and "The Fable of the Preacher Who Flew His Kite, But Not Because He Wished to Do So." Each one is a guaranteed scream. Cartoonist Wallace A. Carlson's Canimated Nooze Pictorial No. 10 and Vernon Howe Bailey's Sketch Book of San Francisco, each in split reel with scenic, also are offered.

Famous Players Engage Ann Pennington

ANN PENNINGTON, who, despite her diminutive size, has been one of the most colossal hits of the Ziegfeld Follies for the last three years, has signed a long term contract with the Famous Players Film Co. to star in the productions of that concern on the Paramount program. "Susie Snowflake," a story of the musical comedy stage, has been chosen as the vehicle for Miss Pennington's motion picture debut, active work on which has already begun.

Ann Pennington.

Previous to her professional debut in New York, Miss Pennington won an enviable reputation in Philadelphia as an amateur dancer. As the little star expresses it herself, "I have been dancing ever since I was old enough to toddle and I thought I would like to take up legitimate acting. I do not know of a better way of studying acting than to come into a big motion picture studio and learn how to express my emotions in pantomime. No, I do not expect to play Juliet or Ophelia — I want to do some real comedy roles with perhaps a touch of pathos, but I am not the conventional dancer who longs to be a tragedienne."

The selection of "Susie Snowflake" is a particularly happy one inasmuch as it is filled with the atmosphere of the musical comedy stage in which Miss Pennington has been living for the last four years, and will provide her with an opportunity of "being natural" in her screen introduction.

This is the third time the Famous Players have introduced noted musical comedy stars on the screen in productions which had the stage as a partial setting for the action, Gaby Deslys having made her screen debut in "Her Triumph" and Hazel Dawn having starred recently in "The Saleslady," in the course of which she appears for a time in musical comedy settings.

Miss Pennington will make her initial appearance on the Paramount program on June 22.

Camera Men on Border

Columbus, N. M., Harbors a Regiment of Photographers Waiting for Something to Happen.

(By Hi Sibley).

THERE is a regiment of movie men in Columbus, N. M., and every nervous mother's son of them is palpitating to get across the border. But getting across the border involves many reels of red tape, the process is slow and tedious, so in the meantime they shoot what there is to shoot.

The purveyors of film publicity hail from many ports, New York, Los Angeles, Chicago, San Francisco, and one of them recently came from an assignment in Siberia. If there were any woods here the woods would be full of them. As it is, the desert is alive with them. They overrun the military camp, they scamper over the surrounding country like so many startled rabbits. If a motor train is sighted on the horizon there is a stampede of tripods and leather puttees; if a cavalry horse stands up on its hind legs there is a fusilade of rapid-fire film exposures shot at him. Perhaps one of the numerous purps merely sits down on a cactus and lets out a very justifiable yip. Presto! He is surrounded by a feverish circle of film makers. No feature is too insignificant to be overlooked.

The slippery Pancho Villa has been reported wounded, dead, headed south, headed east, in hiding in Juarez, in hiding in Chihuahua, but until his body, dead or alive, is brought back over the border there will be activities in camp, and as long as there are activities in camp we will have the picture men with us. And many thanks for that, for this lively crew furnishes no little diversion. As a rule they are a red-blooded lot. Some are rigged up in all the martial splendor of a brigadier general, while others look like ordinary, hard working citizens.

With the largest hotel, the Commercial House, burned to the ground by Villa and his industrial bandits, the town is sorely taxed to accommodate this energetic horde, for there remains only the Hoover Hotel to give them shelter. And the Hoover Hotel is not a spacious inn. By all the laws of humanity it should not accommodate more than fifteen persons, yet nightly it is giving refuge to fifty and more. Still, the Hoover Hotel is a mighty good refuge, for its adobe walls are sure protection against marauder's bullets, and there is no assurance that marauders from over the border will not return in force.

Eating facilities are correspondingly limited. The most popular restaurant is no larger than a flat parlor, but it feeds hundreds in relays of ten and twelve, every day. Occasionally the food supply runs out. A Pathe Weekly man got the last piece of pie in town the other night, and became the object of much envy thereby.

Columbus is a dry town, and its amusements are quite respectable. The most popular of these is the Crystal theater, a little corrugated iron picture house, which is crowded with soldiers at every show. But Villa and his murderous intruders did not spare even this unoffending establishment when they riddled the town with bullets, and two holes, large enough for a man to put his fist through, can still be seen in the screen.

Features for the film men crop up daily; a few days ago a cowboy dashed down the main street of the town as fast as his pony could gallop, and kept a tin can rolling before him all the way by shooting at it with his gun. Impromptu exhibitions of rough riding and roping can be seen outside the town any time. The camera men are a b these days.

Athletic Feature Films

Wrestling, Boxing and Billiard Contests by Champions to Be Screened by Selig Polyscope Co. and Released Through V-L-S-E.

FAMOUS stars of the athletic world are signing contracts to appear in the Athletic Feature Films series to be released through V-L-S-E, by the Selig Polyscope Company, under the personal direction of Mr. J. H. Herman, successful promoter of athletic events. Among the athletic stars to be included in this series are Jess Willard, Frank Gotch, Joe Stecher, Packey McFarland, Mike Gibbons, Freddie Welsh, Zbyszko, Hussane, Cutler, Dr. Roller and other leaders in wrestling and boxing.

Mr. Herman, on behalf of the Selig company, intends bidding for the proposed Gotch-Stecher world championship wrestling match. He will make an offer of $100,000 with the understanding that this sum would give V-L-S-E the exclusive rights for the match including the box office receipts. The match could then be held publicly with exclusive motion picture rights or privately. Pressure is being brought to bear to conduct the match in public as thousands would pay almost any price in reason for an opportunity to witness it.

There will be twelve one reel feature films in the series. The first release will present Albert Cutler, the Yankee billiard champion, in a match game with Koji Yamata, the Jap marvel. These two experts also give a number of exhibition shots which can be viewed better in films than if one were seated in a billiard parlor.

Dr. B. F. Roller and Frank Dalkus engage in a finish wrestling match in which Roller defeats his opponent in a sensational mat battle.

Another sensational subject on this first release of the Athletic Feature Film series is Mike Gibbons in a boxing contest showing speed and science. Gibbons also exemplifies his methods of keeping in prime physical condition. His methods have earned for him the middleweight pugilistic title as well as a fortune in the past three years.

The second release in the Athletic Feature Film Series will follow two weeks after the first release and will present the world's greatest players of pocket billiards, competing for the world's championship tournament, bicycle racers, boxers, and others prominent in various lines of sport and science.

The Athletic Feature Film Series should be attended by the parents of children. These films will teach the children how to become healthy men and women. All indications point to the fact that this film innovation will be tremendously popular. For a modest sum, thousands will be permitted to see the world's greatest athletes in action.

BRITISH NOTES

WHEN trying two boys for theft a few days ago at the City of London police court, the Recorder (Sir R. Wallace), amongst other indiscreet indictments referred to moving-picture theaters as the "curse of London." Typically illustrative of the power of the man in office, the London County Council has given favorable consideration to the imputation by passing a resolution to see what steps shall be taken to prevent the exhibition of any film depicting crime, without first hearing a word of the abundant contrary evidence.

The new Budget introduced in the House of Commons on Tuesday (April 4th) occasioned no surprise to the kinematograph industry with its new and direct taxation of the exhibitor. The impost is almost identical with that outlined in the "World" two months ago, viz., one half-penny upon all paid admissions to the value of two-pence or under; one penny upon admissions above two-pence and not exceeding one shilling, and so on at the rate of an additional penny for every shilling or part thereof up to twelve shillings and sixpense. Upon admissions above this charge (which, with the exception of a few isolated cases, does not affect motion-picture exhibitions) the tax continues upon a fixed scale of one shilling for every ten. Sharing this impost with the motion-picture exhibitors are the drama and variety theaters, football matches and race meetings, and the total revenue expected from these sources is in excess of £21,000,000 annually. The only point in connection with the tax that is worrying our exhibitors is the method of administration and collection. Otherwise an industry never received a Budget impost so complacently. It is clearly one through which the economical picture entertainment will score at the expense of the costlier amusements. Regarding the collection of the tax opinions widely differ. I have met a few managers this week in favor of bearing the burden themselves without making any increased charge to the public except of abolishing half-price charges for children. But by far the vast majority of exhibitors are agreed that the increased taxation from other directions and the increasing cost of film hire necessitates the transfer of the entire burden upon the public and the Exhibitors' Association has ratified this decision. Yet whether the exhibitor pays, or the public pays, or together jointly pay, it is clear that the tax will be collected from the pay-box of the exhibitor and the "hows" and "wheres" of the collecting process are causing hot discussion throughout the country. A proposal to institute Government-stamped tickets of the different face values in the pay-box was contested yesterday by the exhibitors of Lancashire and adjoining counties. Their proposal and remedy is similar to one adopted on Friday by the London Society of West End Theater Managers, that the Government should periodically collect a percentage of the gross takings and not demand the introduction into theaters of ticket systems that will involve a complete change in the working methods of each house. The proposed increase in prices to the public will in all probability come into effect May 1st.

John Bull's other island now has its own film producing company. Not that motion-pictures have never been made or taken within Erin's shores, they have on several occasions been produced spasmodically by American and English manufacturers, but the newly formed Film Company of Ireland, with office and studios in Dublin, will produce exclusively Irish pictures upon Irish soil and featuring Irish players. Historical and legendary pictures will, I am informed, be the subjects of special enterprise. Which will be the next in the producing field—Scotland, Wales or the Isle of Man?

"Peggy," the first Ince-Triangle production to reach Europe, is expected to be in circulation in August. The Western Import Co., Ltd., will handle "Triangle" films here as the agents of the "Mutual" organization.

I am asked to state that any American exchange or exhibitor interested in the presentation of the Kinematograph Trade Motor Ambulance Convoy may procure a copy of a fine topical film 750 feet in length depicting the vehicles, the presentation to the King and the departure of the convoy to Mesopotamia, from Will Jury, 7-A Upper St. Martin's Lane, London, W. C., at $50 per copy. Any profits on the sale of prints will be devoted to the purposes of the fund.

The London address of the Fox Film Co., Ltd., is 74-76 Old Compton St. W.

Maxfield Moree in Kleine's "Musty Suffer"

MAXFIELD MOREE, who appears in every one of the ten episodes of George Kleine's "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer," featuring Harry Watson, Jr., is unquestionably one of the skinniest human beings extant and one of the best character men the business has yet produced. He has been of incalculable service in adding to the gaiety of this famous series of comedies not alone by his weird and unusual make-up, but also by his many helpful suggestions and his odd little "bits" of business possible only to a mortal of his fleshless dimensions.

Maxfield Moree.

Moree is a graduate of the Ithaca Conservatory of Music and a native of Gloversville, N. Y. His first engagement some years ago was with Liebler's "The Prodigal Son," and he is remembered also for a splendid role in "The Redemption of David Corson, a dramatization by Lottie Blair Parker of the novel of that name. An entire season followed as Kendall in "Checkers," then a part with Virginia Harned's company, "The Love Letter," which toured America. Moree then turned his abilities to vaudeville, playing the leading juvenile role with Charles Bowser in the sketch "Superstition," by Oliver White, for four consecutive seasons of big time.

Maxfield Moree has other endowments beside those of the actor. He is an artist of considerable reputation and is much devoted to the futurist school of art. One of his recently completed posters made for the benefit of the British-American War Relief Society has been on exhibition in the lobby of the Century Theater for some time past with two others, that of James Montgomery Flagg and Charles Dana Gibson. Moree's was selected, of the three, to be used permanently in the war relief work of the society.

His father and mother are both living, also a grandmother, aged 89, who possesses a twin sister, also living. These are the oldest living twins of which there is any record, a consideration which naturally affects Moree's belief that longevity and girth are synonymous.

WINCHESTER RETURNS TO NEW YORK.

Tarleton Winchester, well known in the motion picture field as a writer and an advertising and publicity director, has returned to New York after an enforced rest in the country, due to a nervous breakdown. Mr. Winchester's first picture work was as a member of the Morning Telegraph staff, from which he resigned to take charge of Paramount's publicity. In both positions he revealed keen judgment and fertility in originating ideas. At present Mr. Winchester is devoting most of his time to scenario writing with satisfactory results.

TRIANGLE QUITS KNICKERBOCKER.

The Knickerbocker Theater, for several months the Triangle Film Corporation's model for its hundreds of exhibitors, closed its doors on Griffith-Ince-Sennett motion picture productions Saturday night, April 29. Thus the Rialto, S. L. Rothapfel's new "temple," becomes the first-run home of Triangle pictures. The successful opening of the Rialto appears to be the explanation for the sudden decision of the Triangle.

AUSTRALIAN NOTES

AUSTRALASIAN Feature Films, a prominent exchange in Sydney, has started a campaign for the censorship of motion pictures. At present the only censorship in force is that conducted by the Police Department, who, however, see very few pictures. Many photoplays shown in Sydney recently have been of rather questionable character, and some dealing with sex questions having scenes which, if cut out, would have raised the quality of the production. Others having offensive scenes and subtitles which should have been eliminated.

"The Mirror" newspaper has taken up the subject from an impartial viewpoint, asking exhibitors to show only "clean" pictures. They will publish opinions of the film exchanges, exhibitors, and others, on the question of censorship.

The following is an extract from an article that appeared in the issue of "The Mirror" for 25th March, 1916.

Should there be a more strict censorship of motion pictures? The question is one which is very much before producers and others connected with the motion picture industry just at present. We are mainly concerned with the matter from the point of view of the picture fan. The main thing is that the public should be given "clean" pictures, and we believe that it is the aim of managements to keep to that standard. The question has not to be looked at from a wowseristic point of view, and if a board of censors is to be appointed it should be composed of broad-minded men of varying shades of thought.

The Triangle Plays were presented at the Majestic Theater, Brisbane, Queensland, on the thirteenth of this month. The initial program was the same as was submitted to Sydney picturegoers, viz., "The Coward" and "Crooked to the End." All indications point to a successful run.

The photoplays will be presented in the other capital cities of the Commonwealth, Melbourne, Adelaide, Perth and Hobart, at early dates by Australasian Films, Ltd., who control sole Australian rights.

It is a great pity that "The Coward" was chosen as the first Triangle drama to be screened in Sydney, as regular picture-goers remember that D. W. Griffith produced a two-reel picture for the Biograph Co., with exactly the same plot. In this production Henry Walthall appeared as the son. Then a few months ago a Vitagraph production entitled "Two Brothers" was shown in a Sydney theater. The plot in this also was identical to that in "The Coward."

* * *

"The Pioneer," the £1,000 prize novel by Kathryn Susannah Pritchard, has been filmed by Franklyn Barrett for an Australian company. It has been given a special trade screening in Melbourne, and has been favorably criticized by the Victorian press. The release date has not yet been announced.

"Murphy of Anzac," a four-part story dealing with the Australian soldiers at Gallipoli, is nearing completion for Fraser Films, Ltd. This will be the first dramatic release of this company since "The Silence of Dean Maitland," over two years ago, in which Arthur Shirley starred.

In "Murphy of Anzac" the title role is taken by a returned soldier, who is helping the director to secure the proper atmosphere for the picture.

The same exchange has secured the series of pictures taken during the Gallipoli campaign by a British cameraman. These pictures have been released by Universal in the U. S. A. They are a very interesting and instructive series, and show what life is really like in the trenches.

The official British War Pictures, under the general title "Britain Prepared," which, I believe, are shortly to be presented in your country, are being screened for a brief season at the big Town Hall in this city, at prices ranging from 1/ to 3/ (25 to 75 cents). The Town Hall (of which we Sydneyites are justly proud, as it contains the largest pipe organ in the world), seats 3,500 persons.

The series are photographically excellent, and show what Britain is doing in this war. It is sure to have a run of tremendous success in Australia. The length of the subject is 10,000 feet.

The Williamson Submarine pictures have arrived in Sydney after a very successful run in Melbourne, and will be presented as a special attraction at the Palace Theater next week. These are being well advertised and should have a successful run.

Australian Feature Films, Ltd., have secured rights for the Kleine comedy series, "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer" and also the Paramount Bray cartoons and silhouette pictures. The first of these latter pictures to be released will be "Colonel Heezaliar's Waterloo" and "Inbad the Sailor." Cartoon comedies are very popular with Australian audiences, the Pathe-Bray "Col. Heezaliar" series having been much sought after by exhibitors.

All one and two part Universal releases will be issued in future by the Co-operative Film Exchange, who also control World and Metro Features.

The Fraser Film Exchange will shortly present the Universal Ford-Cunard serial, "The Broken Coin." This is being booked heavily in advance by exhibitors, who remember the box-office value of "Lucille Love."

Waddington's Ltd are at present having a revival of all the Essanay-Chaplin subjects, and judging by the crowds attending their theaters, Charlie's popularity is very far from diminishing.

The "Sun" newspaper, one of the best known dailies in Australia, has started a Moving Picture Department in its Sunday edition. This is made up of two large pages, one being given to lengthy reviews of the feature films of the week, with general notes about the players, etc., while the other page is given to press-agent matter under the heading "Reel and Unreal," which is very appropriate.

The "Sun" is to be complimented, as it is the first daily in Australia to conduct such a department.

"The Bystander," formerly a society paper, is now devoting six pages weekly to the silent drama.

I have it on good authority that a big amalgamation is imminent between Waddington's Ltd. and J. C. Williamson Ltd. The former company controls four big Sydney photoplay houses, and many in the suburbs, while J. C. W.'s controls many "legit" houses in all parts of Australia. They recently became photoplay producers, and to date have released three pictures, including a film version of "Get-Rich-Quick-Wallingford," with Fred Niblo in the leading role. They have also the first run Fox Features in this city. I hope to be able to verify this statement later.

Features shown here this week include "The Cowardly Way," a fine Equitable drama featuring Florence Reed, and "The Golden Claw," an Ince-Triangle five-reeler. This, although dealing with a very different subject to "The Coward," was quite as good. "The Submarine Pirate," featuring Syd Chaplin, showed that comedian at best advantage and the absence of vulgarity was favorably noted. "Princess Romanoff," a Fox feature, starring Nance O'Neil, was the attraction at the Theater Royal all this week. During her tour of Australia a few years ago Miss O'Neil played the leading role in the stage version, under the name of "Fedora." Therefore this picture has drawn large crowds.

Melbourne picture patrons have had the choice of several good features this week, including "My Old Dutch" (Turner) "The Dragon" (Equitable) and "The Imposter" (World).

OPEN BOOKING POLICY OF V-L-S-E OFFICIALLY.

The Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn, at a meeting held last week, added their contribution to the movement for increased friendliness between exhibitors and producers by taking the unusual action of officially endorsing the business policy of a distributing company. The company to be thus honored was the V-L-S-E, and the policy endorsed in a resolution which was passed unanimously was that organization's "open booking" method of distributing its product. The resolution had its birth during a discussion of the program contract system of booking. An animated debate upon this subject followed, which concluded with the presentation of the motion thanking the Big Four combination for its service in booking its pictures on the open market policy.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Overdosing.

FOURTEEN-REEL shows are bad enough, but a fourteen-reel show for five cents, including a V-L-S-E feature is worse still. The comparative inexpensiveness of the photoplay will always be one of its chief attractions, but this should be qualified by the fact that too much show at any price is fatal to permanency. Fourteen reels of film at one time is far too much. A patron will come from the house feeling that motion pictures are losing their charm when the real trouble will merely be that too much has been shown. There is no way to prevent a manager from showing as many reels as he pleases, but to offset the evils of the long show, those more level-headed managers, who are apt to suffer from the result of another's action, should seek to educate patrons to an appreciation of the fact that it is not that the pictures are losing their charm but that an overdose of anything will create nausea.

Do not call the offending manager names; for the names he should be called cannot be printed, but run a series of articles or advertisements telling why your show pleases. Something must be done to take the curse off the wholesaler. He is generally a man who does not know how to get business through legitimate means and he cannot be argued with as a human being can. He can see only quantity because he has many of the mental attributes of the hog, and no one ever seeks to argue with a hog. You do not tell the incipient ham and lard that he will hurt his digestion trying to eat everything in sight. You kick him away from the trough. You cannot kick the wholesaler without throwing sympathy to him, but you can, if you can write, show that the man who gets fourteen reels for five or ten cents is not getting a proper return for his money. You can educate him to come where his investment will not result in his mental stomach ache.

A Neat Six.

The Gem, Mt. Carmel, Ill., shows a very neat six-page folder with three inside pages set as one page 4¼ by 6½. The outside shows pages 2⅛ by 4¼. The different days should be dated, but apart from this and a lack of a time-table, the job is nicely done, and the printing is a treat, a nice brown on a deep cream, surfaced paper. The house also sends in a full-page advertisement announcing its change to the Triangle service. The page is almost too full of type. It is well laid out for the copy that must be run, but there is too much copy, even for an opening announcement. There is the suggestion of too much that will repel all save the most ardent fans. Better one fact clearly established than a dozen, no one of which is perfectly assimilated.

Paramount Posters.

Paramount is discovering with pleased surprise that the short-length stuff is making more of a hit with exhibitors than some of the features. The travelogues, cartoons and pictographs are making a hit that proves what this department contended long ago—that the public wanted this sort of thing IF it was done right. And because they are a hit, they are getting out some crackajack posters. The strip shown here gives four posters by well-known artists. Reading from left to right, they were designed by Adrian Gil-Spear, Cory Kelvert, C. B. Falls and Kelvert again. They are posters of class. And as a string for the bouquet, the press department of Paramount sends out indecently illegible carbon flimsy.

Program Copy.

If you believe in having a picture theater a couple of years from now start now to prepare for it. Here is an editorial from Sharp and Vahl, of the Orpheum, Nampa, Idaho, that shows where they get off, or rather where they stay on. Print that and stick to it and you'll keep on going:

> You do not allow your children to read the paper-backed, five-cent, blood-and-thunder kind of fiction—not if you know it, do you? Then why not draw the line on moving pictures of the same general description. There are GOOD pictures and BAD pictures just the same as there are good and bad books.
> Moving pictures now-days are almost as much a part of the child's education as the books. The teachers in the schools exercise great care in saying what books children should and should not read. Do you, the parent, use the same discretion when you give your boy or girl the money to attend the picture show?
> What the child may WANT to see may not be what he SHOULD see, so it is up to the parent to discriminate—to separate the good from the bad and exercise control accordingly.
> Paramount Pictures will make the task easier. They contain as much interest for the child as for the adult. Without resorting to the "who-killed-Jack-Dalton" type of melodrama, they contain the "thrills" necessary to hold the child's attentions. The joys, the sorrows, the tears and the laughter are all honest emotions depicted without delving into the immoral, the obscene or the vulgar. They are designed primarily for the intelligence of the adult, but the fact that they will also be seen by children and their effect upon the developing mind of the child has never been lost sight of. They are the pictures for YOUR children

A Plaza V.P.

E. O. Weinberg, of the Plaza, Troy, N. Y., sends in a Vest Pocket for comment. There is not much to be said other than that the front page is not as well done as it might be. A bold "photoplays" worked into a lot of outline type does not look well, and the message is not strong enough to deserve the space. "Best photoplays obtainable shown here" is neither convincing nor fluent. It should be replaced. Inside the arrangement is better, and about the only suggestion we can offer is an alteration of the line "Pathe News—Latest Edition." This is run on Monday and Thursday and, foolish as it may seem, we think that many will suppose from the same reading that it is the same film. It would be better to give the number or, better still, the date, if the date will show to advantage. In any case the text should show that the Monday film is not repeated on Thursday. Old-timers will remember that the Vitagraph's Life of Moses in five parts dropped because people did not take the trouble to note that the part advertised was not the same as that shown the previous week. The size of the program is convenient and the stock and printing are both good.

Going A Lot.

John W. Llewllyn simply will not keep still. He lately sent in a copy of the local paper with his advertisement over the headlines. Then he put it below. Even that did not suit him, so now he is getting out his own eight-page weekly newspaper; not a house organ or anything trying to look like it, but a newspaper that looks very like the old one save that he has two full-page advertisements. He has local news and boiler plate and all the rest, and about three pages of display trade advertising. Georgia seems to run to newspapers. It is the home of the first daily newspaper-program, the one that Edmund Reid used to get out at Milledgeville, and now comes Mr. Llewllyn at Fitzgerald with the first weekly newspaper with the accent on the first syllable. He does not try to get too much house stuff. He gives to news to ensure his own stuff being read. But Editor Llewylln needs to be reminded that they do not date-line local news. The Confederate Veterans' meeting is 'date-lined.

A Battleship.

J. R. Taylor sends in a photograph of a simple battleship float that can be worked for any of the preparedness stories and at small cost. At a pinch, stovepipe with a painted pasteboard muzzle can be used in place of turned guns. It is made to fit a bicycle. Small charges of black powder, just enough to make a smoke, would give a touch of realism if a man is sent with the float, but do not trust the powder to a small boy. Mr. Taylor, who runs the Amusu, Big Stone Gap, Va., sends for the censorship pamphlets, as a local minister recently stated that he would rather see a saloon than a picture show in the town. We know other men who feel the same way about it, and they are not ministers, either.

It's Come.

With house programs getting more and more like papers we knew that in time the "sworn circulation" would come. The Rowland and Clark circuit, Pittsburgh, prints a reproduction of their post office receipt for 3,926 programs for the Regent. With all-live name, close locality circulation, the theater program is the best local medium for cities that the small business man can get, and with a well-edited program all copies are read through. More general advertisers can get six localities from Rowland and Clark on one contract.

Have You?

Have you stopped to realize what the Paramount Better Babies picture means to your house if you work it right? If you have not, talk it over with any reputable physician—then get busy with advertising and circulars if you have the Paramount service.

House Programs.

George Editor Carpenter takes a whack at Picture Theater Advertising when he repeats just one paragraph about self-supporting house organs and then launches into a plea that the foreign advertising be held down to a decent proportion. Picture Theater Advertising says the same thing, but Mr. Carpenter makes one good point when he remarks that the better the organ the higher the price for outside advertising. That is a point that most advertising hustlers lose sight of. They take eight inches at a dollar an inch, never realizing that if they took four of those inches for really good reading matter they could get the same eight dollars for the other four inches at two dollars an inch, and have just half the collection of trouble. Have a house organ and have high-grade outside advertising in it if you cannot afford to get out a good house organ all your own, but first make it a good advertising medium for the house or it will not be a good advertising medium for others.

To clinch his argument George Editor swells up and remarks: "In the meantime you do not see any foreign advertising in Real Reels. Do you get the point?" We do. You do not see a guinea pig chasing its tail because it has none. Mr. Carpenter has nothing in the way of circulation that will interest the outsider because the trade papers reach all of the Carpenter clients and thousands of others as well. It is different with the house organ of the locality theater.

For the greater part, though, we are fighting right alongside of Mr. Carpenter. The man who gets out a house organ and sells too much space outside is an illiminated ass and other things too numerous to mention. Put your price so that one-third of the space pays for the printing of the program. When you get more advertising, run more pages.

From Maine.

Earl B. Tinker, of Ellsworth, Maine, writes:

> The writer is greatly interested in advertising in so far as it pertains to exhibitor's work, and I regret the fact that more of our Maine exhibitors do not avail themselves of the opportunity to have you criticise their advertising matter. For criticism, while it may not be pleasant at all times, surely is beneficial.
> I am taking the liberty of enclosing a few samples of work gotten out by exhibitors with whom we do business. I would particularly call your attention to the "Washburn" ads., as they seem to reflect a very good advertising imagination.

Maine exhibitors are pretty slow. Only the other day we invited an exhibitor in Waterville to come across the street for a chat, and he did not feel even that much energy, and we almost had to beat another man into making money by using advertising schemes.

Mr. Tinker represents the Phoenix, a Boston corporation, and has been in the department before through his hustling methods. One exhibit is from the Lyric, Washburn. It is a simple paper slip 3½ by 5 and badly offset on the back, though this, of course, is the fault of the mimeographer, who used too much ink. It merely announces the appearance of certain features. It is well worked, but a dollar or so to a printer would have procured a card that would have looked more important and so would have made the film seem more important. The mimeographing would have been all right on a letter size sheet, but it looks crude in trimmed paper.

Other Washburn paper is two small circulars, three by seven and three by nine, flimsy stock, but well-worded. Good job work cannot be expected in most small towns, but this is well set and fairly well printed.

The Strand, Ellsworth, is represented by a manila card and plays up the line "Maine Made Movies." The days are properly dated and the type is well set. It is not a pretty piece of printing, but it will pull because it makes the local appeal and also because it tells about the subject.

The Union, Danforth, does not name the house in its circular. Even if it is the only house in town, it should carry the name. The printing on this is very badly done, for too much ink was used, and it not only offsets, but in drying out, the varnish spreads beyond the ink. A fault is a lack of definiteness. Not even a country crowd will be strongly drawn by "A funny film made by America's most funny people, a scream from start to finish." The brand name is not given. The trick is to seem to know what you are talking about that you may seem to speak with authority, and descriptive matter is better than overworked adjectives.

The same fault holds with the Century, Blue Hill. "A large festival" is not enough for a comedy. There should be a reason advanced as to why it is funny.

The Grand, Dexter, spoils an effect by trying to be humorous. Patrons are advised to wear life belts, as they will drift into "seas of laughter." The rest of the announcement is distorted to work to the catchline, All's well that ends well, but at least the management is trying to keep out of the rut.

A program for the Town Hall, Franklin, but printed in Bangor, shows the difference. It takes no more space than the others, but it tells about the films instead of merely saying "great" and "thrilling" and the like. The talk means something and makes people want to see the pictures, and it offers a well-chosen program, evidently a touring company venture.

We are obliged to Mr. Tinker for the samples. So far as actual submissions go, Maine is seldom represented, and yet, even in Maine advertising can be made to pay, as has been proven.

Playing Up Personality.

J. E. Bryant, of the Plaza, Waterloo, Ia., sends in a clipping and this letter:

> I have always thought that more interest could be created in connection with the showing of a picture if a few remarks of interest could be made just before its showing.
> We are trying this out in our theater and it is meeting with the approval of all of our patrons; in fact, you will notice by the enclosed write-up the first time we tried it out it met with very generous applause. As this is a new idea, I did not know but it would be of interest to you.

Once past the novelty stage, the popularity of the pictures did not progress until the personality of the player became recognized. Pictures are inanimate and without personality so long as the players are not known, but from the early days the patrons came to know players as The Biograph Girl or "Jones" when only the Vitagraph had already capitalized the popularity of Miss Florence Turner and Maurice Costello. It is the same today, but in greater proportion, and anything that promotes a knowledge of the player is helpful. This can be worked through the program, through post cards or in a hundred other ways. The chats that Mr. Bryant has started double the value, for it impresses his own personality on the patrons and there is no reason why the house should not profit from this. The essential paragraph from the clipping is given here. But remember that unless you have a good platform appearance and delivery, it will be better to procure a deputy.

> With a spotlight playing upon him and bringing out his features as plainly as a "close-up," Frank Bryant delivered a brief but interesting address regarding Miss Barriscale in which he reviewed her career both on the legitimate stage and on the screen and named the most important plays in which she had appeared. The audience manifested their pleasure at the innovation by loud applause when he had finished.

Another "Kicker."

"M. Quad" made the Arizona Kicker famous in the boiler plates, but there is a real Kicker down in Flagstaff run by the Empress theater. J. J. Costigan is the manager, but the anonymous editor says the only time he ever showed cleverness is when he appointed him (the editor) to the job. This looks as though perhaps Mr. Costigan is trying to cover up his editorial tracks. The real program comes in the center of the first page. It gives titles and dates and lets it go at that. Then a story urges the reader to note them well because all are good. The rest—of the first issue, at least—is mostly ginger of the right sort, and that does not mean suggestion but smartly written matter that reads almost as well up here in New York as it does where the persons spoken of are known. It is not offensively done, though it is true that one tradesperson was advised to have a couple more "fire sales" before the store was repainted, but it will most all be read with a chuckle and the rest is well done. The management goes on the proposition that if the sheet is readable the program will take care of itself. It is sound theory and better practise. The trade advertisements are all inside and the arrangement is so neat that it is given here as a suggestion to others. Too few program publishers give this even the slightest thought. Jum Brown pays a dollar a week for his advertising. For one hundred cents he can smear anything in his space and kill the program matter. It is worth more than the price of the advertisement fifty times over to prevent him, plus a dozen others, from spoiling the pages. Do not be dictatorial, but have the nerve to exercise some supervision over the text and display of the foreign advertisements. This cut proves it is possible to supervise the advertising and yet do the advertiser justice.

Galley Proofs.

The Square Town Electric theater, Brooklyn, Mich., sends in some throwaways that seem to be galley proofs of their newspaper stuff, or perhaps the stuff is lifted from the form and set into a job chase. In either case it is matter having the appearance of newspaper stuff and it is a cheap and nice form for houses where quick, cheap work is wanted. There is little display, but the reading matter is all set newspaper width and face and is easily read. This particular work is well written, but in setting, the printer should be instructed to set all titles in capitals where they start paragraphs, and not merely the top, or headlined title. Estes and Estes manage to keep things moving out their way.

More Bleich.

Here is another Bleich front-page story. Print it in your own program if you have the nerve to live up to it and to see that your people do, and you'll make more money than you would if you said that everything you have is the greatest ever:

Straight Talk.

Many of my patrons know it to be a positive fact that when they ask me personally as to the quality of a show that I do not hesitate to say it is good, great, ordinary, or poor, just as the case may be. The same thing applies to any items in my advertisements appearing over my name. If I personally urge your attendance to see some particular picture that is one you should not miss, the invitation should be heeded.

Another thing: Are you in doubt sometimes as to whether one of our pictures is worth while? Worth leaving home to see? If you are, go to your telephone and call up this theater and ask how the show is. Any of my employees will give you dependable information—they are instructed to answer candidly and truthfully. Isn't this decidedly fair? Try it out. Bleich.

After the Kiddies.

Lou C. Smith, of the New Kingston, Brooklyn, N. Y. sends in a circular that he sent out for his children's matinees. It is a small four-page folder with the front and back given to the announcement of the policy of putting on a morning performance for the Kiddies. The inside gives the description of the film to be run at the first of these matinees, in this case Rip Van Winkle. It is well worded to appeal to mothers, and it is told in such a way that the reader is inclined to feel personally obliged to Mr. Smith, not that he strives to impress one with the idea that he is overworking himself, but because he talks so understandingly that it seems that here is a man who knows how to solve the vexed question of where to take the kiddies.

The printer spoils the front page of a regular program with a mess of Old English. Inside he did a good job, and the arrangement may help others who are looking for a program layout. It gives but five days, Saturday and Sunday appearing on the back page, though the text can be pulled in, if desired to get it all on the double page. In the original this double page is 9 by 6 inches.

Hazen Conklin Note.

Walter Murphy, of the Star, Two Harbors, Mich., writes that the first thing he turns to when he gets the paper is this department. After that his program must be good. As it happens, it is good. He takes the Hennegan covers for a basis, but he gets out a newspaper on the inside pages. He gets five thirteen em columns across the page and takes little more than a column for his program, making the rest reading matter. One item is one of Hazen Conklin's "Down in Front" stories with due credit to this paper, but as there is a misspelled word contest on, Mr. Murphy had to warn his patrons that dialect did not count, and so he saved them from brain fever trying to tab it all out. The advertisements are confined to the top and bottom of the page where they are out of the way, and Mr. Murphy makes a really good disposition of his space and has found a new way to utilize the Hennegan covers, though if he keeps on giving the right sort of reading, he will not have to use colored covers to hold attention.

Should Be Dolled.

The Strand, Baltimore, Md., announces its opening in a folder too casual to be at all suggestive of "Baltimore's most elaborate and complete photo playhouse." It is a four pager, six by nine, on coated stock, printed only on the first and third pages. The front page is all type without even a border; plain, neat faces, but nothing ornamental where there should be readable but fairly fancy type, if not a drawn design. Inside, three programs are announced, each division illustrated with a single coarse screen cut intended for newspaper work, but never for coated paper. There is not a line about the house other than that quoted above; no reader telling of its excellencies, its policies or its management. If at no other time, an opening announcement should be as well done as possible to make a good first impression. Better nothing at all than something that is not truly representative. It looks bleak and uninteresting and does not in any way back up whatever else may have been done. In no case should newspaper cuts be printed on coated paper. The stipples are wide apart because in news stock the ink is absorbed by the paper, and if the stipples are too close together the ink will run into a blotch. On good stock the ink dries on the surface and does not run, and the result is painful. No cut is always better than a poor cut. A black blotch or a gray blur are alike unconvincing. Even to those who do not know the reason, there is a suggestion of something lacking, and the hint of mismanagement may extend to the house as a whole.

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising for Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throwaways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. Mr. Sargent tells all he knows and this includes what several hundred successful exhibitors have told him. More than 100 examples. An introduction and then 299 pages of solid text. All practical because it has helped others. It will help you. Handsome clothboard binding. By mail, postpaid. $2.00

Inquiries.

Questions concerning the writing (but NOT the marketing) of photoplays will be replied to without charge if addressed to the Photoplaywright Department and accompanied by a fully addressed stamped envelope. Questions must be typewritten or written with pen and ink.

Questions as to the financial standing of concerns or the probable markets for specific or certain styles of stories cannot be answered.

In no case and under no circumstance will any manuscript or synopsis be handled and if sent will be returned without reply.

A list of addresses of producing companies will be sent if the request is made direct to the publication office, but not where request is made to this department.

Looking Ahead.

NOW and then someone on the outside does write an intelligent and informed article on motion pictures as an offset to the rot that Walter Prichard Eaton and his class write. Such a one is Henry McMahon, writing in the Dramatic Mirror. It is one of the sanest dissections of pictures we have had the pleasure of reading and he speaks for the short length film from a new point of view. He writes in part:

> Directors must strive for a short-hand of the films. Just recall that a good two-reeler has as much action as a complete stage play, a typical five-reeler should contain as much material as a novel, and a ten or twelve-reeler has the epic breadth and range of a three-volume romance. The motion picture is the quickest way ever invented of telling a story. Protracted close-ups, irrelevant digressions, inessential scenes violate its very nature. It is action, action, ACTION, or it is lost. 'Twere much better to tell your story in one reel than in two, in two reels than in five, in five reels than in twelve, that is, unless you have something very epical and grandiose to say.
> It seems to me, therefore, that the artistic future of the motion picture lies in the direction of comparatively short productions, varied from time to time by big films for really big subjects. An hour and a half of different sorts of pictures is plenty in a straight picture house, and an hour or so of the same fare is sandwiched in between vaudeville acts by "mixed" houses with exceedingly profitable results. To do more is to tire your public by eyestrain and mind-strain and ultimately to disgust it.

This is precisely what William Wright, of the Kalem company, and many others now contend, and it is what any sane survey of the situation will show. Tricks are overdone and when used to excess stale. In one recent feature we saw four different parts of a room before we were shown the set as a whole and were able to orient the characters. More than half of the scenes were interrupted by busts or close-ups, not once but often several times until the mind actually tired of following the camera around and the thread of the story was lost.

Briskness and brevity should be the keynote of photoplays and it would be were it possible to get a decent one reel program. But managers of theaters like the five reels because they can concentrate their advertising on a single subject and producers like five reels because it is not as easy to get five good one-reel subjects.

There used to be a time when people dropped into a picture theater to spend a pleasant hour. Now they come in, if possible, on the opening or do not come at all. This is particularly true of the downtown houses. When a few of the feature companies are put out of business and the public tires of the outpupt of the others, there is going to be a quick change to ones and twos, and it is up to the authors to be ready for the jump. There are houses right now that are making money with short subject programs and the number is growing, and this is at a time when some companies have abandoned the short lengths for the fives, largely because they had not been making good ones. It's a funny situation, but don't laugh. Keep your eyes on the ones and be ready when the call comes.

We said that time the original five-reel would replace the stage play very largely. We kept on saying it, and between two suns, almost, there was a rush for original stuff that enriched the few who were ready. Now watch for the jump back and the hundred and fifty and two hundred and three hundred dollar one-part story that is worth the price paid as a story.

Memorize This.

Do not waste your time making a continuity until you are absolutely certain that the plot is worth offering.

Details, Please.

Don't say that you sent a script to "a certain prominent company," and ask how long they should keep it. Tell what company it is. Nothing is said in that full-face notice about doing mind reading. Give the facts, the full facts and nothing but the facts.

Not a Boob.

Some time ago we asked that the then champion boob return his medal as we had found a bigger one. A private in the Seventh Infantry sends in his medal, but he is not the champion boob or he would not know enough to do as he is told. It's a nice medal, too, made from an old kerosene tin, apparently. If the sender will supply his name and Mexican address we'll send him a medal of the second class.

Books.

Here is a letter from the west that adds some titles to the list of books. It speaks for itself:

> I have been writing photoplays for the past three years during my spare time, and have managed to date to sell about forty per cent. of what I write. Thanks to you, through the pages of The Moving Picture World, which I read every week, I have received many valuable suggestions. I feel that I owe to you a certain debt that this brief word of appreciation cannot begin to repay.
>
> Most of my study of the theory of the photoplay was gained through my work while in college in the short story and the drama. But the practical side of the photoplay I have learned from your department. While I have not learned all that there is to know—that's a life's task—still I do know why a story sells and why a story comes back. And I keep plugging away.
> It might interest you to know that I am giving a course in photoplay writing here in the college where I am teaching. And I use for a text, if I have one at all, The Moving Picture World. The theory of construction I get from Freytag, Archer, Price, and others. For it seems to me that the same rules hold true to the construction of the photoplay as in the drama and the short story. At present we are taking up the study of comedy, using as our text Bergson's "Laughter."

In Agreement.

In a recent Photoplay Magazine, Captain Peacocke asks: "What is technique of a photoplay? I'm sugared if I know. All the wiseacres who are writing on the art of photoplay are continually harping on that word, as if it was a mythical something that we grasp from nowhere but which must be vitally essential to ensure success. Bosh! To the devil with technique! We want to be photoplay-writers, not technologists."

We quite agree with the gentleman that he does not know what technique is. But it does not follow that because he does not know what technique is that it is not necessary to those who would build a lasting success. Technique, as we have before explained, is the development of an idea into a play in the very best possible manner. It is not a certain way of marking in leaders or numbering scenes. It is a knowledge of the art of development gained through study and practice, and it is vitally essential to the success of every writer who is not a faker.

Technique is not wholly the form in which a script is written. This is technique, too, but by far the smallest part of technique. The real technique is the ability to take an idea and give it the fullest and most artistic development possible. Some writers with big names seem to be able to do without it, but these are the only ones who cry "To the devil with technique."

Reason It Out.

Do not be guided wholly by what you see on the screen. Reason back of it. The other day an author told of a comedy he had written. It called for a number of Greek costumes and he was told that the studio might not have them. "I thought they had every conceivable sort of costume," he exclaimed in surprise. "I thought anything could be done. Someone told me that studios had thousands of dollars worth of wardrobe." He had been reading—and believing—the press agents. Questions of cost never bothered him, and he spent money like water with an unmetered service.

As a matter of fact few studios have very extensive wardrobes. It is easier to hire than to make most costumes, and so costumes are rented when they are needed, and they are rented only when the value of the story will offset the rental. Do not take all you read as the truth and nothing but the truth. Remember that the press agent has to lie a little when he does not lie a great deal, and allow for this exaggeration.

Technique of the Photoplay

(Second Edition)

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps, (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

From J. Stuart Blackton.

Most certainly everyone connected with the moving picture industry knows of J. Stuart Blackton, president of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, and the producer of some of the finest photoplays the country has seen. Here is what Mr. Blackton thinks of the new Handbook. In reading it, remember that the favorable opinion of a man like Mr. Blackton can only be had by demonstrating to him that you have "the goods."

LOCUST AVENUE BROOKLYN N Y

April 19, 1916.

Mr. F. H. Richardson
Editor Projection Dept.,
Moving Picture World,
17 Madison Ave., N. Y. C.

My dear Mr. Richardson:-

Your new MOTION PICTURE HANDBOOK for managers and operators is the most complete and comprehensive work of its kind that the industry has yet been favored with. It should be in every operator's booth and every theatre manager's office, and not only should be there, but should be READ.

One of the most discouraging things I know is to see a picture production, upon which much thought, energy and money have been expended, projected in a manner that detracts from its beauty, usefulness and merit. Better projection will undoubtedly always follow a careful perusal of your valuable book.

I congratulate you on your work and wish you the success you deserve.

Very truly yours,

B/G.

Question No. 136.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

In building an operating room how would you locate the lens and observation port openings for the masons? Explain fully. Suppose you are projecting a 16-foot picture at 100 feet and the throw is shortened to 80 feet, could you use the same objective and condensers, and if so, would the objective still remain the same distance from the film? Picture would be smaller, of course. How much smaller?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 129.

The Roll of Honor on question 129 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; C. E. Linstruth, Carthage, N. Y.; Thomas J. Maloney, New Bedford, Mass.; Wilson Hays, Barton, Md.; Walter Bryner, Springfield, Ill.; G. O. Yager, Anadarko, Okla.; M. Nosti, Tampa, Fla.; F. F. Bell, Palestine, Texas; Charles S. Stuckey, Edmonton, Canada; O. J. Bean, New Bedford, Mass.; J. E. Simms, New Bedford, Mass.; Arthur H. Cuff, Gravenhurst, Canada; W. B. Allen, Edmonton, Canada; Leonard Pagenhardt, Westernport, Md.; and W. C. Collins, Tiffin, Ohio.

Most of the Roll of Honor replies were very good. I have, however, selected the reply of Brother Maloney as best suited to be printed.

Reply to Question No. 129.

By Thomas J. Maloney, New Bedford, Mass.

The Question:

How many sprocket holes are there to each ¾ inch of film? Ought all sprocket holes in all films to be the same shape and size? What shape do you think best, and why do you think it best? What thickness of film do you find to run best on your machines? What is the effect of thin film stock?

The Answer:

Question 129 is properly divided into five queries. Query No. 1. How many sprocket holes are there in ¾ inch of film? Answer. There are 8; four holes on each side. To get this right count the number of sprocket holes in one foot of film, and you will find there are 64 to a side, or 128 altogether. There are sixteen ¾ inches in a foot, and 16 into 128 goes 8 times. Query No. 2. Should all sprocket holes be the same size and shape? Answer: Yes, if the teeth of the sprocket they are to run on are all of the same dimension, and have the same spacing. Query No. 3. What shape do you think is best, and why? Answer: In my opinion the oval shaped hole is best. It does not have a tendency to cling to the sprocket teeth which we find in a film having oblong or square holes. The oval shaped hole would have a tendency to release itself from the sprocket teeth while in motion and not cause so much wear on the sprocket teeth and sprocket holes; also it does not cause buckling and shaking of the picture on the screen. Query 4. What thickness of film do you find runs best in the machine? Answer: Film which has a thickness of from 6½ to 6¾ one thousandths of an inch. This gives the steadiest picture under actual test. Query No. 5. What is the effect of thin film stock? Answer: There are several effects. According to my own observation the sprocket holes crack and split, and there is a decided tendency of thin film to not lie flat over the aperture, which causes an in and out of focus on the screen.

[Also I would add to Brother Maloney's answer to Query 5 that thin film stock is more likely to stretch in the perforator, and thus produce unevenness in perforations, with consequent movement of the picture on the screen. As to his comments on Query 3, they are decidedly interesting, but he neglected to say that with the oval hole there are no corners, hence a decidedly less tendency of the sprocket hole to split. I intend to lay his comment on the oval sprocket hole before the Bureau of Standards of the Motion Picture Board of Trade at our first meeting.—Ed.]

Can't Be Did.

E. Patterson, Tama, Iowa, answers Question 132, and says:

> Although this is my first letter to the department, I have been a reader for some time, and find it to be a great help in my work. Have procured a copy of the new Handbook, which certainly contains some great dope, particularly on the optical and electrical end of things. There is one question I would like to ask, viz.: Is there any possible way by which two arcs can be run from one Fort Wayne 60 cycle, 110 volt compensarc at one time, so as to dissolve one reel into the next and obtain a perfect change? The way we have it now is as per sketch, with the two arcs connected in series.

That is the only way we can do it, Brother Patterson, but the resistance of the additional arc tends to decrease the amperage to a considerable extent, with, of course, corresponding effect on the screen. The better plan is to get another compensarc—no, I'll renig on that statement and say the better plan is to get a current rectifying device, and use D. C. at the arc.

A Remarkable Projection Plant.

While in the city of Dayton, through the courtesy of Brother E. Schwab of the Operators' Union, plus the kindness of the National Cash Register Company's operators, Messrs. F. D. Whyte and H. S. Gerdes, I was permitted to examine a very remarkable projection plant at the works of the National Cash Register Company.

The main hall, which seats approximately 1,200, is a very excellently arranged auditorium and a beautiful room as well. The installation is remarkable in more ways than one. First, there are three separate operating rooms, each fully equipped with machines, and all ready for business, in addition to which there are, in the main projection room, three stereopticon-balopticon installations.

The main auditorium can, upon occasion, merely by touching a button, be divided into two separate good sized auditoriums. The aforesaid button operates an electric motor, which in turn lowers a huge fireproof curtain, dividing the room approximately in its center, front and back. At the rear of the main auditorium is a projection room, equipped with three Simplex projecting machines and a double dissolving stereopticon, meaning by this exactly what I say—two complete dissolving stereopticons joined together, one above the other, with the shutter of all four lenses interconnected.

At the front of the hall, about seven feet above the floor of the stage, are two huge pieces of plate glass, on the rear or projection side of which is pasted plain white oiled paper, the projection being from the rear, except when the aforementioned main auditorium room is used, in which event two screens are lowered automatically, by motors, merely by touching a push button. This arrangement is by reason of the fact that the glass screens are only 14 feet square, whereas it sometimes becomes desirable to project a larger picture and these cloth curtains allow of a twenty-foot picture being displayed to the audience.

The distance of projection in the main auditorium is 145 feet. The lens openings of the objectives used in the main auditorium machines are approximately 2¼ inches in diameter.

At the rear of the main auditorium is what is called a projection room, the entire walls of which are painted a dead black, without any gloss. Near the paper-covered glass screens are two huge Bausch & Lomb reflectoscopes, having objective lenses with a five-inch opening. These reflectoscopes project on the rear of the glass screens, and their purpose is to allow of the placing of a piece of machinery within and the manipulation of its parts by the hand of the operator, the process being projected to the screen; or you can put in a blackboard and write anything you choose upon it, which will be projected to the screen during the process of writing. These screens, by the way, sit side by side, with a frame work division about 6 inches wide.

At either side of the projection room are two gigantic balopticons, one of which is used for microscopic and polariscopic projection, and the other for the projection of Lumiere plates.

At the rear of the projection room are two operating rooms of goodly dimensions, each equipped with Simplex projectors. One of them contains two dissolving steropticons, one mounted above the other, with their shutters interconnected, the idea being to project a slide to each one of the screens simultaneously.

The two operating rooms mentioned are located as follows: First, there is one room set up about 6 feet from the floor, underneath which is the rheostat cellar—some heat, my boy, some heat! The editor stuck his head in, promptly apologized and backed out. He thought for a moment he had died and had gone home. Above the back of this room is a second operating room, which contains a Simplex projector equipped for Kinemacolor.

But the real curiosity of the whole works consists of four automatic stereopticon machines, each containing 125 slides, arranged in a circle. The darned thing looks more like a knitting machine than anything I can think of, but it certainly delivers the goods. You set the automatically fed 90 degree arc lamps going, and then lean back comfortably with a dingus in your hand which you punch with your thumb, and every time you punch—bing! a new slide appears on the screen, or rather two slides appear simultaneously, one on either screen. It is a real comfortable job running that thing. I got so excited that I nearly wore the machine out punching the button. This arrangement is used to accompany a "canned" lecture—I say "canned," because it must be all arranged beforehand to fit the slides.

It would be a long story to describe the method by which the employes are educated through the medium of those lectures and slides, but it certainly is an efficient way of doing it. Briefly, it is something like this: By two slides projected simultaneously, one to either screen, Projection Room, Showing Two Operating Rooms. Observe That the Whole Room Is Dead Black.

a comparison is made of bad working conditions and good working conditions. Team work and the right and wrong way of doing things, before and after effects, good organization, etc., etc., are graphically illustrated

The National Cash Register Company has, I am told, approximately 70,000 stereopticon slides, dealing with every imaginable phase of their business, plus 250,000 feet of moving picture films, the same being largely along educational, industrial and scientific lines.

The plant is a truly remarkable one. I could go on for pages, giving interesting descriptive matter concerning the installation.

The projection is in charge of F. D. Whyte and H. S. Gerdes, operators, who are handling, everything considered, probably the most complicated projection plant in the United States, and—here's a joke on the boys—when they went to New York to show the National Cash Register Company pictures our distinguished Board of Examiners refused them licenses. Well, the boys down at the Examiners' Board are friends of mine all right, but I am inclined to believe that in this particular instance that the laugh is on them.

They also have, at the National Cash Register plant, a developing room for making their own motion picture film. It was my privilege to examine the apparatus in this room; also to visit the Slide Department, where the 70,000 slides, before mentioned, are made and kept in racks. These racks hold approximately 400 slides each, and are marked according to the subjects in the rack. They are made to pull out, so that you may examine 400 at a time, and when through push them back into the wall out of the way. They have their own color artists—four in number—working all the time making new slides on different subjects.

Here Is the Real Thing (Nearly).

Ralph W. Martin, Los Angeles, California, contributes the following interesting drawing and description. It looks mighty nice in theory. I am wondering how it would work out in practice. It seems to me that here is something that might be well worth a practical test. That is about as much as I would care to say on this particular proposition at this particular time. There is no manner of doubt but that there is large room for improvement in the optical system of the projection machine. With the present crude apparatus there is altogether too much spherical aberration causes unevenness of illumination, and chromatic aberration, which makes for impurity of light. One objection I can see to this scheme would be two additional lens surfaces, which would, of course, mean additional loss through reflection. One thing I do not quite understand, however, and that is, where Brother Martin says: "Placing the aperture lens directly behind the film picture at the aperture." Presumably he means on the lamphouse side, as in the drawing. But that particular term at that particular point might be applied either way. Incidentally, it also seems to me that this scheme would have to bring about decidedly better results in order to justify itself, because it would set up very decidedly added complications in the lens system. But anyhow the thing is interesting, and worthy of study; therefore it is passed along to our readers for consideration. As to the concentration of the light endangering the objective by reason of heat, I think there is no danger at all of that. It may be entirely disregarded.

This article is correllative to several others on the same subject matter that have been sent in by the author.

The purpose of this article is to give practical instructions by the shortest cut possible, and in such a manner as will enable anyone to try out this scheme under standard operating conditions. Theory is disregarded. It is more important, at this juncture, to get the idea established on a practical basis. Theory will be attended to later.

In the figure, three 7½-inch condensers are used, as shown. This arrangement is only a temporary makeshift. A meniscus bi-convex set of equivalent focal length would be better, but the 7½-inch plano-convex lenses will do well enough for present experiments. The crater is placed 3 inches from the rear condenser, which will focus it about 9 inches in front of the bi-convex lens, with an enlargement of about twice the original crater diameter. With the arc lit and properly adjusted, the lamphouse (not the lamp) should be moved until the image of the crater comes to a position behind the aperture, which will give a proper size spot, and produce an even illumination on the screen. There may be various ways of accomplishing this end, but probably it would be best to first observe the spot at the aperture, and check up by observing the screen later on. The objective should now be accurately back focussed at the aperture.

The next step is to experiment with different focal length aperture lenses, of which it is desirable to have a good supply on hand, five of the most probable kind being shown in the drawing. The figures represent the diameters of their respective spherical surfaces.

The experimenter must be a good thinker to devise some practical method of supporting the aperture lens directly behind the film picture at the aperture. The nearer the lens is to the film, the clearer (whiter) the light will be at the aperture and screen. It would not do to place the lens even as far as one inch behind the film. Get it as near to the aperture as is practicable.

Now, with the aperture lens in proper position, operate the machine and observe: (1) The quality of the definition of the picture on the screen; and (2) the width of the narrowest part of the beam in front of the objective. Be sure to place the shutter at the narrowest section of the beam before completing the above observations.

If the definition on the screen is poor or impracticable of sharp focus, it is probably due to the aperture lens being of too short focal length. Try another aperture lens of longer focal length and proceed as before. If the definition on the screen is now satisfactory, and the beam quite narrow at the shutter, conditions can be called fair; but further trials should be made with other aperture lenses, with the purpose of getting the beam as narrow as possible and still have good definition.

In the drawing the shape of the beam from the aperture forward is only intended to give an approximate idea of what probably will take place. It is really of no concern at present what the shape of the beam will be. Only the results above noted need be observed.

There is also another alternative which may be resorted to with advantage. The crater may be moved a little closer to the rear condenser and its image will consequently be enlarged. If the image is thus enlarged to the full standard spot, or about 1½ inches diameter, the image can be placed coincident with the aperture lens, and this will considerably alter the effect produced by the aperture lens on the beam forward from the aperture.

However, this latter expedient will require considerable experiment to determine its true value. It is neverthless recommended for trial, as it may have considerable to do with the evenness of illumination at the aperture; also it gives a wider range to the operation of the aperture lens.

It should also be mentioned, as a warning, that there may possibly be some danger to the objective by the extra heat caused by concentrating the beam.

Very Bad.

All too often when I am watching a perfectly projected picture, with everything running along smoothly, and I am deeply interested in the story of the film, my mind is suddenly jarred back to the realization of the fact that I am only looking at a shadow, by a succession of white flashes on the screen.

I have just received from an operator twelve clippings from the six-reel Fox feature, "The Bondsman." None of these are less than six, and several are seven pictures in length, and each one of these six or seven pictures is literally chopped all to pieces by punch marks, made either by the manufacturer or the exchange.

The exchange-man kicks, and kicks rightly too, at the punch marks the operator puts in a film, but how about the punch marks he himself jabs into a picture—in this case twelve of them, or a total of about seven feet of film in one subject. I am told this is done in order to identify the film. Well, if that is the fact it does not excuse the practice, because it isn't worth three cents as a means of identification, because, as is proved in this case, the mark can easily be cut out. But be that as it may, neither the exchange-man or producer has the moral right to thus injure the property which is to be rented to the exhibitor as a perfect piece of goods, or at least perfect while it is new. This operator promptly cut all these marks out, and he has my hearty approval in so doing, though I suppose the exchange would put up a kick about it. Well, my advice to operators is to amputate these marks, and if you all do that the pernicious practice will be stopped, and stopped in a hurry too. They can get after one operator for doing it, but they could not do very much if you all did it, and you would thus be lending your assistance in stopping a practice which is pernicious and wrong, from no matter what point of view it is looked at.

Some Book.

W. B. Allen, Edmontana, Canada, Says:

> The third edition of the Handbook is certainly a wonder. In my opinion every operator in the United States and Canada ought to purchase a copy immediately. Considering the book itself, the price is not worth mentioning, and no operators can, I think, make better use of four dollars.

Temperature and Fuses.

John McGrath, New York City, writes:

> I have observed an apparent difference in the action of fuses when located in the operating room and when located in a basement. Our projection circuit is fused both in the basement and in the operating room. I find that 50 amperes is ample in the basement, but it requires 60 in the operating room. Why is this?

It is simply a matter of temperature, Brother McGrath. Down in the basement it probably is cool, whereas near the ceiling in the operating room it is pretty warm. You will find that, if you were fusing closely, there probably will be a difference in the summer and winter as applied to the operating room. Fuses near the ceiling of an operating room will carry less current than in a cool basement. Very simple, is it not, when you come to look at it in the light of common sense.

A Contemptible Thing.

From Texas comes the following:

> Enclosed find my check for $4.00 in payment for one of the new "Bibles." I can certainly sympathize with Brother Bently of Nacogdoches with regard to the condition the films reach him. I have heard several times of the fellow he gets his films from. However, I guess I had better shut up, as he now ships me one of my reels, and if he is like another chap on this Texas circuit and he finds out anybody complains, the one complaining will certainly work his film patcher overtime. I did complain about him once, and after that the films came in worse condition than before, and now, after a year or more has passed, he is trying to get me in bad, as I am now shipping to him.

I think a little good, plain language is called for in a case of this kind. Where an operator who is handling films on circuit sends them away in bad condition, and the man who receives them complains, the receiver is doing exactly what he has a perfect right to do and OUGHT to do. Moreover, if he did not complain he would be working an injustice on the exchange, and on his own manager, and if the fellow complained of undertakes to "get even" by deliberately sending films in bad condition he proves himself, in my humble opinion, to be a contemptible coward not worthy to be classed with decent operators. To put the thing in plain language, he did that which he knew was wrong. He knew that sending the films away in bad condition would injure a fellow-operator, a theater manager and his audiences, all of whom were utterly helpless and at his mercy in this respect, and then because they refused to calmly accept the result of his infernal laziness, ignorance, or carelessness, he, knowing the other man was helpless, undertook to get even in a dirty kind of way.

Yes, I know this is pretty plain talk, but there is altogether too much of this thing going on, and it is time—high time—the thing were stopped. If the Texas operator will send the name of the man in this instance, I will take upon myself the duty of seeing that he either immediately mends his ways, is separated from the payroll of the moving picture industry, or is shown up in print good and plenty. I don't like to write this way, but this sort of thing is a particularly nasty piece of business, and, as I said before, this particular man is not the only offender in this particular respect. It is bad enough to send films back to the exchange in poor condition, but it is doubly reprehensible to send them away in bad condition when they are on circuit, and therefore must be received by another operator who possibly will not have time or opportunity to inspect and repair them before they are run.

Lens Breakage.

T. J. Trabue, Biloxi, Miss., says:

> My rear condenser lens is continually breaking. I have an objective lens with a 1 7-16 inch opening, working at 2⅞ inches back focus. The distance from carbon to flat surface of condenser is 3.5 inches. Machine is a Power's Six.

I take it, Brother Trabue, that you are using a rather high amperage. Your arc is the correct distance from the lens, but you should immediately procure either an Elbert or Preddy holder, which may be had from the Picture Theater Equipment Company, 140 Broadway, New York City, by remitting $4.50. This holder will eliminate the trouble, so far as condenser breakage be concerned. As to your lenses, I would suggest that you use two 7½-inch condensers, placed as close together as you can get them without touching, with the lamphouse pulled back as far as you can get it—about 22 inches from the film to the apex of the front condenser. With your present distance, 13 inches, you need two 6½-inch condensers, and an objective 1 15-16 inches in diameter in order to avoid light loss. If, however, you find that the two 7½'s locate your arc too far from the lens, then you might use a 6½ and a 7½ with 19 inches between the film and the apex of the front condensing lens. In fact, I don't know but this might be the better combination for you. Try both and see, is my advice. Keep the arc at its present distance from the lens.

Patents.

D. O. Seaman, 703 West 7th street, Des Moines, Iowa, writes:

> This being the first time you have knowledge of my existence, I will perform the introduction: D. O. Seaman, operator Unique theater, Des Mines, Ia.
> Attached hereto find patent specifications and drawings for my invention on fireproofing the motion picture machine. The downward extension on the lower take-up roller bracket arm is an added improvement. When the film breaks, arm 32 comes in contact with the downward extension on the take-up roller bracket, and when the same is forced down to re-thread the film sets the fireproofing and motor control, so that the operator has no extra parts to handle. I have a Powers 6A equipped with the parts, and you would be surprised to see the machine in operation. Also I have a tension take-up regulator which I will send you a little later. I can put the fireproofing and motor control on any standard machine for $40.

The patent, so far as I can tell from the description, is one of a considerable number evolved by different patentees during the past two years designed to do practically the same thing, viz.: cut the film above and below, stop the motor, and drop the fire shutter. It would take considerable space to illustrate and describe this device intelligently, and it is not necessary to do it. The editor of this department only passes an opinion upon such devices as he has himself tested in operation, or has had placed in the hands of competent disinterested operators for test. That is a rule which applies to everything.

I expect to be in Des Moines some time next winter and very likely will see Brother Seaman's device. However, I want to warn him of this: there have already been at least half a dozen similar devices placed on the market, or rather devices designed to accomplish the same thing, and not one of them has ever made any money for its inventors. You will find one of them described on page 257 of April 8th issue. I personally examined this particular device, which is excellent, and which has plenty of capital behind it. I told its sponsors at that time that, whereas the device worked perfectly, and was in every way excellent, still I doubted its ever reaching the financial-success stage. Still another of these particular devices has its home in Chicago. It has been on the market for at least three years, and never has made a cent. I am not writing this to discourage Brother Seaman, but to point out to him the fact that before going into a thing of this kind inventors would do well to correspond with the projection department, and ascertain what has already been done along the lines they propose to work on. It is awfully discouraging to work hard, perfect a device and spend money for a patent, only to learn there are half a dozen others already in the field. Brother Seaman can, of course, proceed if he wishes to, but, regardless of the merit of his invention, I am going to tell him right now that the chances are a hundred to one that he simply will be throwing good money after bad. I presume he will be my mortal enemy from now on, but facts are facts, and the greatest kindness I can do him is to save him from spending more money on something which, however meritorious, will bring no satisfactory financial return.

Projection Trouble.

R. B. Hilts, Beaver Falls, New York, says:

> Am running a moving picture show and have trouble with my projection. Have a Powers 5 and a 40 foot throw. Get a good light, but it is very much blurred. This is more noticeable on one side than on the other. If I move my lamphouse to one side a little it eliminates the blur, but makes the other side darker. It does not blur in the center at all, but only on the right hand side of the screen. What is wrong?

Now, Brother Hilts, don't turn your nose up when I advise you to purchase one of the new Handbooks from the Chalmers Publishing Company, price $4. It is a 700 page book, and one that you, and every other operator and exhebitor, needs, and needs badly. On page 112 you will find directions for lining the optical system of the projector. I would advise you to do that first. Then, turning to page 108, after reading "Cleaning Lenses" carefully, get busy. The way you put the matter the thing is rather puzzling, but it seems to me if you have described it carrectly the trouble must be at least partly due to your lens system being out of line. It is also possible that your lamphouse comes over a little too far. Shove the lamphouse back until the blur disappears, and then move the lamp until the spot centers on the aperture. If the explanation is as simple as all this, however, it does seem you would have discovered the trouble yourself. It is also possible, under your description, that a bit of oil or a finger mark on your lens is so situated that when you shove the lamphouse it alters the direction of the light ray just enough to miss it, thus causing the focus to darken one side of the picture by reason of light interference. The latter is, however, hardly within the range of possibility, I think.

Encyclopedia Britannica of Projection.

Brother I. G. Sherman, chief operator Bishop's Theater, Hoboken, New Jersey, who is also president of Hudson County Local Union No. 384, I. A., has purchased a Handbook. Here is what he has to say about it.

> Dear Mr. Richardson:
> Allow me to voice my sincere appreciation of your last and greatest triumph—the third edition of the "Handbook." I am the proud possessor of a copy of that work, and, if my opinion is worth anything, here it is: I consider it as being the Encyclopedia Britannica of projection. You have indeed builded a monument which will last long after you have passed away, for I do not believe it is possible to improve on the third edition. There is but one criticism I could make, and that is it is too bad you did not have it bound in flexible leather and charge an even "Five Spot" for it. I don't recommend its purchase to the operator (?) who is satisfied to remain in ignorance, but those who have ambition will remember that "Knowledge Is Power," and they certainly can obtain knowledge of projection by the investment of only four dollars. I repeat it is SOME book.

This letter was entirely unsolicited. It comes from the president of a large and very progressive local union. I would commend it to the attention of operators, because it is an entirely unbiased opinion from a man whose opinion is entitled to consideration. One operator asked in a letter recently: "How is the new Handbook going?" It's going all right, all right, and going big. But it is the ambition of the editor to have a copy in the hands of every operator in the United States and Canada. Orders have already been received from England, Australia, New Zealand and other foreign countries, and, judging by the way they are coming in from the United States and Canada, my before mentioned ambition seems likely to be very nearly realized.

Operators Attention.

Every moving picture machine operator in Greater New York and vicinity who can possibly do so should by all means be present in the Concert Hall at Madison Square Garden, at 2.30 P. M., "Projection Day," Wednesday, May 10th, to hear the editor's address on practical projection. This is an opportunity you will not soon again have to hear a carefully prepared illustrated lecture on the mistakes which are made in the projection of pictures.

The editor of this department has secured official recognition from the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America in the form of Projection Day. It is now up to you to show the powers that be that you are interested in this sort of thing. I ask the presence of every operator in New York City who is not working.

Remember the hour, 2.30 P. M., and time, Projection Day, Wednesday, May 10th.

Richardson's

Motion Picture Handbook for Managers and Operators

Over 700 pages and over 300 illustrations help to make a book that will be a lasting monument to its author's knowledge, ability and diligence. No such work on Projection has ever before been attempted nor is it likely to be for many years to come. Price is $4.00 per copy, postpaid.

Toning Motion Picture Films (Continued).

The tank containing the sulphiding bath should be enclosed in an outer tank through which hot or cold may be circulated in order to control the temperature. The racks or drums may be of wood, but if metal pegs are employed on the former, they should be coated with acid-resisting paint such as asphalt, since the presence of any metallic surface in the toning baths will cause contamination of the same and effect a precipitation of sludge. The frames should not be interchanged but kept separate either for toning or tinting in order to prevent contamination of one bath with frames previously employed in another. This also applies to the small drum system. For instance, a pink tint would be ruined by using a rack which has previously been immersed in a deep blue dyebath, unless the particular rack had been very thoroughly washed. In the case of delicate tinting, however, no harm is done providing the racks have been previously coated with the following waterproof varnish:

	Avoirdupois.
Hard Paraffin	1 lb. 5 ozs.
Syrian asphalt	1 lb. 5 ozs.
Benzol	4 gals.
Carbon tetrachloride	3 gals.

Before treatment it is preferable to immerse the racks in a 1% solution of hydrochloric acid for two or three minutes, and wash for fifteen minutes, after which thorough drying is necessary. The well-dried racks are then dipped in the above solution, the excess liquid drained off, when the varnish dries almost immediately.

The varnishing should be repeated at intervals.

Developers, toning solutions and dyes should be mixed in crocks of glazed earthenware, using warm water where possible and ensuring thorough solution by stirring with a wooden paddle, which should be thoroughly washed after each operation. Having thus dissolved the chemicals in as small a quantity of hot water as possible, the solution should be cooled to such an extent that on dilution the final solution will be at approximately the correct temperature.

The chemicals employed should be pure and in cases where a good water supply is not available, only distilled water should be employed.

Mutual Weekly on the Market for Sport Negatives.

Mr. Pell Mitchell, editor of the Mutual Weekly, Flushing, New York, sends the following notice which should be of interest to many free-lance men:

> We are preparing to release a one-reel "Novelty" picture each week under the general head of "Out-door Life." This picture will contain subjects of interest to lovers of the great outdoors, such as hunting, fishing and canoe trips; wild animal and bird life; fish and insect life; reptiles, etc., etc. In fact, anything which is strange, new, novel and of unusual character.
>
> We are going to pay from 40 to 60 cents per foot for negative of such subjects. The price will depend a great deal on the subject and the time and difficulty expended in securing it. The photography MUST BE first class. We are not going to buy shaky-scratched-fogged out-of-focus negative. We want A No. 1 stuff, and are just as anxious to BUY it as you are to SELL it. If you can turn out the right stuff we can do business—if you cannot do this, please don't waste our time and your perfectly good raw stock.
>
> Write us, sending a list of the subjects you can secure in your vicinity; also state if the frame line on your camera is adjustable. We want this negative, if possible, to frame (Gaumont) on the hole. Let us hear from you at once, and don't forget to mention your address on everything you write or send to us.

Cinema Camera Club Moves to Larger Quarters.

The Cinema Camera Club, the organization of motion picture camera men, will move from the present location in the White Rats' Club House on May 1st, to larger and more accessible rooms in the Times Building, having arranged to occupy suite 1006 and 1007 on the tenth floor.

Here will be housed the club's meeting rooms, and business office in charge of the corresponding secretary. By making this move to a centrally-located office building, the Cinema Camera Club members will be available for producing companies and directors who desire to procure camera men. The secretary will be in touch with all disengaged cameramen, and will be able to supply photographers on short notice.

Shortage of Cinematograph Cameras.

Due in a very great measure to the present European upheaval is the marked shortage of Motion Picture Cameras. Not only are the imported makes practically off the market, but the cameras manufactured in this country are equally hard to obtain.

The well known Pathe cameras are coming in very small shipments to this country, and with almost every shipment comes an advance in the price. The latest quotation is that the price of the studio model Pathe is $525 and for the portable model is $550. Even at these prices the cameras are very hard to obtain, the shipments are irregular and uncertain.

DeBrie cameras, favorably known through the trade, are equally scarce, the understanding is that the price at the DeBrie factory in France have turned their energies toward the manufacture of equipment for the French Army. At any rate the only DeBrie cameras that are being imported are those which the DeBrie Company finish up practically to order, and consequently the importation of these goods amounts to a shipment of a very small number, about every two months.

Of the American made cameras the Universal and the Bell and Howell makes are probably the most widely known. Both these companies are selling in excess of their output, which, unfortunately, is greatly enhanced by the scarcity of materials and the inability to secure competent workmen.

The special machinery that is required in the manufacture of cameras is exceedingly hard to obtain, one large manufacturer having informed the writer that an order for lathes and other implements were nearly a year late in delivery. Materials also are at a premium, and it is almost impossible to obtain any quantity of brass, bronze or aluminum.

The workmanship on a cine camera requires the services or not only a high grade mechanic but one who is trained especially in the work. The results must be so absolutely accurate that only mechanics accustomed to the finest kind of work are suitable for camera manufacture, and these, like the material, are hard to get.

There is no immediate relief in sight, the prospects, however, are that within six months or a year, the American made camera will be produced in sufficient quantities and will gradually supersede those of foreign manufacture.

Another Member for the Correspondence Club.

From New Orleans comes the advice that Mr. H. G. Uyama would like to correspond with brothers in the craft who wish to take up matters of motion picture photography through the mails. His address is 1347 Moss street, New Orleans, La.

Later.

The following wish to add their names to the club:
F. J. Pasko, 1713 Lorimer street, Denver.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by Clarence E. Sinn and S. M. Berg

Inquiries.

QUESTIONS concerning any phase of the work of the orchestral leader in a photoplay theater may be addressed to the Moving Picture World and the answers of Mr. Berg will appear in a Question and Answer Department, which will be a regular feature of our Music Page.

Musical Setting for "The Snowbird." Released May 1 by the Metro Pictures Corporation.

Suggestions prepared by S. M. Berg.
By special arrangements with G. Schirmer, Inc., Music Publishers, New York.

THIS "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is not designed to solve every possible musical requirement of the film, but is intended as a partial solution of the problem—what to play for the picture. It has proven to be of great assistance to the leader, not only by relieving to a degree the tedium of rehearsals, but by assisting materially in overcoming those conditions encountered when the film is not available until the hour of performance.

Musical Suggestion Cue Sheets can be obtained (free of charge) by managers from their local exchange in advance of the date of release, and a sufficient number should be secured to provide one for each member of the orchestra. This will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film drama he is to portray with his orchestra.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will help the leader to anticipate the various cues which may consist of the printed sub-title (marked T) or a described action (marked D). For instance: 41½ T "At dawn" is a sub-title and is printed reading matter on the screen. But 60½ D "When Jean sees Loris's hair" is a descriptive of action.

John Wheeler, financially involved, sells to Bruce Mitchell, an admirer of his daughter Loris, his half interest in some Canadian timber lands. Later learning that the deed to the property has been destroyed by fire, Mitchell threatens criminal proceedings unless Loris consents to marry him. Loris secretly goes to the Northland to seek Jean Corteau, who has a duplicate of the deed, but who refuses to give it up. He also refuses to deal with women, so she dresses in boy's clothing and gains shelter in his hut. Believing him a boy he beats her for disobedience, but when her hair falls down from under her cap he begs for forgiveness. Loris realizes that he is a rough diamond though primitive in many ways. After a series of incidents Jean gives her the deed and she begins to realize his real worth. Meanwhile Mitchell and Wheeler have come North. Mitchell seeking Loris at Jean's shack, makes an insulting remark and a fight ensues. The picture closes with the return to the North of Jean and Loris, who are now happily married.

Almost the whole action of this picture is in snowbound Canada with many scenes of dogs and dog sleighs. It would be effective to imitate barking of dogs and also use sleighbells.

MYERS COMPLETES FIRST "VIM'S."

Harry C. Myers and Rosemary Theby have completed the first two "refined" comedies they engaged to produce when they signed a two-year contract with Vim a fortnight ago, and in a message to Mark Dintenfass, who is in New York, Mr. Myers telegraphed this week: "Exceed all expectations. Number three well under way. Want best scenarios obtainable for high-class comedies."

In answer to inquiries from exhibitors who are anxious for further details, Mr. Dintenfass has issued the following statement: "The Vim comedies featuring Rosemary Theby and Harry C. Myers will be scheduled for release as soon as is consistent with the high quality of laboratory work we have determined to have. Mr. Burstein, in personal charge of the Vim studio direction, wires me that in his opinion the two comedies already completed will meet the most exacting demands of exhibitors who are in the market for single-reel comedies of the finest quality. Notwithstanding the quality of the productions and the great popularity of the stars, these comedies will be released to the trade at a figure which will render them as popular with the exhibitors as they will be with the public."

"Peg o' The Ring" on Schedule Time

Francis Ford and Grace Cunard Come East to Fix Matters and Have Returned to Work at Universal City.

"CONTRARY to all previous announcements except the first one, Miss Cunard and I will appear in every episode of 'Peg o' the Ring' as was announced in the first place." It was Francis Ford who spoke. Mr. Ford and Grace Cunard had made a cross-country spin to reach New York, and after seeing Mr. Laemmle, and reaching a decision with him on the question of the serial, both took a little holiday trip to Portland, Me., where Mr. Ford lives, to visit his people. They had reached New York on their return trip, and in spite of this fact they were both apparently very fit, and looking forward without unusual trepidation to another flying trip back to California.

Francis Ford.

"It is all wrong," said Mr. Ford, who was spokesman for the pair most of the time, "about our leaving the serial. We have not left at all, and we will be able to get it out on time, as we had planned. Miss Cunard has the entire story well in hand, the continuities and scenes for the entire story mapped out, and the carpenters are working on the set, which we will use as soon as we get back. We are working on No. 6 and hope to finish that by the end of next week. We take the Twentieth Century tomorrow, Saturday, April 29, and will be back home by the next Friday through being able to make a very close connection in Chicago.

"We have thought all along and still think, that 'Peg o' the Ring' will be the biggest success which we have ever scored and we are only sorry that there has been any delay in the plans. We are going back on perfectly satisfactory terms for everyone concerned, Mr. Laemmle and myself, the best proof of which is that Mr. Laemmle will accompany us as far as Chicago on our return tomorrow. He is not going out to the Coast, but on the train we will probably perfect a plan for our future after the serial is over. When that time comes we will be glad to make a statement in regard to it. All I can say now is that we are going to finish this serial, and finish it on time, and that we intend to make it the best and biggest drawing card which has ever borne the name of Francis Ford and Grace Cunard. Oh, I might say also that neither Miss Ruth Stonehouse nor Eddie Polo will be in the serial."

Grace Cunard.

MISTAKE IN GEOGRAPHY.

In last week's issue of the Moving Picture World we located the enterprising town of Las Vegas in Texas. The item should have placed it in New Mexico, where it belongs and is. Going to have a cowboys' reunion there.

Jack London Loses

Circuit Court of Appeals Reverses Decision of Lower Court in Case Against Biograph.

IN AN opinion written by Judge E. Henri Lacombe, recently retired from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, a sharp line is drawn on the rights of authors of literary productions in the questions which arise under alleged infringement of copyright.

Judge Lacombe left the bench late in February, but had presided in the hearing of the appeal of the Biograph Company against Jack London, hence wrote the opinion. London sued in equity some months ago, charging that the Biograph Company had violated the copyright of his short story, "Just Meat," in a photoplay called "Love of Gold." The trial court decided London had made out a case and granted a permanent injunction to restrain the production of the Biograph play and also awarded London $250 damages.

There was never any doubt concerning the similarity of the plots of the two productions. Both were underworld plots, dealing in burglary, larceny, poison mystery, etc. The fundamental idea seemed in many, if not all particulars, identical. London, as complainant, alleged that the Biograph company had stolen his plot bodily, but aside from affidavits usually in equity suits did not raise the issue of wherein specifically the two were so identical. The defendant company contented itself with a denial and did not put the complainant upon his proof, relying on the old rule that similarity of fundamental idea is not alone sufficient upon which to base a suit for violation of copyright.

In his opinion Judge Lacombe says bluntly that the plot used by both contestants is centuries old. In order to maintain his action he holds London was required to show specifically just wherein the Biograph play had made use of his materials, scenes, incidents and other matter which can be covered by copyright. He failed to do this, and the defending company merely denied the bill and all of its specifications, never raising the issue of what it had, if anything, taken from the author's goods. He concludes by reversing the judgment of the court below. Judges Coxe and Ward concurred.

Literary men generally know an idea is common property, It has been held in numerous cases that violations of copyrights, to be punishable, must be shown affirmatively. Dozens of actions are now pending in which this doctrine has been held to apply. But the duty of one or both parties to raise the specific issue has not been set forth so clearly until this case was decided.

HIS FIRST PRESS NOTICE.

Lionel Thompson has signed a contract with the Columbia Pictures Corporation, to appear exclusively in Metro wonderplays. His contract stipulates that he must play roles ranging from an infant to old Father Time during the course of his engagement. Lionel is the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. David Thompson, and arrived at their country home in New Rochelle Sunday, April 23. His father is an assistant director at the Columbia-Metro studios, and he named the boy after Lionel Barrymore, who has worked under his direction in several Metro productions, notably, "A Yellow Streak." Mr. Barrymore presented his namesake with a big scrap book among other things. This is Lionel Jr.'s first press notice.

ELEANOR WOODRUFF ON TOUR.

Coincident with the release of the Pathe picture, "Big Jim Garrity," in which she played opposite Robert Edeson, Eleanor Woodruff has begun a series of personal appearances in a number of houses in which the picture is booked. Her first appearance was at the Bohemian theater, New York, and, although the time for advertising was short, the house was crowded for both night performances. Manager Schwager was so pleased with the showing that he is considering a return booking. A number of other bookings have been arranged for Miss Woodruff in several towns within a radius of a hundred miles of New York City.

SPEED CONTROLLER FOR NORTHERN NEW JERSEY.

Arrangements have been made by the Speed Controller Company with the New Jersey Motion Picture Supply Company of Newark, N. J., to handle the Speedco Arc Controller for Northern New Jersey. The company has offices in the Strand theater building on Market street and will act as sole agents for the controller.

Universal Program

Drama, Comedy and Educational Releases Constitute an Attractive Offering for the Week of May 8th.

THE Universal Program for the week of May 8 steps off with Mary Fuller in the five reel Red Feather feature, "A Huntress of Man," in which Miss Fuller is supported by Joe W. Girard and Sidney Bracey. On the same day Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Betty Compson stage a surprisingly snappy little Nestor comedy, "Potts Bungles Again."

On May 9 Herbert Rawlinson heads the bill in "The Mark of a Gentleman," a two-reel light Gold Seal drama, in which he plays vis a vis with Agnes Vernon. On the same day Cleo Madison stars with Edward Hearn in the Rex drama, "Virginia," and Vic Potel and Jane Bernoudy cavort about in the Imp comedy, "When a Wife Worries."

"The Great Smash," a three-reel L-Ko comedy, featuring Alice Howell and Ray Griffith, is the main event on May 10. The latest number of the Universal Animated Weekly, No. 19, is also released on the same day, together with "The Go-Between," an Imp drama, in which William Garwood plays the principal role. Two decided novelties are featured in the Universal program for May 11. In a Powers split reel "Some Monkey Stars," a Ditmars Educational, and "Mr. Fuller Pep—He Tries Mesmerism," a comic cartoon, vie for honors. On the same day Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnston are featured in the Laemmle two-reel domestic society drama, "Her Husband's Faith." Joe Martin, the famous Universal Ape, attempts to excel Professor Ditmar's simians on the following day, May 12, in "A Strange Confession," a Victor drama built especially for him. Harry Benham plays the principal role in "The Capital Prize," an Imp two-reel detective drama, on the same date and is followed by Billie Rhodes and Ray Gallagher in the Nestor comedy, "Never Lie to Your Wife."

On May 13 G. Raymond Nye and Roberta Wilson co-star in "A Fight for Love," a Bison two-reel underworld drama, and on the same day William Franey and Gale Henry give Universal patrons a little comedy relief in the Joker kioodling ripsnorter, "A Wife for a Ransom."

On the last day of the week, Sunday, May 14, the Rex three-reel drama, "A Soul for Sale," shares honors with the Laemmle comedy-drama, "Her Great Part," in which Myrtle Gonzalez and Fred Church play the principal roles.

The second episode of "The Adventures of Peg o' the Ring," entitled "A Strange Inheritance," will be released during the week of May 8. Ruth Stonehouse, Eddie Polo, Grace Cunard and Francis Ford all appear in this thrilling two-reel episode.

Al St. John in Triangle Comedy

AL ST. JOHN, who has been bounding through Keystone films for years, has bounced into big type and will be starred in the next Triangle comedy made at the eastern studios of the corporation. Roscoe Arbuckle, who is taking a short rest from the dual activities of starring and directing, will produce the new feature. Arbuckle, St. John and the supporting company left Fort Lee last week for Dover, N. J., where they have found the right locations for the story, which has a Kentucky mountain atmosphere. Alice Lake is to play the leading feminine role.

Al St John.

The young comedian is a "Native Son," having been born in California twenty-two years ago. After a few years of impromptu fights with school teachers he pronounced himself educated and joined a medicine show. There he laid the foundation for his future work in motion pictures, which he reached by way of a musical comedy in which Roscoe Arbuckle was the star. When Arbuckle joined Mack Sennett he took St. John with him. The boy became one of the original Keystone cops, established the traditions of this unique police force and was graduated into prominent roles. One of his best known parts before coming east at the first of the year was the grocer's boy in "Fickle Fatty's Fall." Since activity was begun at Fort Lee St. John has had important parts in "He Did and He Didn't," "The Bright Lights," "His Wife's Mistake" and "The Other Man."

Coles Starts Something

His Introductory Speech at Bronx Ball Floods Kalem With Applicants.

HENRY COLES, of the Bronx Cinema Exhibitors Association, induced William Wright, of the Kalem Company, to make a few remarks at the organization's ball in Hunt's Point Palace last Tuesday evening. In a facetious moment Exhibitor Coles introduced the Kalemite as the man who gave the jobs. "You've heard from all the players," he declared, "now here is the man who makes the players, so if you pretty girls want to be screen stars I'll give you his address," and he did.

As we go to press the number of applicants totals 260, between those who made personal pleas at the ball and the steady stream of visitors at the Twenty-third Street offices last week. There are at least half a dozen persons on the trail of Exhibitor Coles' scalp now and his troubles will probably double when he hears from the girls who have failed to become stars. As usual, Sam Trigger is named as the instigator of the introductory speech so his scalp is also in danger.

Howard Estabrook with International

HOWARD ESTABROOK, the International Film Service star, possesses most exceptional photographic qualities. His natural modes of expression register instantly and compellingly and his strong personality is intuitively attracting. He has just such a forceful bearing as is required of his Dr. Alden in the new psychological drama, "The Mysteries of Myra," which is arousing so much interest.

Howard Estabrook.

Howard Estabrook has one principal joy in life. Strange as it may appear, his one hobby is work. When not busy in the studio he is either occupied with his personal affairs or he turns in and helps the studio workmen. Even his recreation is strenuous. He plays a very fair game of tennis and is a good horseman. Motoring and golf have a certain charm, but are hardly strenuous enough to suit his active nature.

In his spare moments at Ithaca during the past month he organized and carried through a "Best Playlet" competition among the students of Cornell University. The winning sketch being produced and the proceeds going to the "Actor's Fund."

A glance at Mr. Estabrook's past activities shows convincingly that hard work is indeed his chief occupation.

Mr. Estabrook has enjoyed a meteoric career upon the legitimate stage as well as in motion pictures. In the latter field his first picture was "Officer 666," in which he achieved a success of such magnitude as to place him in film's front ranks.

ANOTHER CALEHUFF IN THE FIELD.

The many friends of the well known Philadelphia film pioneer, Charles Calehuff, are still sending in their congratulations on the very recent arrival of a new Charles A. Calehuff, who weighed a little above ten pounds when he came and who has been rapidly growing ever since. Father and mother are equally proud. If the youngster will grow up the same genial happy and broad-minded man his father is he will reach the fondest expectations of his mother.

CHAPTER I—Lost in the Everglades.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

THE first chapter of "Gloria's Romance" impresses me as being a distinct departure from the customary type of continued film stories as I have seen them. The spectator who looks for melodramatic thrills in these two reels will be utterly disappointed and he may even consider them exceedingly tame, if he is not accustomed to take delight in seeing life on the screen as it is really, or reasonably lived.

For myself I found that my chief pleasure lay in watching the various types of character gradually unfold themselves. It was a positive delight to watch Miss Billie Burke's Gloria reveal the spirit of a captive bird in its cage, ever eager to get out and away from the surveillance of that constant guard of hers—the Governess! At the very first appearance of Miss Burke's Gloria one needs no telling that this girl of sixteen, whose pet dog is her closest companion, has been deprived of a mother's care. The evident interest she takes in watching her pet dog gnaw her father's expensive Panama hat tells that at a glance. So do the moves she makes at her irate parent when her friend Dr. Joyce rescues the dog from the clutches of two negro boys to whose tender mercies he has been committed for his crime.

Indeed, all the way through the interesting two reels the Gloria of Miss Burke is a sweet and deliciously girlish creature. One laughs delightedly, not forcedly, at the means employed by Gloria to get the answer to her algebraic exercise; but one is forced to guffaw over the blunder made by the friendly Dr. Joyce in giving only the result of the multiplication instead of showing the process as well, and to guffaw still more loudly when the governess compliments her pupil on the wonderful progress she is making!

The scene showing Gloria pinning the slippers of her sleeping governess to the carpet, before she sets out on her nocturnal ramble, is a typically girlish trick, and the way it is done by Miss Burke is thoroughly girlish. We don't get the laugh that the trick arouses until later, and then madcap Gloria is far away, speeding alone swiftly in a high-power auto that ends its mad pranks in the deep waters of the surf, compelling the girl to make her way to the shore drenched. This and the spending of a night alone in the lonely and dangerous Everglades are the only thrills in the first chapter; but, while not melodramatic, their comparative thrill is sufficiently strong for a tenderly nurtured and secluded girl like our Gloria.

Miss Billie Burke is an especial favorite of the moving picture camera. She photographs splendidly, and every passing change in her face is clearly registered. That little, well-bred yawn made by Gloria before she lies down to sleep in the Everglades is perfectly caught, just as are the moves (already referred to) which she makes at her father. Gloria's face is also a study when she is caricaturing her governess on the blackboard, just after being given the hated algebraic exercise. Her self-satisfied look and air, when the goggles have been put in the picture and the final looping curve has been placed beneath the chin, will make everyone smile.

And the delicately pretty girlish dresses worn by Miss Burke in this chapter are delightful to the eye. There is good taste everywhere, even in the smallest things, just as there are nice, refined manners which will not permit a breach in even the most absent moments. You remember the scene where Gloria is eating an apple, with her pet dog in her arms? She has just taken one tiny bite of it when, unconsciously it seems, she places it near the dog's mouth. He sniffs it. Then she raises it as if to take another tiny bite, but her hand stops midway and the apple is thrown aside.

These small things contribute largely to the making of a feature film, just as they are pearls in a finished characterization. In Miss Burke's case alone, "Gloria's Romance" should prove a model for intelligent photodramatic art and dainty, beautiful and superb costuming. Her winsome beauty can stand by itself—alone.

As far as the other characters have developed in Chapter I., the cast is a perfect one. W. T. Carleton's Pierpont Stafford and Henry Weaver's Judge Freeman are fine types. The latter, like Gloria, has a stern mentor, only in his case it is a physician, Dr. Stephen Royce, instead of a governess. Henry Kolker's Dr. Royce in Chapter I., next to Gloria, is the most prominent characterization. No need to say that it is highly finished. Miss Harriette Sterling as the governess has considerable action in this chapter and does some fine character work.

No one can fail to admire the artistic and original plan employed to introduce the character in Chapter I. Miss Billie Burke is seen on the screen seated and charmingly attired. By double exposure a leather bound volume is placed in her hand, and as she turns it we read on the outside of the cover the title, "Gloria's Romance." Then as the front inside leaves are turned in order, the photographs of each members of the cast, with the name, appears. The use of the bound volume and the title carry out most happily the idea that "Gloria's Romance" is a moving-picture novel.

Director Walter Edwin can be complimented most sincerly on the beautiful and appropriate settings and for talented direction of a great cast.

well handled, its distinguishing feature a nice appropriateness of types and settings, its general merit that of fine craftsmanship straight through. Its chief demerit lies in the story told, that of not having something really attained by little Dorothy's good intentions, a compensation for effort. Something is attained—she transforms the leading character—but her noble purpose is disregarded in the end for the sake of story value.

She is a wealthy little girl, who wearies of the selfishness shown by all with whom she comes in contact. She reads and becomes inspired with a desire to do something worth while. She tries the uplift in a tough district and has some heartbreaking experiences, disillusions, but she is plucky enough to keep at it and finally wins two men of low associations and common ends, but with differing characters. They are a dive-keeper of coarse instincts and the son of a former political boss of inherent manliness. These two are admirably impersonated by Fred J. Butler and Owen Moore. Their fine work, and that of the entire cast, makes the story move with vigor and without theatricalism. Dorothy is the same amusing little girl that she is in other roles, sweet and demure, and her honest little venture is an interesting one. While not strikingly original, the story as visualized measures up to a high standard.

"The Bugle Call" comes from that seemingly exhaustless font of screen stories, Gardner Sullivan—he must write with both hands at the same time—and it gives opportunity for William Collier Junior as "Billy," motherless son of a western Post Commander during the time of Indian raids. His father presents a new mother to "Billy," but the boy has too much pride of a boyish sort, commingled with love for the one who lies in her grave, to accord the Commandant's new wife generous recognition. He has the training of a soldier and has learned to play the bugle, two factors in effecting a reconciliation toward the end. He saves the garrison by his wit and his courage, during an attack of the most spirited kind by a band of Indians under "Lame Bear," and a finer understanding with his new mother results. Young Collier plays his part well—it lacks comedy relief—and the story as pictured is bound to be a success with women and children in mixed audiences wherever shown, but will Mr. Sullivan please draw another picture for William Junior, in which there is opportunity to see if the kid has a comedy side of his character? This will be no easy matter, but a rattling comedy of boy life ought to be one of the hits of the season.

"Unlucky Luke"

Frank Borzage Produces Delightful Two-Part Comedy for the Mutual Program With a Favorite Group of Mustang Players.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE principal characters of this delightful western comedy are Luke, Seth and Lucy, impersonated by Frank Borzage, Jack Richardson and Anna Little. Luke and Seth are pards in the western country with all going smoothly until the appearance on the scene of the pretty new school teacher. Luke and Seth happen to be among a group of curious bystanders when Lucy alights from the stage coach, grip in hand, and a look of admiration lights the countenance of each. Suddenly each becomes suspicious of the other. Luke remarks significantly, "I seen her first." A moment more and they are rolling in the dust in a half mischievous, half serious grapple over an anticipated situation.

But this is only the beginning of things. As time goes on the situation becomes more and more amusing, until Mr. Grouch, the school superintendent, entering the race as a suitor for pretty Lucy, is put to rout and obliged to board the train by Luke, who stoops to fabrication which he afterward asserts must be truth, because Grouch shows guilt.

The production is a well constructed one, and contains a delightfully clean vein of humor. The comedy is spontaneous, and the players are splendidly cast and pleasing in their interpretation of the characters allotted them. Frank Borzage, playing the principal role and directing the picture at the same time, is to be congratulated on his success in both capacities.

"A Man of Sorrow"

Melodrama in Five Reels by Fox Company—From "Hoodman Blind"—An Able but Not Distinguished Offering.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THERE is a set-scene in this picture, "A Man of Sorrow," that is so melodramatically artificial that one would think it was borrowed, just as it came, from the stage. It is a studio scene of a great harbor at night. Very clever, no doubt, but a picture director has no right to take any special pride in such, for they do not belong. Of course most of the picture breaks away from the stage melodrama, though it was suggested by "Hoodman Blind," but it is anchored pretty thoroughly to melodramatic excellencies and defects all through. It has a moving story that the spectator must watch with interest, but William Farnum and an able cast play it as it should be played, or as a melodrama should be played on the stage. Every one knows they can do good screen work; but here—how they do register and register again! This production was picturized for the William Fox Company by Oscar Apfel.

There is one first class bit of tussle business in it when the two scoundrels come to blows and the deepest villain gets chucked down cellar. There are several other fights in it, but the one in which the hero manhandles the base miscreant who has deceived him and brought about all the trouble is too brutal for pleasure and too one-sided for excitement. It is true that the villain deserved it; but the hero did not deserve to give it to him, and the result is decidedly weak.

The plot, as will be remembered, turns on the fact that two sisters who know nothing of each other's existence, look exactly alike and that the villain makes use of it to bring trouble to the husband of the girl for whom he has taken a fancy.

"The Iron Claw"

Ninth Episode of Pathe Serial Entitled "Arrows of Hate," Reveals a Plot to Incriminate the Laughing Mask.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THIS episode arouses more curiosity than ever with regard to the identity of the Laughing Mask whom Legar is now trying to incriminate by fastening on him the responsibility of certain murders that he has, presumably, been the cause of himself. This he attempts to accomplish by placing in the hands of the victims notes purported to be written by the Laughing Mask. In an attempt to win the aid of Golden in rounding up this mysterious personage, the authorities are duped by Margery, who conceals the Laughing Mask behind a screen in one of the rooms of Golden's house which he is in the habit of frequenting. Here a strange thing occurs, when, upon being told by the maid that the Laughing Mask has entered Davy's room the door is broken open and Davy is found in the closet of his room gagged and bound hand and foot, with no trace of he whom they pursue. A question here arises in the mind of the spectator which we will leave him to answer for himself.

Later Margery is served with a note which appears to be from the Laughing Mask begging her to come to him because he has been seriously wounded. She goes, but is followed by the faithful Davy, who along with Margery is seized and thrown into a gas-filled bathroom by Legar and his associates after rough handling. Legar's, when he discovers that they are about to be liberated climbs up to the window and shoots them with poisoned darts, which are afterward found to have been relieved of their menace by the Laughing Mask. An intensely interesting episode.

"The Feast of Life"

Clara Kimball Young Is Starred in Paragon Picture Made in Cuba Under Direction of Albert Capellani.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

ADMIRERS of Clara Kimball Young, and they constitute nearly all followers of photoplays, will not be disappointed in this five-part drama, written by Frances Marion and produced in Cuba by Albert Capellani. Miss Young's rare beauty, her charm of personality and her emotional appeal are as potent as ever in her playing of Aurora Fernandez, a Cuban girl of aristocratic lineage, who, to save the family estate, is forced into a loveless marriage with a wealthy landowner. To suit the Cuban locale, the familiar story of the mortgage on the dear old farm and the sweet girl sacrificed to the village skinflint, becomes the story of a mother and daughter in danger of losing their luxuriant tropical acres unless a domineering, unpleasant neighbor is taken into the family.

And the tragedy is all the keener for Aurora, in that she has fallen in love with a handsome young fisherman and feels that she is destined to die, spiritually that is, before she has really lived at all. The meeting of Aurora and Pedro in a church on Easter Sunday develops a sort of spiritual flration, for the fisherman sees in the beautiful girl standing before the altar a vision of the Madonna. It is love at first sight for both and a few days later, looking very inviting in a "Carmen" costume, the girl joins the merrymakers at an inn where her fisherman sweetheart discovers less Madonna-like traits in her personality.

The progress of the love affair between these two offers an opportunity for many pleasingly acted scenes utilizing the luxuriant backgrounds to be found near Havana and Santiago. Nor are the meetings discontinued after Aurora becomes the wife of Don Armada, and, as might be expected, a triangular affair of the kind leads to serious trouble, which is plausibly enough explained until the husband is depicted as losing and regaining his sight at the convenience of the author. This expedient is too old to carry conviction.

Unquestionably the first asset of "The Feast of Life" is Miss Young, whose playing lacks nothing in expressiveness and feeling; the second is a reasonably diverting romantic story, and the third is in the appeal to the eye through unusual and picturesque locations, which, however, were not always clearly photographed. Director Capellani evidently aimed to make the most of the Cuban scenery and fine old buildings, but the camera man did not always second the purpose. Doris Kenyon gives a capital performance as a girl whose love is scorned, whereas Robert Frazer and Paul Capellani are excellent in the leading male roles.

Ethel Burke With World Film.

Ethel Burke is now a member of the World Film stock company. While working in a small scene in "Molly of Pig-Tail Alley," Director Emile Chautard was attracted by the expression on Ethel's face. Result—she is now steadily at work and will get her first chance to show what she is capable of in support of Robert Warwick in "Friday the 13th."

"Spellbound"

First of Five-Reel Knickerbocker Star Features, Produced by H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

WITH Lois Meredith presenting a very charming appearance in the leading role, "Spellbound," selected as the first of the Knickerbocker five-reel features, becomes passable entertainment. Whatever flaws one may pick in the story, or the production, there can scarcely be two opinions about the attractiveness of Miss Meredith. She has an engaging personality and more than that she is a clever actress, capable of expressing emotion in a convincing fashion. The directors could have no better choice for the leading role, although the playing of some of the other characters might have been improved. William Conklin, for example, is a bit theatrical in his interpretation of an English gentleman.

As for the story in "Spellbound," it is interesting enough, despite the suggestion of previous pictures based on the theft of an Indian idol and the mysteriously evil influence it carries. Probably the chief shortcoming of this production is in the failure to create the illusion of a supernatural power, which irresistibly governs the lives of those under the spell of the idol. The subjective quality, so essential to a story of this type, is not strong, but there is enough action and melodrama to hold the attention and every now and again to cause a thrill. If "Spellbound" does not realize the more subtle possibilities of the photoplay art, it, at least, maintains the standard demanded in feature offerings designed for the average audience.

Most of the scenes, made in California, are intended to represent an English estate, occupied by a retired army officer and his pretty ward. The idol has been transported from India, and, we soon learn, is destined to cause much trouble in the Cavendish household. An Indian Yogi traces the stolen image to England and kills Major Cavendish under circumstances that lead to the arrest and trial of Elsie Yorke's fiance, Harrington Graeme. After this mistake is righted the pair are married, but each develops entirely unlovable traits, because the idol still reposes on the drawing-room table. The climax of the picture brings a spectacular fire, the death of the Yogi, the destruction of the idol and subsequent happiness for the survivors, relieved from the baneful spell. Clear photography is among the assets of this production.

"A Woman Wills"

Sun Photoplay Company Releases a Well Produced European Story, With War and Intrigue for a Background.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

UNLIKE many pictures of foreign origin, "A Woman Wills," made in France and handled on the state rights plan by the Sun Photoplay Company, contains a story that is likely to interest American audiences; not an especially unusual story, to be sure, but one in which the plot is carefully developed through five clearly photographed and carefully staged reels. Elsie LeClaire, the featured player, is a competent actress, ably supported by a French company, including Suzanne Armelle, a decidedly pretty woman who gives character to the role of an adventuress in league with a foreign spy.

Miss LeClaire, playing Marion Duval, is introduced as a mischievous school girl who runs away when she is threatened with dismissal and joins the boy scouts just at the outbreak of a war. We are asked to believe, as we have been in many romances of an earlier date, that the girl succeeds in masquerading as a youth without the deception being suspected. This sort of thing is possible only on the stage and in pictures, but it may be passed as an accepted convention. The experiences of the girl, shared by a young officer with whom she falls in love, are thrilling enough and not too improbable for a melodrama of the type.

The second stage of the story finds Marion once more in feminine garb and established in a luxurious home. She meets her dashing lieutenant and gives him valuable assistance in trapping a foreign spy, operating in collusion with a dancer who uses her wiles to ensnare the young officer. As the story progresses the plot increases in interesting complications and offers not a few situations of melodramatic strength. Marion's escape from the vessel on which she is held captive and the struggle of the two women for possession of the plans bring moments of particular intensity.

In point of artistic lighting, sharp photography and finely picturesque settings the production excels. Then, too, there is plenty of contrast, with scenes varying from a soldiers' camp fire at night to the gay life of fashionable Parisians. "A Woman Wills" was a wise selection for the American market.

"Playing With Fire"

Sex Is the Dominant Element in Metro Popular Plays and Players Drama, Starring Olga Petrova.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THROUGHOUT the five reels of this Popular Plays and players drama, one of the best thus far provided for Mme. Petrova, there is a commendable effort to avoid stereotyped methods of production. It is evidenced in the varied backgrounds for the sub-titles, designed to harmonize with the spirit of the scene being introduced; it is apparent in odd lighting effects, in the use made of double exposures and in the care taken to give the picture a distinctive tone. "Playing With Fire" is the title Aaron Hoffman gave his rather frank, though unobjectionable sex story, directed with considerable skill by Francis J. Grandon. There is nothing especially edifying about the drama, beyond the artistic workmanship, but it is certain to be a popular attraction.

Always distinguished in appearance and wearing many stylish gowns, Mme. Petrova is an impressive, if not exactly sympathetic figure in the role of a woman who marries an elderly man out of gratitude, and then is carried away by the impetuous wooing of an unprincipled young artist. Possessing imper-

turbable poise and assurance, Mme. Petrova never seems quite like the victim of an ungovernable passion, but when it comes to protecting her step-daughter from the man who wronged her she has no difficulty in indicating the sincerity of her purpose. The climax of the story is cleverly worked up; in fact the plot construction is adroit from first to last and free from illogical turns.

Evelyn Brent introduced as a child and later as a young woman whose first serious love affair is with the philandering artist, is girlishly charming and delightfully unaffected. She gives the picture a valuable touch of wholesome innocence. Arthur Hopps, as her father and the husband of Jean, provides a performance at once dignified and forceful, whereas Pierre Le May is well cast as the degenerate artist.

Jack Conway Directing Kerrigan.

Director Jack Conway, who has taken charge of the Otis Turner company at Universal City while Turner is on his vacation, is directing J. Warren Kerrigan in a five-reel feature entitled "The ' ilent Battle," adapted for the screen by F. McGrew Willis from the novel of George Gibbs. In support of Kerrigan is Lois Wilson, playing opposite, Maude George, Harry Carter, Ray Hanford and J. F. Connolly, together with a number of the members of the Universal City stock company.

"Bobby of the Ballet" Finished.

Director Joseph De Grasse has finished the picturization of "Bobbie of the Ballet," in which Louise Lovely and Lon Chaney are featured. This story will be released as a five-reel feature. The story is by Grant Carpenter and was prepared for the screen by Ida May Park. In the supporting cast are Gretchen Lederer, Lule Warrenton, Jay Belasco, Gilmore Hammond and Jean Hathaway.

warned. There is another moral to be derived from Mr. Goodman's play: Happiness that is founded upon a lie will not endure. After her betrayal, Marion Lane meets a young doctor, a man of wealth, and marries him without telling him of her past. The inevitable happens; circumstances force Marion to confess her secret, and she barely escapes losing the love of her husband. The character of the woman is lamentably weak, and if she represents any portion of the ambitious young girls who come to the great cities and attempt an artistic career, no wonder the police records and the books of the public hospitals contain some of their names.

Viewed solely from the standpoint of a motion picture play, "Love's Toll" is a respectable achievement. The story will entertain the large body of amusement seekers that prefer an emotional rather than an intellectual appeal, and welcome the repetition of familiar phases of life. The character drawing is consistent and the action progresses at a steady pace. Most of the incidents are convincing. The finish is sheer melodrama, theatric to a marked degree, and leaves a well-developed doubt as to whether the lady's husband has forgiven her without reservation. John H. Pratt, the producer, has not been stinted in the matter of stage sets, and has handled everything connected with his department in a creditable manner. Rosetta Brice as Marion Lane reflects the shallow nature of the heroine with truth and gives her an added personal charm that is all her own. Richard Buhler easily meets every requirement put upon him as Doctor Page, and Crauford Kent wears the garments and the manners of the "polished villain" as though both are a comfortable fit. Inez Buck is an effective Lucy Mallory, and Garda Dolotskova as a Russian dancer acts and dances with skill. William Turner and Mrs. Carr are lifelike representatives of the father and mother of Marion Lane.

"Playthings of the Gods."

"The Evil that Men Do!" is a familiar quotation from Shakespeare. This three-reel photoplay, written by Josephine McLaughlin and produced by the Lubin company, illustrates the amount of unhappiness that one determined man can cause to his own family, when he puts his best efforts at work. John Raymond, the gentleman in question, is a millionaire of the old stage-father type, whose will is the only law known to the members of his household. When his son becomes a painter and marries his model, John Raymond casts him off. Young Raymond falls sick and his wife goes to his father for help. The millionaire schemes to have his daughter-in-law arrested for theft, is successful and the girl is sent to prison 1or a year. The boy is made to believe that his wife has deserted him. He goes back home, and when he meets his wife again she is standing beside the body of the elder Raymond, a bloody paper cutter in her hand. She is tried for the murder, but James Carlson, the millionaire's secretary, takes the stand and confesses that Raymond was killed in a struggle when he (Carlson) attacked him for ruining his daughter Madeline.

A more cold-blooded and consistent blackguard than John Raymond never supplied the villainy necessary to a screen drama. He is a modern Iago and has been drawn without the slightest shading or touch of human feeling. Such a character is bound to furnish vigorous dramatic motives, even if he lack subtility and truth to nature. "Playthings of the Gods" is good melodrama of its class, and utilizes the services of several newcomers in the Lubin western company. Cecil Van Auker adheres closely to the author's conception of the millionaire, and Sydney Deane is equally successful as James Carlson. Other useful members of the cast are Allan Forrest, Ruth Saville, Evelyn Page, Adelaide Bronti and Walter Page.

"The Moment Before"

Pauline Frederick Is Well Supported in Strong Role in Famous Players Subject.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

IT IS in the widely contrasting role of a duchess and a gypsy that Pauline Frederick is seen in "The Moment Before," the Famous Players' five-part release of May 1. The picture is an adaptation of Israel Zangwill's drama. It is directed by Robert G. Vignola. The exteriors were photographed in Florida, and these are notable in their pictorial effect.

The story is shown in inverted form. The first reel and a half is of the duchess who gives freely of her time and money to charity. As her life draws suddenly to a close following the accidental death of the duke the scene fades into a gypsy camp, with the gray-haired duchess shown as a black-haired gypsy looking unconcernedly on a fierce fight of two rivals for her hand. The subject contains an bundance of action.

In the role of Madge Miss Frederick makes a striking gypsy. She becomes the bride of John the Gypsy through force, not through consent. It is primitive lovemaking on the part of the man. The real effection of the gypsy woman comes to the surface when she meets Harold, the younger son of the Duke of Maldon. It is through the intervention of two tragedies, the death of the older brother at the hand of John and the shooting of John by Madge to prevent him killing Harold that the way is cleared for the gypsy to become the duchess.

Thomas Holding is Harold, the dissipated younger son, who, following the death of his brother, straightens out in Australia; it is a finished performance. J. W. Johnston is forceful as John the gypsy, a strong interpretation. Frank Losee makes prominent the part of the elder duke. Henry Hallam is a bishop to the life.

Mr. Vignola's staging of the church scenes gives to them unusual atmosphere. The whole picture, for that matter, is well made. "The Moment Before" will make a good release.

"U. S. Marines under Fire in Haiti."

For Exhibition Throughout the Country in the Interests of Preparedness—Films Eulogize America's Navy.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

TUESDAY afternoon, April 25, saw the exhibition in the Candler theater before an enthusiastic audience of invited guests of a considerable footage of film picturing some of the events in connection with the intervention of the United States in Haiti. These pictures, made by the Tropical Film Company, and photographed by C. DeForest Pryer, were presented by the Feinberg Amusement Company, under the auspices of the American Defense Society. They not only introduce us familiarly to the Island of Haiti, its people and industries, including the gathering, sorting and shipping of coffee, cocoanuts and bananas, but awaken in us a more profound respect for our men of the navy. In the new interpretation of the Monroe Doctrine which the present war has forced upon us these pictures show us the efficient manner in which our marines, called upon to act as artillerymen, infantrymen and cavalrymen, as well as performing their naval duties, illustrate more clearly than words the meaning of this new interpretation. They show the marines in actual engagement with the rebel Haitians, and many of the hardships to which they were obliged to submit in helping this people to maintain the existence of their nation. The carrying of the wounded from the battlefields and the attention given them in the hospitals is also shown.

The exhibition of the pictures at the Candler theater was preceded by an interesting address on preparedness and the principle of the Monroe Doctrine by Frederick H. Chase of the American Defense Society. This was followed by a U. S. marine song rendered in spirited style by Miss Allyn King of the Ziegfeld Midnight Frolic. The raising of the curtain revealed an inspiring display of American flags which, parting, displayed the screen and its revelation, and an appropriate selection of orchestral music accompanied the pictures. A squad of marines from the Wyoming were present as well as several naval officers.

These films are to be exhibited throughout the country in the interests of preparedness.

Four Kalem Releases

"The Rogue's Nemesis," "A Lunch Room Legacy," "Not What the Doctor Ordered," and "Ham and the Masked Marvel."

"The Rogue's Nemesis."

TO MISS Marin Sais, our best bow! In this number of "The Social Pirates" she is called upon to don male garment and pass herself off as a man. Her ability to deceive the villain in the play cannot be a matter of doubt, for, it was demonstrated in the Kalem projection room that members of the company and a keen-eyed and wide-awake New Jersey arbiter of matters cinematographic failed to penetrate her disguise. As the husband of her friend Mary, the impersonator of Miss Mona storms about in a rage of jealousy, when a divorced gentleman of easy morals dares to start a flirtation with her wife. Miss Sais fits into the character and the costume with equal snugness, and defends her honor like a true gentleman. The object of the combined avenging of Mona and Mary makes his wife the victim of a cowardly plot and then learned, to his cost, that his particular Nemesis is a peculiar person, being plural in number and feminine in gender—even when wearing masculine clothing of the latest mode. The picture is one of the best numbers of the George Bronson Howard serial.

"A Lunch Room Legacy."

To begin with, the finish of this one-reel "Sis Hopkins" comedy discloses the home of the crooked man who "went up a crooked street." As a "location," the leaning tower of Pisa cannot compare to the building that has been utilized as the place where Sis has vain hopes of getting rich by the sale of "sinkers," coffee and "Ham and—." As to what happens before the crooked restaurant is shown, it is only necessary to state that Samuel J. Taylor, the author of the farce, has supplied the proper recipe for Rose Melville's brand of fun-making, and that Henry Murdock, Richard Purdon, Frank Minzey, Arthur Albertson, Mary Kennedy and Olive West use every endeavor to be of real assistance to the star. Robert Ellis directed the picture.

"Not What the Doctor Ordered."

Ethel Teare is the cause of the trouble in this one-reel comedy. She decides to become a nurse and looks so fetching in her uniform that a perfectly well young gentleman declares he is dangerously ill and insists that she shall attend to his case. The situations are cleverly devised, and Victor Rottman, Jack MacDermott, Gus Leonard and Myrta Sterling give Miss Teare the right kind of support.

"Ham and the Masked Marvel."

It is not stated whether the last championship bout influenced Ham to enter the "squared-circle" with his unknown opponent, during the progress of this one-reel "comic." One thing is certain—Ham is an original fighter, at least. The rules of the prize ring have no terrors for him, and his tactics, during his "go" with the "Masked Marvel," will win him the approval of moving picture patrons, even if your real "fight-fan" is forced to weep at the big fellow's want of skill. Strategy, applied by Bud at the proper time, gives Ham the match. Norma Nichols is the woman in the case.

"Elusive Isabel"

Florence Lawrence Featured as Diplomatic Spy in Six-Part Bluebird Photoplay.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE novel of Jacques Futrelle, upon which this production is based, presents a story of considerable power, abounding in situations of rare dramatic value, and with a vein of human interest that should not have been lost sight of in making the picture version. Unfortunately in constructing the pictureplay version neither director nor adapter have made the best of a fine opportunity. The story of how the Latin nations through the machinations of the Duke D'Abruzzi and his feminine aide, Isabel Thorne, endeavor to bring about the signing, on American soil, of a compact which would enable them to gain control over the other nations of the earth, and of how the American Secret Service succeeded in frustrating the plans of the conspirators has been told with an over-abundance of sub-titles.

The picture, in spite of an excellent cast, is not as impressive as it should be. What opportunities have been afforded Miss Lawrence have been grasped by this talented actress and made the most of. Her handling of the role of Isabel Thorne is easy and natural, and it will be admitted that her best opportunity presents itself at the point of the story where her brother, an inventor of electrical contrivances, shoots, in her home, a trespasser who enters in the night. In the scene between Grimm, the detective, and Isabel Thorne, immediately after the shooting, Miss Lawrence does an excellent bit of acting.

It is unfortunate, however, that after an absence of over a year from the screen, Miss Lawrence was not provided with a better opportunity in making her return bow to an expectant public.

In the cast who supported Miss Lawrence in this production are Sydney Bracey, Harry Millarde, Wallace Clarke, William Welsh, Paul Panzer, Jack Newton and Sonia Marcel. The settings of the production are intensely artistic, and there are many scenes that in their arrangement are worthy of much praise. The human interest of the story has, however, not been thoroughly exploited, and the pretty little romance between the detective, Grimm, and Isabel Thorne, has been introduced too vaguely to be effective. The six reels of film used in presenting the story leave room for many interesting details which might have been added with good effect.

None So Blind

Three-Part Lubin Drama Dealing With a Timely Subject in a Satisfactory Fashion.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

NOW that the newspapers are overflowing with preparedness talk and authorities in navy matters place considerable reliance on submarines, it is well to meet the popular agitation with a picture such as C. A. Frambers has written under the title of "None So Blind," directed by Melvin Mayo and supervised by Captain Wilbert Melville. There is no attempt at a propaganda picture—something to be thankful for—rather a straight photoplay drama in which the building of submarines is given a personal, not a national application. Its timeliness is due to the fact that anything concerning under-sea craft is interesting just at present. Then, too, it is quite in accord with prevalent opinion to present that good, old American institution, graft, as a menace to our defensive armaments.

Walter Spencer represents a navy lieutenant, appointed as inspector of submarines built for the government. He is not open to bribery, but his secretary is, and thereby hangs the tale. The lieutenant's report of defects in a new boat is altered to make it appear that he suggested a favorable verdict providing his terms were met. He is court martialled and found guilty, owing to the connivance of his secretary and a member of the ship-building company responsible for the submarine. Lieutenant Watson resigns, leaves the country in disgrace and in the Hawaiian Islands rapidly descends the social scale, finding no little satisfaction in the love of a native belle. But he never quite forgets Gladys, the devoted American girl he left behind. In due time the lieutenant is vindicated and his sweetheart, on a cruise in the South Seas, comes to prevent his marriage to the Hawaiian, who gladly sacrifices her life in saving the visitors from a band of beachcombers.

There is nothing extraordinary in this story, to be sure, but it is made the basis of a first-rate picture, capably directed and adequately acted by Mr. Spencer, Evelyn Page, Ruth Saville and Mona Darkfeather.

CARTER DE HAVEN appears in this five-reel production, by Otis Turner, as a lively young man, who suddenly falls heir to a fortune of $50,000,000. His wife, Flora Parker De Haven, appears as Mary, the country girl, with whom the youth is in love at the time he comes into the inheritance, and whom he marries at a crucial moment in order to retain guardianship of the property until he is of age.

The story is a light-running vehicle for this lively pair, and the screen adaptation by Ford I. Beebe brings out numerous touches of comedy along the way. Harry Carter appears in the character part of the grandfather, who leaves the unexpected bequest; Harry Dipp is Willie's rival for Mary's hand, and Doc Crane brings some smiles as Professor Higginbotham.

Willie O'Donovan is the son of a family living on Long Island. His grandfather conceives the idea that the lad's parents are anxious to see him depart this life in order to obtain his money. He likes Willie, who is something of a little demon, fond of athletics and baseball. Unknown to the parents the grandfather makes out a new will in favor of Willie, whom he has had sent to boarding school. The parents quarrel and separate, neither of them wanting Willie.

When the grandfather dies and it becomes known that Willie is the heir, both parents try to get hold of him, employing detectives for that purpose. Whoever Willie is living with when he reaches a certain age is the legal trustee of the property. The youth is living at the home of Mary's mother, and much of the action consists of his efforts to evade the detectives on his trail. He finally solves the trusteeship by marrying Mary, who becomes his legal guardian.

Strong Biograph Reissues

"The Yaqui Cur," a Remarkable Two-Reel Indian Drama, and "The Girl Across the Way."

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

CHANGING fashions in pictures cannot effect the popularity of an Indian drama such as "The Yaqui Cur," made by Griffith several years ago. To audiences placed on a constant diet of society stories, the natural beauty and the red-blooded vitality of these two reels will be bracing. No doubt there was an over-production of Indian dramas at one time, but there never was and there is no likelihood of there being a superfluous number of photoplays offering such a combination of story, spectacle and characterization as Griffith included in "The Yaqui Cur." Exhibitors could not ask for a safer program number, for those who recall the film when first released will welcome a return engagement, and younger patrons will wonder why more pictures of the kind are not made to-day.

Needless to remark, we are given a taste of Indian warfare staged in a glorious western valley and acted with the intensity that Griffith knew so well how to attain. Indians falling from horses, the smoke, the excitement, the horror of battle—we have all these aud much more besides in the appealing figure of "The Yaqui Cur," as played by Robert Harron. Here is a true bit of characterization and something of a study of the psychology of the Indian, influenced by the ideals and manners of white men. Like a child he first becomes imitative in obvious, inconsequential things, but in facing a crucial test he innocently follows one of the most beautiful and least popular of Christian teachings by giving his life for his brother. Walter Miller and Lionel Barrymore appear in this altogether commendable offering.

"The Girl Across the Way" is a simple, entertaining, though not extraordinary one-reel romance, sincerely acted by Mae Marsh, Robert Harron, Chrystie Miller and Mildred Manning. With characters drawn from a small town, the story concerns the redemption of a somewhat wild youth by a girl whose goodness proves unassailable. The picture is worth while because of its lifelikeness, rather than owing to dramatic strength. The playing of Miss Marsh and Mr. Harron is distinguished by many effectively human touches.

"Maria Rosa."

A Lasky Production of Supreme Merit in Which Geraldine Farrar Shows Marvelous Powers of Portrayal.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

HAVING seen Geraldine Farrar in all her great roles, both on the singing and on the silent stage, I have no hesitation whatever is saying that in the part of Maria Rosa she has reached her greatest histrionic triumph. "Maria Rosa" provides wonderful opportunities for an artist of the first class. A great and abiding love, great simplicity coupled with great cunning are the chief characteristics of the part. Miss Farrar makes the conjunction of these elements in a woman's heart seem overwhelmingly probable because she makes them overwhelmingly real. She does become merged in the character she is asked to portray and the audience is therefore treated to the rarest of pleasures—seeing a sublime part in the hands of a highly gifted artist who realizes the utmost expectations of the dramatist.

The story brings home a fact which we all know, but which is ever new—the power of love over a woman's heart and whole existence. The heart of Maria Rosa, simple and trusting, finds itself cruelly deceived and betrayed, not by her lover, but by a treacherous rival of her lover. She is called upon when she makes the fearful discovery to act quickly and to dissemble feelings which beat tumultuously at the very gate of her soul. With the same intuitive flash she realizes both the deceit that has been practiced upon her and the need of saving her beloved from the suspicion of murder. She rises to the situation in a manner which will make this play stand out far above every average production. The sympathy of the audience, great as it must be, is surpassed by the interest and by the gripping suspense. The slightest misstep must have meant failure.

The tragic points in the film are developed with unsurpassed skill, making the happy ending all the more pleasing. Atmosphere and lighting effects are up to the highest Lasky standards, but I cannot conclude without saying something for the added charms of novelty and variety in this feature. Old Spain has never been depicted with more charm and sympathetic understanding, whether on stage screen or canvass. The support of Miss Farrar was good, but she rises high above the rest of the cast.

Comments on the Films

Exclusively by Our Own Staff.

General Film Company.

THE BLIND PRINCESS AND THE POET (Biograph), April 24.—This D. W. Griffith reissue is a one-reel costume drama acted by Blanche Sweet, Florence Labadie, Chas. H. West, Dell Henderson and Francis Grandin. The story is told in allegory and has poetic charm and feeling.

GERMS AND MICROBES (Lubin), April 24.—The excellent comic acting of D. L. Don gives this one-reel farce its chief value. The picture was written and directed by Edwin McKim. It relates the adventures of Colonel Otto, who lives in fear of germs and microbes, an undutiful son trying to make capital out of his father's dread of bacteria. Mr. Don's unforced fun is very amusing.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 33, 1916 (Selig), April 24.—Aeroplanes for the English, Newport News, Va.; officers of National Guard learning to operate aeroplanes; feeding python, San Francisco; Battleship Nebraska in drydock, Charlestown, Mass.; review of U. S. sailors; crossing International bridge, El Paso, Texas; soccer game, Chicago; collie dog nurse for kittens, San Francisco; before Verdun; testing brakes on tug, Tacoma, Wash.; army scenes at Columbus, N. M.; President Wilson visits Congress.

THE ROOKIE (Vitagraph), April 24.—A spirited one-reel screen drama, written by Paul West, showing the perils in the life of a policeman. The production is realistic and the action is full of thrills. Evert Overton acts the title role with force and skill. Dorothy Kelly, Ned Finley and Bobby Connolly are thoroughly capable.

HAM'S WATERLOO (Kalem), April 25.—If Ham meets his Waterloo in this one-reel comedy it is only after he has routed the enemy with a fire hose and given Bud a thorough drenching. The two comic gents make another attempt to enter the bonds of matrimony, but the fates will not have it so. Norma Nicholls is the woman in the case. Harry Edwards directed the picture.

VERNON HOWE BAILEY'S SKETCHBOOK OF ROME (Essanay), April 26.—The points of interest of ancient and modern Rome occupy one-half of this reel, the other five hundred feet being taken up by scenes in Arizona. The entire reel is of value, both artistically and from an educational point of view.

COUNTING OUT THE COUNT (Kalem), April 26.—Samuel J. Taylor is the author of this one-reel comedy and Wm. Beaudine directed it. The complications are amusing, and the picture is well acted by Ethel Teare, Jack MacDermott, Victor Rottman, Mrs. A. Davenport, Gus Leonard and Myrta Sterling.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 34, 1916 (Selig), April 27.—Polo match, Washington; Manzanita, Cal., high school cadets; Patriots Day celebration, Boston; Actors' Fund Home, Staten Island; opening of season, Surf Beach, Cal.; U. S. Battleships, New York; bicycle race, Newark, N. J.; motorcycle run, Boston; strike at Hastings, N. Y.; railroad wreck, Bradford, R. I.; President Wilson at ball game, Washington.

WHAT'S SAUCE FOR THE GOOSE (Vim), April 27.—Elsie MacLeod is starred in this one-reel farce and her acting justifies the distinction. The reel depends upon its comic complications for its funmaking, and is plentifully supplied with laughs.

A LUCKY MISTAKE (Kalem), April 28.—This one-reel comedy belongs to the Sis Hopkins series, so cleverly acted by Rose Melville. A review of the picture was printed in the issue of April 29, page 821.

THE TRAIL OF DANGER (No. 77 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series—Kalem), April 29.—In a review of this one-reel drama, printed on page 821 of the issue of April 29, occurs this sentence: " 'The Trail of Danger' justifies its title." The reel is full of thrills.

LOVE AND BULLETS (Lubin), April 29.—Written and directed by Clay M. Greene, a comic duel is the principal situation in this one-reel farce. The story depends for its fun upon the development of the plot, and is a good example of its class of photoplay. George Clarke, Francis Joyner, John Sherman, Kempton Greene, June Daye and Adelaide Hayes form an effective cast.

THE RIVALS (Vim), April 28.—Robert Burns and Walter Stull pursue the heroine of this one-reel comedy with such vigor that it is a wonder enough of the lady is left at the finish to serve for her identification. The expression "knockabout" comedy will not cover this case; "slam-about" or "catapult comedy" comes nearer the mark. Those who like their fun fired at them in broadsides, will furnish an excellent target for "The Rivals."

TERRY'S TEA PARTY (Vitagraph), April 28.—With John T. Kelly to head the cast, this one-reel comedy is a strong reminder of the Harrigan & Hart style of Irish humor. George McManus, the author, has been liberal with the laughs, and Kate Price, Jewell Hunt, Doc Donohue, Lawrence Semon, James McCabe and Hughey Mack support Mr. Kelly with evident relish for the task.

BADGERED (Selig), April 29.—There is much good entertainment in this one-reel drama of which William M. Henry is the author. The hero and his sweetheart turn the tables so cleverly on a number of scheming politicians that the spectator will enjoy the proceedings hugely. James Bradbury, Grace Darmond, Harry Mestayer, Al W. Fulson and Edith Johnson are the principals in a competent cast.

General Film Company Specials.

THE STRANGE CASE OF MARY PAGE, NO. 14, "Recrimination" (Essanay), April 24.—The fate of the murderer of Pollock is strongly intimated in this instalment of the Essanay serial. Langdon succeeds in bringing Bates into the courtroom just as Chester has finished his testimony, that he heard a shot and saw Bates running down the alley, the night Pollock was killed. Bates turns on Chester and accuses him of having killed Pollock.

THE MILLIONAIRE PLUNGER (No. 5 of "The Social Pirates"—Kalem), April 24.—A review of this picture was printed in the issue of April 29, page 821. The fifth number of the George Bronson Howard serial shows Mona and Mary assisting a laundress in their employ to get back the savings that have been taken from her by worthless investments. The photoplay is interesting and amusing.

THE WOMAN WHO DID NOT CARE (Selig), April 24.—The career of the woman in this three-reel photoplay, written by Chas. J. Buckley, is a succession of dramatic episodes. To prevent her little girl from being taken from her, she swears her husband is not the father of the child. Years later she sells society gossip to a blackmailing sheet and nearly wrecks her daughter's happiness. The story holds the attention, and is acted with skill by Eugenie Besserer, Edith Johnson and Harry Mestayer.

CELESTE (Biograph), April 25.—Unusually attractive locations in a fishing village on the California shore are an important factor in this two-part drama, carefully produced by Walter Coyle and well acted by Vola Smith, Jack Mulhall and Charles Perley. Reviewed in the Moving Picture World of April 22.

BLADE O' GRASS (Edison), April 25.—Leonie Flugrath and Pat O'Malley are the principal actors in this three-reel drama by William Addison Lathrop. The story is pleasing, the heroine being a child of nature, brought up in the depths of the Maine forests. Chas. Sutton, Mabel Dwight, Mrs. Wallace Erskine, Grace Morrison, Guido Colucci, F. Famamoto and Joe Bingham complete the cast.

THE LITTLE SAMARITAN (Essanay), April 25.—The clever acting of Joyce Fair in this two-reel photoplay makes its simple story of a little girl's goodness of heart full of appealing interest. Thomas Commerford plays the old grandfather with a Dickens touch, and Fred Malatesta and Francis Raymond are well cast.

THE SPRING CHICKEN (Biograph), April 26.—A three-reel farce comedy directed by Del Henderson, with Dave Morris, Gertrude Bambrick, Bud Ross and Louise Owen in the cast. The fantastic story is made amusing by clever acting and odd bits of incidental business. A review appeared in the issue of April 22d.

PLAYTHINGS OF THE GODS (Lubin), April 27.—A review of this three-reel drama is printed on another page of this issue.

THE BROKEN PROMISE (Knickerbocker), April 28.—The present craze for classic dancing among society women is the leading motive in this three-reel Star Feature photoplay. The heroine turns her accomplishment to good account by securing an engagement at $1,000 a night, and earning the money to save her father from bankruptcy. The story is of fair average and is acted satisfactorily by Ann Drew, Joyce Shannon, George Larkin, Henry Stanley, Mollie McConnell, Daniel Gilfeather and Frank Watson.

THE DANGER LINE (Essanay), April 29.—Elizabeth Burbridge, Edward Arnold and Richardson Cotton have the leading role in this three-reel screen drama. Life "behind the scenes" is the theme and a neatly worked out romance is the result. Many of the situations are familiar, but the experiences of a young woman who is trying to "break into the business," have an unfailing interest. The production and the acting are of good quality.

THE MAN HUNT (Vitagraph), April 29.—A novel by Arthur Train furnished the groundwork for this three-reel photoplay. By all means, let the good work go on! The plot may have no foundation in fact, but it is a novel and an entertaining one, nevertheless. The interest starts with the opening of the drama, and keeps on moving all the time the reels are being unwound. A military company is used during the action, and the entire production is impressive. James Morrison, Robert Gaillard, Billie Billings, Marguerite Blake, E. A. Turner and Raymond Walburn comprise an excellent cast. Paul Scardon made the production.

Fox Film Corporation.

A MAN OF SORROW, April 23.—A five-reel melodrama from the stage play "Hoodman Blind." It is a moving story ably enough put on and makes an offering that the spectator will watch with interest. A longer review will be found elsewhere in this issue.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

PLAYING WITH FIRE (Popular Plays and Players), April 17.—A strong sex drama, written by Aaron Hoffman and directed by Francis J. Grandon, with Olga Petrova in the leading role. The picture was exceedingly well directed and intelligently acted. It should prove a popular attraction. A review appears on another page of this issue.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 69 (Gaumont), April 26.—A diversified number, containing many scenes of interest, including dynamite blasting, a railroad wreck, destruction of bad eggs by the government, auto races, children's drills, etc.

BUNGLING BILL, DOCTOR (Vogue), April 30.—Paddy McGuire, Arthur Moon and Rena Rogers have the principal roles in this picture which is of the slapstick sort that many audiences rejoice in. There does not seem to be much head nor tail to the plot of the play, as is often the case in slapstick comedies, and considerable of the action takes place in a hospital, where Bungling Bill is hired as an orderly after trying to burglarize a house, and in falling in love with a pretty nurse, proceeds to cause a rough house.

OUT FOR THE COUNT (Vogue), May 2.—A comic number in which a pair of tramps invade society, through the medium of a martimonial agency. One of them poses as a count. This plot has been used frequently; it is handled here with a fair degree of success.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 34 (Gaumont), May 3.—This number takes us to Yosemite National Park, where we visit the principal points of interest. A very interesting number of great scenic beauty. On the same reel with a cartoon comedy by Harry Palmer, entitled "The Escapade of Estelle."

THE SKILFUL SLEIGHERS STRATEGY (Falstaff), May 6.—An entertaining light comedy in which a young couple bent on matrimony against the wishes of the young lady's guardian manage an elopement very cleverly, when, on his way to take her to boarding school, the auto hired by her guardian sticks in the snow, and her sweetheart ready with a sleigh and team of horses rescues her. Some beautiful snow scenes add to the enjoyment of this picture.

ALL FOR NUTTING (Beauty), May 7.—This will be found rather amusing in spite of the fact that the star of the comedy is a salesman for a casket manufacturing firm with his mind intent on the undertaking business. The subject is not interesting, and we doubt if the picture would find much favor except for the comical personality of the star, Orral Humphrey.

BUNGLING BILL'S DREAM (Vogue), May 7.—In this number of the Bungling Bill series Bill has a dream in which he imagines himself transported to the kingdom of Neptune. He falls in love with the pretty daughter of King Neptune, and has a fight with her lover. The picture is fairly interesting.

CAPTAIN KIDD (Falstaff), May 8.—Riley Chamberlain's impersonation of the uncle who generously signed over his millions to an ungrateful nephew and went to live on a house boat, is pleasing. The nephew fails to provide for the wants of the generous relative who becomes obliged to dig oysters for a living. A young woman sees him digging up a box out of the sand, visits him and learns the situation, and finally starts a report that the old man has dug a Captain Kidd's treasure from the sea beach. Some children figure in the story believing him to be the real Captain Kidd. The nephew gets taken in on the treasure box, for after returning to his uncle what he has given him in anticipation of more personal gain, he finds that the box contains only rotten oysters.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

A BROKEN GENIUS (American), April 27.—In this entertaining three-part drama Edward Coxen plays the role of a struggling artist whose wife (Lizette Thorne) has little interest in anything except social frivolities, and furthermore pleads neglect as a reason for turning her affections to another man. Upon arriving at the next town with the wife of the artist the man is arrested for a crime committed some time before. Later a child is born to Karl and his wife, and after a tragic scene in which the convict escapes and dies in the home of the woman he has wronged, the husband and wife decide to start life anew. A very interesting production.

UNLUCKY LUKE (Mustang), April 28.—One of the best comedies of the season. It is in two parts and is clean, wholesome and distinctly funny. The cast consists principally of Frank Borzage in the role of Luke, Jack Richardson as Seth, Luke's pard, and Anna Little as Lucy, the new school teacher. A full review of this production appears on another page of this issue.

THE QUALITY OF FAITH (Mutual Masterpicture de luxe), April 30.—This five-part drama made at the Gaumont studios feature Gertrude Robinson and Alexander Gaden, with a supporting cast consisting of Lucile Taft, John Reinhard, H. W. Pemberton, James Levering and others. The story of the picture deals primarily with the labor question. A large number of supers have been employed in the mob scenes, and there some scenes of real merit in the picture; but on the whole the production suffers severely through incompetent direction. The action of the play fails to please through a lack of spontaneity.

PIERRE DE BRISSAC THE BRAZEN (American), May 1.—An excellent two-part comedy featuring George Field, who as Pierre de Brissac makes one of the most delightfully comic crook types that could be imagined. The play has been cleverly arranged, and the sub-titles add greatly to the comedy of the production. In the absence from home of a young couple who have quarreled, Pierre and his partner take advantage of a key left under the front door mat to burglarize the house and get a square meal. The contents of a couple of notes left by the wife for her husband accelerate matters. The climax comes when the husband returning home, is reported to the police as a burglar by Pierre, and is taken into police custody, where he remains until the next morning. This will please children or adults.

THE WEAKLING (Thanhouser), May 2.—A two-reel subject, by Lloyd Lonergan, featuring Harris Gordon, Barbara Gilroy and Thos. Curran. This takes the familiar theme of a weakling and a bully and makes a story of strong appeal out of it. The former, who has been imposed on by the bully all his life, rebels when the honor of the girl he loves is threatened. He faces a revolver in the hands of the bully and breaks him down by an exhibition of moral force. The scenes are taken chiefly in a small town. The number is better than the average.

LYING LIPS (Masterpicture de luxe, No. 98), May 4.—A five-reel subject by Julian Louis La Mothe, carefully produced under direction of Edward Sloman. Winnifred Greenwood appears to advantage in the part of Emily, a Broadway actress, who forsakes the stage to marry an artist. The latter is capably portrayed by Franklin Ritchie. The story has some few intense dramatic moments; it is true to life and strong in natural development. The social atmosphere is pleasing and certain scenes, like the burning of the acress' dress, stand out memorably. Eugenie Ford is pleasing as Wanda, the extravagant sister, who sells her love to pay her debts. The heart interest is quite strong, and the ending a happy one.

THE SPIRIT OF '61 (Thanhouser), May 4.—A three-reel number, by Emmet Mixx featuring J. H. Gilmour, Grace DeCarlton and George Marlo. Mr. Gilmour plays the part of a war veteran who has become a grocer in a mining town. The superintendent of the mine is an arrogant fellow and a labor war is threatened. The old grocer makes a personal appeal to the mine owner, in Denver, whose life he had saved on the battlefield. The owner comes and settles the strike. A large cast is employed, and there is a love story between the grocer's granddaughter and the young mail carrier. The plan to release the car of dynamite adds some suspense to the production, which is quite strong in interest.

THE SECRET OF THE SUBMARINE (Mutual Special Feature, American), May 8.—The first two-reel chapter of this new serial, by Russell E. Smith, presents the characters and theme in an intensely interesting manner. The girl's father has invented a means by which a submarine may procure air through the water itself. A Japanese spy, and two Russian spies, are after the secret. A real submarine is pictured in action, both from inside and outside. The Jap spy secrets himself on board, during the initial test, and escapes at the close, leaving the aperture open so those on board will drown. The cast is a strong one, including Thomas Chatterton, Juanita Hansen, Lamar Johnstone, Hylda Hollis, Wm. Tedmarsh and others.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

THE HEART OF NORA FLYNN (Lasky), April 24.—Marie Doro deserves praise for her remarkable work in this production and the way she portrays her part. A good cast is in her support. The story is excellent and the climax dramatic. Settings and photography are at all times high class. For an extended review of this feature see page 984 of last week's issue.

HIKING WITH THE IGOROTS (Burton Holmes Travalogues), May 8.—Burton Holmes and his party visit the Land of the Head-Hunters in the Luzon mountains, where they follow picturesque trails, stopping to study the natives along the way. Altogether a creditable contribution to the Travelogues being issued by Paramount.

PARAMOUNT PICTOGRAPHS (Paramount), May.—The most memorable subject in this issue is in the Better Babies department, showing the danger of controlling young children through fear. Henry Reuterdahl's study of the American navy again indicates a lack of preparedness; the lessons in swimming are especially appropriate at this time of the year, whereas curiosity about the private life of actreses is met by pictures of Marie Doro at her country home.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE NEWS NO. 31, 1916 (Pathe), April 15).—Interesting items of this number are the launching of H. M. A. S. Brisbane at Sydney, Australia; the opening of the baseball season at Philadelphia and New York; twenty Apache Indians of the party that trailed Geronimo in 1886 employed as scouts in Mexico, and various other scenes touching on the Mexican situation.

PATHE NEWS NO. 32, 1916 (Pathe), April 19.—The U. S. soldiers in Cuba, and Morro Castle from which the surrounding country can be easily scanned afford several interesting items in this issue. We are also shown a closeup of "Wild Bob" Burman, who was killed in a recent auto race, giving also glimpses of the race, and a number of other interesting incidents of importance, including the training of cadets at Charleston, S. C.

PATHE NEWS NO. 33, 1916 (Pathe), April 22.—This issue contains views at the Actors' Home where a reception is being held, Mayor Mitchell throwing the first ball at opening of baseball at Philadelphia, the National Guards rushed to quell strike riot at Hastings, N. Y., and the latest American fashions, in addition to various other items of interest.

SIBERIA THE VAST UNKNOWN, NO. 5, April 22.—This installment of an interesting series brings us to the fur market of Pentilayka, showing how the market opens with a religious ceremony conducted by Russian priests. We also see the Eskimos on their way to town with sleds drawn by teams of reindeer or dogs, and sometimes afoot pulling their heavy laden sleds of furs behind them. On the same reel with "Glimpses of San Francisco."

GLIMPSES OF SAN FRANCISCO (April 22).—On the same reel with the foregoing, gives views of monuments, public buildings, etc., in this beautiful western city.

HOW BIRDS FEED THEIR YOUNG (Pathecolor), April 29.—A remarkably interesting bird study showing the Brown Linnet, the long-tailed Tomtit, the Hedge Sparrow, the Chaffinch, and the Wren feeding their young. The views of our feathered friends have all been photographed at close range and are most charming. On the same reel with "Towns of Tunis."

TOWNS OF TUNIS (Pathe), April 29.—On the same reel with the above this will be found intensely interesting as a study of the towns and primitive customs of this portion of Northern Africa. The views in and about Kairouan, the "holy city," are of especial interest.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

THE IRON CLAW NO. 9 (Pathe), April 24.—"Arrows of Hate" is the title of this episode which is one of the best of the series thus far. Legar tries to incriminate the Laughing Mask by placing in the hands of persons murdered presumably through his influence notes purported to be written by the Laughing Mask. Margery takes a hand in saving this mysterious personage from the police and for her pains is again kidnapped. The arrows of hate are arrows charged with poison with which a Japanese servant of Legar's tries to do away with Davy and Margery.

CIVILIZATION'S CHILD (Kay-Bee), April 23.—A very intense tragedy of noble purpose worked out with admirable harmony and fine interpretation to the end.

THE CHILDREN OF THE HOUSE (Fine Arts), April 30.—A good story spoiled by the introduction of antiquated business for the purpose of stretching it to the limit.

THE BEGGAR OF CAWNPORE (Kay-Bee), April 30.—A dreary play of the drug habit, with some redemption of beautiful scenes.

THE NO-GOOD GUY (Kay-Bee), May 7.—Amusing from start to finish, a sure winner, with Willy Collier at his best.

THE GOOD BAD-MAN (Fine Arts), May 7.—The story of a cheerful outlaw, who is self-outlawed and not really bad at all. An unusual and entertaining characterization by Douglas Fairbanks

Universal Film Mfg. Co.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 17, April 26.—Boston running races, a New York fire, polo in California, war relief fetes and interesting scenes on the Mexican border are featured in this number.

MR. BUDDY BRIGGS' BURGLAR (L-KO), May 7.—A comedy number of a slightly burlesque sort, featuring Dave Morris, Gertrude Selby, Reggie Morris and others. The flirtatious husband is entertaining friends when his wife returns and he pretends one of them is a burglar. The number has no great novelty, but is fairly strong.

POTTS BUNGLES AGAIN (Nestor), May 8.—A pleasing comedy number, written by Louis J. Hubene, featuring Betty Compson, Eddie Lyons, Ed Burns and others. The girl is made a police officer. The reporter writes a josh story about her, but afterward apologizes when she captures a thief. Good light comedy.

WHEN A WIFE WORRIES (Imp), May 9.—A comedy number, by Hal Clotworthy, featuring Jane Bernoudy, Victor Potel and a clever baby. The young husband tries to find the wishbone of a cuckoo for his child to cut its teeth on. The situations are quite novel and amusing.

VIRGINIA (Rex), May 9.—A number written by Ida M. Evans, featuring Cleo Madison, Edward Hearne, Wm. V. Mong and others. This is a story of a girl who rebels at her squalid surroundings in a tenement section and succeeds in making something of herself. The scenes are somewhat sordid, but there is a good moral to the story and on the whole is quite strong.

THE GO-BETWEEN (Imp), May 10.—A number, by Samuel Greiner, featuring Wm. Garwood, Violet Mersereau and Jean Dumar. Rosemary secretly loves her old friend, Bill, and nurses him through typhoid when his own choice fears to do so. Very slight in plot and not strongly handled, but at the same time pleasing in tone.

NEVER LIE TO YOUR WIFE (Nestor), May 12.—A comedy by Al E. Christie, featuring Harry Rattenberry, Ray Gallagher, Billie Rhodes and Stella Adams. The two men pretend to be ill and attend a poker party while the wives are at the opera. The place is raided and they are followed home by the police. This makes an entertaining number, handled in this company's characteristic way.

A WIFE AT RANSOME (Joker), May 13.—A laughable low comedy number by Allen Curtis, featuring Gale Henry, Wm. Franey, Lillian Peacock and Milburne Moranti. This pictures an elopement under difficulties. It is a highly successful number from the low comedy standpoint, some of the knockabout scenes being particularly good.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials.

THE FINAL CONQUEST (Universal Special Feature), April 24.—The 20th installment of the "Graft" series. This number witnesses the death of Sanford Stone, last of the conspirators, and shows Mayor Harding in an exciting roundup of the gas house gang. It also brings about the engagement of the mayor and Dorothy. No reference is made to her former love affair, which was disrupted by the changes in the cast. The story as a whole has been somewhat jumbled for this same reason, but the individual episodes have been very entertaining.

A HUNTRESS OF MEN (Red Feather Photoplay), May 8.—An entertaining five-reel offering, adapted for the screen by Catherine Carr from a story by J. Vere Tyler. Mary Fuller, Joseph W. Gerard and Sidney Bracy play the leads. The former appears as a social favorite, who has her pick and choice of men. Fleming, portrayed by Mr. Gerard, is a mining man, who determines to tame her. He makes an advance so bold that she marries him at once. Then comes the clash of wills, which ends only after the girl learns that she really loves him. The settings are very attractive and Miss Fuller wears innumerable stunning gowns. Not a story of any great action, but a brightly pictured social study, well handled.

PEG O' THE RING, NO. 1, "The Leopard's Mark" (Universal Special Feature), May 8.—This is the first two-reel episode of a new serial, to run in fifteen installments. Grace Cunard appears in the double role of mother and daughter. The mother is clawed by an angry leopard prior to the daughter's death. The theme of prenatal influence is effectively employed, the girl being subject to mad impulses at certain intervals, when she scratches and tears everything in sight. This comes as something of a surprise and gives a strong punch to the first episode. Francis Ford, a half brother to the girl, by the same father, falls in love with her without knowing her history. The circus scenes are well staged. A strong opening number.

THE GREAT SMASH (L-KO), May 10.—This three-reel offering is very successful for a purely comic production. It is a big step in advance for this type of eccentric comedies, in which the characters are really "caricatures" with human impulses of an exaggerated sort. Ray Griffith, Alice Howell and others appear. The fun starts at the very beginning and is maintained at high speed throughout. There is no vulgarity, except perhaps in the kicking scenes, but these are harmless. The offering is one that will appeal to all observers and shows what can be done by sticking to straight humorous action. The events of the last reel are both thrilling and extremely funny. An excellent comic number.

THE CAPITAL PRIZE (Imp), May 12.—A two-reel number, produced by Edwin Stevens, featuring Harry Benham, Tina Marshall and Joseph Granby. This is an entertaining little comedy-drama, in spite of the fact that in some particulars it is not very convincing. If the girl had won the lottery by her own scheming, instead of accidentally as it appears, then the denouement would have been stronger. It seems too much of a coincidence that she should win the ticket accidentally and be a secret service agent at the same time. The opening of the vault by the piano keys is a novel feature. This is rather unusual in some respects.

A FIGHT FOR LOVE (Bison), May 13.—This two-reel number, by W. B. Pearson, pictures scenes from the organization known as the Camorra. G. Raymond Nye, James Conway, Roberta Wilson and others appear. The headquarters of the gang are shown, the hero being a member. A detective, instructed to clean out the organization, arrests the hero on a fake charge. The detective's daughter is then kidnapped by the gang, and the hero frees her, fighting the organization to do so. The wholesale shooting scenes are slightly overdone, but there is good suspense in the situation as a whole. The offering is a fairly strong one of the sensational type and the incidents are said to be based on fact.

HEARST-VITAGRAPH NEWS PICTORIAL NO. 33, 1916 (Vitagraph), April 25.—Sending supplies into Mexico; opening harbor at Port Arthur, Ontario; Serbian waifs in Switzerland; strike at Hastings, N. Y.; new defense craft, Lynn, Mass.; street skating rink, Chicago; San Francisco High School Cadets; race meet, Tia Juana, Mexico; driving armored motor across the continent; razing buildings at San Francisco Fair; Patriots' Day Parade, Lexington, Mass.; President Wilson at ball game, Washington; Harvard-Princeton boat race.

HEARST-VITAGRAPH NEWS PICTORIAL NO. 34 (Vitagraph), April 28.—Scenes in Chihuahua City, Mexico; Fifth Avenue Easter parade; Atlantic City Easter parade; motorcycle run from Boston to Worcester, Mass.; opening of baseball season, Chicago; "Swat the Mosquito!" New York; Los Angeles women drill; New York marketman gives food to poor; U. S. warships at San Diego; historic house collapses in Brooklyn; President Wilson votes and delivers an address at Princeton.

World Film

"The Feast of Life" (World-Paragon). As pointed out in a review printed elsewhere in this issue, these five reels are made interesting, because of the appearance of Clara Kimball Young, because of a reasonably diverting romantic story and because of unusual and picturesque locations photographed in Cuba. The picture is very well acted by Miss Young, Paul Capellani, Doris Kenyon and Robert Frazer.

Miscellaneous.

A WOMAN WILLS (Sun), State Rights, April.—A five-reel French production of sound story interest and artistic workmanship. War and political intrigue form the background for a picture in which a courageous woman is the chief figure. A review appears elsewhere in The World.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"A STRANGER IN NEW YORK" (Selig).

Following the policy of making each release through General Film Company better than the preceding one, Wm. N. Selig announces for release on Monday, May 8, the Hoyt farce-comedy, "A Stranger in New York," scenario by Gilson Willets and featuring the world-famous comedian, Otis Harlan. T. N. Heffron produced this feature comedy, and a versatile cast of players supports Mr. Harlan, who brings to the screen the character role of "A Stranger," in which he earned an enviable reputation on two continents when "A Stranger in New York" first appeared as a stage production.

Thousands of lovers of the late Charles Hoyt plays, who enjoyed "A Stranger in New York" when it first appeared years ago, will hasten with their friends to the motion picture theaters to see the picture play version of this uproarious comedy. Mr. Willets has retained all the atmosphere and every one of the ludicrous situations carried in the famous comedy. Mr. Harlan has brought to the screen all the successful character delineations which scored for him such a wonderful success in the original play.

Scene from "A Stranger in New York" (Selig).

A. Stranger, backed by a Chicago millionaire, goes to New York and cleans up a fortune in Prune Juice speculation. How the Prune Juice stock breaks to a jitney per share, how the real millionaire whom A. Stranger has impersonated arrives most unhappily on the scene, and how A. Stranger, formerly an itinerant book agent, wins the daughter of a New York society leader, contribute to interest in this production. No expense was spared to clothe "A Stranger in New York" with beautiful and elaborate scenic effects.

NETTER ESTABLISHES EXCHANGE IN PHILADELPHIA.

Leon D. Netter, the former general manager of Lesser's Pacific coast enterprises, has established the Masterpiece Film Attractions, and, in partnership with Sol L. Lesser, will operate in the Pennsylvania and New Jersey territory on an extensive scale. Spacious offices have been opened at 1325 Vine street, Philadelphia, Pa. Among the productions now being booked are the De Luxe edition of "The Spoilers," "Neptune's Daughter" and "Cabiria." Mr. Netter has just purchased the L. & R. Feature Film Company, of Washington, D. C., and will consolidate both exchanges into one, and handle all business out of Philadelphia.

REALISM IN "THE SECRET OF THE SUBMARINE."

Bound to a post in the cellar of a bomb-maker's house when a bomb tossed within a few feet of her explodes, is one of the thrills recently "enjoyed" by Miss Juanita Hansen, who as Cleo Burke in "The Secret of the Submarine" is the object of continual machinations by a group of relentless conspirators. Miss Hansen proves she is a regular "do or die" heroine, too, for Director Sargent is a fiend for realism and as a result the role of a leading woman in his company is not, by any stretch of the imagination, a "peaches and cream" existence.

When the scenes were being taken, showing Miss Hansen, or rather Cleo Burke, lured to the home of Stephansky, the bomb-maker, Lamar Johnstone playing the part of Gerald Morton was very careful in "handling" Miss Hansen. "Hey," shouted Director Sargent, "what's the idea of this Waldorf greeting? Let's get in on the action like this." And he proceeded to show his idea of capturing a dear sweet thing and binding her away for future reference. Miss Hansen thereafter was properly dragged up to a trap door, her limbs bound and then tumbled down stairs with about as much consideration as is ordinarily accorded a bag of coal by luggers working for bread-line positions.

But Miss Hansen didn't object; in fact, urged them to do their utmost and they did. In the scene showing the exploding bomb and the house sent skyward, it is a miracle that she escaped unhurt for the acme of realism is surely reached.

"NOSEY NED IN TROUBLE."

Harry Palmer's Cartoon Comics, which split a reel of film with "See America First," are enjoying great vogue because of the instant popularity of Nosey Ned and Estelle. In the release of May 10, Nosey Ned is featured. This time he is inveigled into being arbiter at a ball game, and the result may be imagined from the title, "As an Umpire Nosey Ned Is An Onion." On the same reel, which comes from the Gaumont laboratories, are entertaining pictures of Atlanta, Ga.

"THE GRIP OF CRIME" (Universal).

Thomas Jefferson, son of the late Joseph Jefferson, and little Lina Baskette, will soon co-star in "The Grip of Crime," an Italian drama written by Calder Johnstone and produced by George Cochrane at Universal City. The story deals with the activities of the Italian Mafia and blackmailers, and little Lina Baskette as Santa Marro plays an important part in freeing her grandfather from implication in the crimes charged against him.

Lina Baskette is only eight years old. She is a beautiful dark-haired, brown-eyed child who has loved music ever since she was able to lisp "mamma" through her baby lips, and her dancing is the little one's own interpretation of the music as she hears it.

Little Lina enjoys the distinction of being the only member of the Universal forces who has a contract for six years—a long period so far as motion picture agreements are concerned. As a rule a contract is made for a term of one year, or two years, but no one in the film world has been "signed up" for a period of six years. When Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Company, saw Lina dance, he was astounded at her truly artistic performance, and suggested to Vice-President Davis that she be engaged for five years. "Make it six," said Mr. Davis, and Mr. Laemmle agreed.

Scene from "The Grip of Crime" (Universal).

Miss Baskette is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank E. Baskette, of San Mateo, Cal. She will be educated privately by her parents while working at Universal City.

"THE ISLE OF LOVE" (Gaumont).

What promises to be a most unusual photoplay is Gaumont's "The Isle of Love," which will be released as a Mutual Masterpicture, de Luxe Edition, May 15. In this production Miss Gertrude McCoy appears for the first time as a Gaumont star. The drama, which was written by Paul M. Bryan, was found so suitable for Miss McCoy that she was taken from another Gaumont feature, despite the fact that a number of scenes had already been made. There is a popular song called "The Isle of Love." While it suggested the theme, the story is an independent creation.

"The Isle of Love" has been produced at Jacksonville under the direction of Edwin Middleton. As there are a number of scenes purporting to take place on an island near the equator in the Pacific Ocean, the tropical vegetation along the sea coast near Jacksonville provided some wonderful pictures as a background for the splendid acting of Miss McCoy, Earl O. Schenck, her leading man, and the other members of the cast.

The story is that of a light opera prima donna who flirts with a young sea captain, not knowing of the great love she would arouse. After she had humiliated him many times, a strange freak of fate casts them ashore together upon an uninhabited island. Here the young man, exercising the right vested in him as a sea captain, forcibly marries the girl. How love comes into her life forms a most remarkable climax. Miss Iva Shepard has an important role. Others in the cast are Scene from "The Isle of Love" (Gaumont).

Robert Clugston, W. J. Butler, James Levering and Miss Mathilde Baring.

"THE OVERCOAT" (American).

"The Overcoat," by Forrest Halsey, is now being filmed in five reels, from a scenario by J. Edward Hungerford, under the direction of Rea Berger. This piece of fiction is rich in historic interest, as it reproduces correctly a famous dance hall of San Francisco's famous "Barbary Coast," which is now extinct. In one night scene there are nearly two hundred people. The cast includes Thea Mitchell, William Stowell, Perry Banks, Clarence Burton and Warren Ellsworth. Release date is to be announced in the near future by the Mutual.

RUPERT JULIAN IN "NAKED HEARTS."

When "Naked Hearts" is released on the Blue Bird program, May 29, the star will be Rupert Julian, who wrote the story and directed the production. Olga Printzlau provided the scenario, but it was Mr. Julian who created the narrative from Tennyson's "Maud." The work is done in five reels, but really amounts to two separate presentations, as three clever children—Zoe Bech, Gordon Griffith and George Hupp—carry the first reel with the childhood story of the characters played by Francella Billington, Mr. Julian and Jack Holt. Miss Billington has been announced as the star of the piece, but General Manager M. H. Hoffman, of Blue Bird, has arranged with Mr. Julian to become a permanent star in Blue Bird productions, and will use "Naked Hearts" to introduce him. Miss Billington will, however, be featured in the announcements.

"THE ORDEAL OF ELIZABETH" (Vitagraph).

"The Ordeal of Elizabeth," a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature to be released May 15, is a fitting vehicle for the clever little actress, Lillian Walker. Miss Walker is supported by Evart Overton and a strong cast of Vitigraph players. In the title role Miss Walker's work stands distinctly as that of a finished artist. The direction and photographic effects throughout are excellent and help to make the picture a marked success.

Among the clever and unique ideas contained in the drama is a sub-title thrown upon the screen which states: "The bud blossoms into the flower." Then a rosebud opens and a little baby is seen. The baby fades into a full-blown rose, which, in turn, fades into Miss Walker's delightful vision.

Another original idea is found when Miss Walker is seated at a triple-mirror dressing table. Her reflection at first is cast in the three mirrors. Then a sub-title reads, "Past, Present and Future." The first mirror then shows a picture of the man who she has married in her foolishness, the middle mirror still shows her reflection and the last mirrow shows that of the man with whom she is in love. Gradually these fade and again she is seen in all three.

The exterior scenes are of great beauty and it was necessary for Director Wilfrid North to take his company to Jacksonville, Florida, in order to secure a number of the exteriors.

In this production Miss Walker does some of her best work, while Evart Overton plays his part with that distinct master-touch which has already acquired for him popularity in the motion picture world.

STRANGE ACCIDENT THRILLS DIRECTOR.

Without doubt the most unique experience ever recorded as happening during the production of a motion picture comes from the Wharton Studio, at Ithaca, N. Y. In one of the scenes of the new spirit drama, "The Mysteries of Myra," the star, Jean Sothern, visits the laboratory of Dr. Alden, the psychic investigator. She seated herself before a huge hypnotizing machine. The lights were dimmed in the laboratory, the switch was turned, and to the soothing purr of an electric motor the huge wheel with its myriad mirrors glancing, refracting and blending the lights, began to revolve at high speed. It was, indeed, a tense moment. After a proper length of time, Dr. Alden (Howard Estabrook), was directed to bring Miss Sothern back to earth again. To the great amazement of all, Miss Sothern failed to carry out her part. Again and again Leo Wharton called his direction to her which she seemingly failed to hear. Finally, Estabrook shook her violently. She opened her eyes slowly, and after a moment proceeded with the scene. She had actually been hypnotized.

Scene from "Mysteries of Myra" (International).

The hynotizing machine used in the scene was scientifically constructed. In fact, the same as is employed in all modern laboratories of psychological research. The incident aroused much curiosity and speculation among the professors and students of psychology of Cornell University at Ithaca.

NEW PARAMOUNT-BRAY ANIMATED CARTOON BY CLARENCE RIGBY.

Mince pie and mock turtle soup—a Lucullus feast—reposing on the pantry shelf in the pages of the family cook-book, started the rampant journey through filmland of the heroine of "Miss Nanny Goat on the Rampage." This is the nineteenth release of the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoons, and the drawings are by Clarence Rigby.

Immediately after consuming the delicacies Miss Nanny Goat starts on her rampant journey. The following scene shows her taking snuff and sneezing her head off. Butting into the portrait of Sir Walter Raleigh she gets the worst of it and is hurled out of the window after a brief but memorable encounter with a revolving mirror. Her leap into the open brings her into sharp but violent contact with a dog in the back yard.

Scene from "Miss Nanny Goat on a Rampage" (Paramount-Bray).

During a lull in hostilities Miss Nanny Goat digs a box of rat poison out of an ash barrel and throws it into the dog-house, then waits to see the result of her action. She does not have to wait long, but immediately plunges out of the dog-house with a bulldog fastened to her horns. Soon the dog is hurled out of the picture and Miss Nanny follows in hot pursuit. Pursued and pursuer rush past a fence carrying a poster advertisement of a suffragist. Pausing to laugh, the goat begins to eat away part of the poster until a portion of a ballet girl is revealed and appears attached to what remains of the suffragist.

In passing by a deacon glances at the mutilated poster and faints out of the picture. A bill-poster observing the results of the goat's luncheon becomes enraged, throws a tub of paste on the goat, and Miss Nanny runs away with the tub on her head.

The remainder of Miss Nanny's adventures include a hasty tumble into the water, a sail in the tub and a narrow escape from drowning. She encounters a child whose yarn dress is completely unraveled as the goat nibbles and runs away. Near the scene of an excavation Miss Nanny comes into close contact with a stick of dynamite. Having discovered the invader a workman strikes both goat and dynamite with his spade. An explosion follows and Miss Nanny goes sailing into the air on a moving cloud, finally eating her way to one with a silver lining.

SECOND REEL SHOWS SCOPE OF "REEL LIFE."

Owing to its fine photography and the diversity of its subjects, the new Gaumont single-reel—"Reel Life," the Mutual Film Magazine—has met with favorable comment wherever there has been an advance showing for branch managers and exhibitors. The first release, that of May 7, showed the life of a butterfly, the activities of an alligator farm, and skilful manoeuvres of Belgian cavalry. The second reel to be released in this series maintains the same balance, and is a tribute to the editorial skill exercised by C. M. White in preparing "Reel Life" subjects.

"THE ABANDONMENT" (American).

Director Donalds MacDonald, of the American Film Company, Inc., is nearing completion of the filming of "The Abandonment," a powerful story by Kenneth B. Clarks. This is another of the series of prominent fiction to be adapted to film by President Hutchinson. Helene Rosson and E. Forrest Taylor have the important roles in this vitally interesting story of a prominent physician who becomes a tramp. The theme, which is strikingly original, is carefully conceived and well directed. This five-reel masterpicture is to be released by Mutual in the near future.

"AN ELEPHANT'S GRATITUDE" (Selig).

There is said to be an increased demand by exhibitors of motion pictures for wild animal comedies and dramas in one-reel lengths. "An Elephant's Gratitude," a Selig Jungle-Zoo wild animal drama, released Saturday, May 6, through General Film service, is said to be a production entirely out of the ordinary. The intelligence of elephants is proven in this picture from the fact that a huge animal enacts one of the leading roles.

John Blythe and his daughter Ellen live at the edge of the jungle. Kasu, an animal trainer, abuses an elephant. He is reprimanded by Ellen and vows revenge. Later he kidnaps the young woman and leaves her in a hut in the jungle. The elephant, grateful to Ellen for her kindness, follows her trail, breaks into the hut, unties the bonds securing the girl, lifts her to his back and carries her home safely.

It is a wonderful performance and one which will be most interesting to every one. Harry Lonsdale and Edith Johnson star in "An Elephant's Gratitude," which was produced by Thomas Santschi.

GAUMONT PREPARING TO MEET DEMANDS OF PARKS.

In less than a month there will be a great demand for three-reel features by amusement parks and summer theaters. The Gaumont Company has recognized the importance of supplying photoplays of this length. Beginning late in May Gaumont three-reel features will be seen on the screen, in addition to the Mutual Masterpictures which it will continue to release. The magnitude of the Gaumont operations reflects the impetus given production by the recent visit to America of Mr. Leon Gaumont, head of the Societe des Etablissements Gaumont.

"A COURTESAN" (American).

"A Courtesan," a five-reel subject being filmed under the direction of Arthur Maude at the Santa Barbara studios of the American Film Company, Inc., is a story replete with pathos, heart interest and dramatic situations, with artistic touches which add much to the value of the picture. The cast includes Eugenie Forde, Nell Franzen, Hal Cooley, Charles Wheelock, Al Fordyce and William Carroll. This masterpiece will be released in the near future on the Mutual schedule.

"THE JESTER" (Essanay).

Here is a love story with a new angle. The girl doesn't reform her man and marry him, after sympathetic care. She ridicules him, having plenty of chances to do so as she is a reporter and he is the dissolute son of a millionaire whose escapades are many and not unaccompanied by a certain amount of publicity.

The girl calls him a jester and thinks he's a joke. He discovers she's right and, of course, she begins to like him after that. Their paths run together much and they are the principals in several thrilling experiences, among which are a couple of battles in which the young woman sees her man stripped of the pose of the bon vivant and made over into the kind of masculine being that an aggressive girl would like to have make love to her.

It is an entertaining story with John Junior and Gertrude Glover, an Essanay ingenue. She is the girl reporter who is sent out to ridicule the exploits of the gilded youth by the editor of a trust-owned paper which is fighting his father. She makes him look ridiculous enough and stings him into going to work. After a while she can't write sarcastic things about him because she likes him. She loses her job, but becomes private secretary to his father. The young pair frustrate a strike, make the trust hunt cover before the situation clears and she becomes daughter-in-law of the rich mill owner.

Scene from "The Jester" (Essanay).

"THE LIGHT OF DUSK" (Lubin).

"The Light of Dusk" is the title of the important feature photoplay undertaking announced by the Lubin Company on which work was started this week in the Philadelphia studios. This will represent another departure by the Lubin Company from the field of novels and stage dramas as subjects for screen plays.

"The Light of Dusk" represents an original scenario from the pen of Anthony P. Kelly, already a star of the first magnitude in scenario construction. In his present offering the executives of the Lubin Company perceive the essentials for a red letter production and it is on those lines that preparations for "The Light of Dusk" have been made. It was also apparent that the direction called for the skill of a master hand capable of feature handling of a feature theme, and this responsibility has accordingly been entrusted to Edgar Lewis, who has just completed Dr. Goodman's photo epic, "The Toilers," for the Lubin Company.

"A SON OF THE IMMORTALS" (Bluebird).

J. Warren Kerrigan again appears on the Blue Bird program as a star in "A Son of the Immortals," to be released May 22, with Lois Wilson his leading lady. Bertram Grassby, who plays in Mr. Kerrigan's support, made the scenario from a story by Louis Tracy, and Otis Turner directed the production.

Briefly the feature indicates how an American might act if he were unexpectedly elevated to a throne, and depicts the consequence attendant upon an administration so democratic and liberal that all traditions are cast to the winds. The opposition to these methods by the military leaders and the measure taken to counteract the effect that Yankee modes of procedure have upon the populace, constitutes the incentive for stirring scenes, clashes at arms and sensational episodes that make "A Son of the Immortals" a series of startling outcomes.

Although there is no purpose to illustrate any specific uprising, the attitude and activities of the populace in the imaginary kingdom of Kosnovia, where the scenes of "A Son of the Immortals" are placed, and the conduct of the people in their protest meetings, would give a suggestion of the Sinn Fein movement which has lately upset the tranquility of Dublin and bordered the shores of the limpid Liffy with just such demonstrations of violence as are duplicated in the Blue Bird photoplay.

So much does intrigue and conspiracy figure in the Kerrigan picture that it might be made available to demonstrate the spirit of unrest and reprisal which seems to now obtain over practically the entire surface of the universe. So well may moving pictures be adapted and commercialized to incidents of importance to the public mind that the Blue Bird people believe that its appropriateness, aside from its excellence as an entertainment, makes "A Son of the Immortals" timely to a striking degree and well adapted to exploitation by exhibitors.

MINUSA SCREENS FOR ALASKA.

The Minusa Cine Products Co. reports orders received from its distributor in the northwest, the Johnson Seating Co., of Seattle, Wash., or four Minusa screens, to be shipped to Nome, Cordova, Fairbanks, and Anchorage. These screens must leave Seattle the 15th day of May and this is quite a feather in the cap of the Johnson Seating Co. in landing such a nice amount of business for the Minusa company.

THIS IS HOW IT SHOULD HAVE READ.

In the May 6 issue of the Moving Picture World the statement that the Empire Feature Service has taken over the B. S. Moss Productions should read: "Messrs. Blum, Hunt and Cooper, formerly owners of the Empire Feature Service, have taken over the New Jersey agency of the B. S. Moss M. P. Corporation, and have given up the Empire Feature Service entirely.

NEW MAE MARSH PICTURE.

Mae Marsh, who has been conspicuous by her absence from the Triangle program, has completed a new Fine Arts picture. Its early release marks her second film appearance in the seven months of the Triangle. The successor to "Hoodoo Ann" is called "A Child of the Paris Streets," and is a highly spectacular and dramatic story of the Latin Quarter interpreted by a well balanced cast. Robert Harron is again the young hero, an American student who rescues the girl from the Apaches who kidnapped her when she was a baby and brought her up to be the cleverest of their kind in Paris. Tully Marshall adds another villain conception to the long list with which his name has been associated, both on the speaking stage and in motion pictures. Jennie Lee, Carl Stockdale, Loyola O'Connor and Bert Hadley deserve mention in the long supporting cast.

WAGNER ELECTRIC DENVER OFFICE MOVES.

The Wagner Electric Manufacturing Company of St. Louis announces the removal of its Denver office to 1633 Tremont street, to continue in charge of O. H. Davidson. A stock of motors will be carried at this office.

GEORGE BEBAN AND MYRTLE STEDMAN IN AUTO ACCIDENT.

What will probably turn out to be the most remarkable motion pictures of an automobile accident ever displayed on the screen were secured by Cameraman Homer Scott of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, when a car containing George Beban, Myrtle Stedman and John Franklin, the chauffeur, turned an almost complete side-somersault.

A scene for "Pasquale," showing a speeding motor-car turning a sharp curve on a mountain highway just outside of Los Angeles, was prepared and the cameraman in position to take it The car came on at high speed and on turning the curve broke the steering knuckle on the front inside wheel, taking the machine off its course with a side lurch directly in the path of the camera-man. Upon turning over, the car instantly shot into flame. As if fascinated, the photographer remained at his post and secured pictures of the entire accident, the machine turning over several feet in front of the camera.

Sis Hopkins in Dailies

Illustrated Talks by Kalem Star in Three Hundred Newspapers Every Week.

Over three hundred of the representative daily newspapers of the country are included in a syndicate list at present publishing weekly talks by Sis Hopkins. The number is being added to daily and is expected to reach twice that total before long. Over five hundred newspapers have already made application for the weekly humor feature, but since exclusive territorial rights are granted, it became necessary to narrow the list down in giving the publication privilege to the first applicant.

The list of over three hundred already publishing the talks covers all sections of Canada and the United States. On the roster will be found such representative journals as The Cleveland Leader, Pittsburgh Dispatch, Detroit Journal, Louisville Courier-Journal (Times), Milwaukee Free Press, Houston Post, Montreal Herald, Toledo Blade, Kansas City Gazette-Globe, Paterson News, New Haven Times-Leader, and the Jackson, Mich., Patriot.

In a number of the cities that have begun the publication of the chats exhibitors have taken advantage of the aid by special Sis Hopkins advertising in the particular publication carrying the feature. In the talks Sis Hopkins gives a humorous burlesque of the usual "Advice to the Lovelorn" stories, the "Advice From a Screen Star" and so on.

EXHIBITORS CLAMOR FOR CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG FEATURES.

Letters and telegrams of congratulations flooded the offices of the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation this week in response to the announcement that Lewis J. Selznick had purchased Robert W. Chambers' widely read novel "The Common Law" to be picturized for the first feature in which Miss Young will be presented by the new organization next October.

Even before it was known that Miss Young was contemplating producing "The Common Law" thousands of exhibitors had applied for contracts on the strength of the star's reputation and drawing power alone. But the combination of star and a story whose advertising and publicity values are enormous appears to have aroused every important exhibitor in the country to action.

So great has been the response that the four personal representatives of Mr. Selznick who were to begin a tour of different sections of the country this week have been forced to postpone the trip in order to rearrange their schedules to accommodate the hundreds of important exhibitors whose names have been added to the list of applications by the announcement about "The Common Law."

CUMMINS HAS MEXICAN PICTURES.

Samuel Cummins of 1476 Broadway, who has successfully exploited the Fatherland pictures of "Fighting the Allies," or "Germany at War," by booking them in all the big theaters throughout the country and also on the Keith circuit, has again made an extraordinary move in the film business, when he took control of the latest Mexican pictures in this country, known as "Across the Border," exploiting them under the Beacon Film Emblem. He has already booked them for one hundred days with the Marcus Loew circuit. Business has been so big that they contemplate playing the pictures in all their houses. This is one of the most unusual pictures ever shown to an audience, and have been playing to capacity in every house yet shown.

Mr. Cummins intends to state right these pictures, and dispose of them at once. Already options for half of the country have been given.

FRIEDA HEMPEL CHOOSES MUSIC FOR SCREEN.

MUSIC is a prime necessity for the future success of moving pictures." Frieda Hempel, prima donna of the Metropolitan Opera House, made this comment in a recent interview when she was told that the Paramount Pictures Corporation would hereafter send out complete scores with every play on its program, the proper musical selections being supplied for each scene appearing upon the screen. Fraulein Hempel's views on the proper musical accompaniments for the film drama are being sent broadcast over the country.

Frieda Hempel.

"By the proper adaptation of music the photoplay house will be raised to a much higher artistic plane," the prima donna declared positively when it was explained to her that Paramount had taken one of the important steps in the history of the motion picture industry by arranging with Schirmer, the music publisher, to prepare scores for each film released on its program, made up of selections from all of the great composers, and absolutely matching the moods portrayed on the screen.

"It seems to me," she continued, "that in Wagner's music there is everything adaptable to any drama ever conceived. I would like to suggest to motion picture producers that there was no greater love theme ever written in music than the love motif of 'Tristan and Isolde.'

"Take Bach's music, for instance. I can imagine nothing so suitable for a scene in a Pullman sleeping car than some of his fugues. The music of the 'Barber of Seville' would be excellent for thrilling situations. There must be substance and thought to the music selected for a big dramatic story, not only tunefulness and emotion.

"I was particularly impressed by the fact that in the production of 'Diplomacy' I enjoyed the poetic feeling of the play because of the ideal music selected, which I had not felt when I saw the play produced abroad. You see, music will always idealize, and that is something we can never get too much of. As I watched the progress of the play with its many opportunities for improvement over the mere theatrical production on the stage, I couldn't help wondering what the great Sardou would have thought of it himself. Sardou, by the way, would have made a wonderful scenario writer for moving pictures, wouldn't he?"

"NOTORIOUS GALLAGHER" (Metro).

"Notorious Gallagher," with Marguerite Snow and William Nigh in the stellar roles, a five-part Metro wonderplay, produced by the Columbia Pictures Corporation, will be released on the Metro program May 22. Mr. Nigh, who wrote the story of "Notorious Gallagher," also directed its production. The supporting cast is unusually strong and contains most of the members of the "Nigh Family," as they are called. Included in the number are: Robert Elliot, Roy Applegate, R. A. Bresee, Julius D. Cowles, Victor De Linsky, David Thompson, Cecilia Griffiths, Florence Vincent, Frank Montgomery and Martin J. Faust.

GOLD KING SCREENS IN DIXIELAND.

Doc. Graham, manager of the Queen Feature Service of Birmingham, Ala., writes: "It will interest you to know that Mr. Wise's Gold King Screen arrived yesterday and was installed in the Odeon theater. It fits fine and everybody is tickled to death."

M. W. Lawrence, the New Orleans representative, recently sold Peter Fabacher, one of the pioneer exhibitors of that city, a Gold King Screen. After installing it Mr. Fabacher was so well pleased that he immediately ordered another for his new Rialto theater.

LESSER SECURES "WHERE ARE MY CHILDREN?"

A quick-fire deal was consummated between Carl Laemmle and Sol L. Lesser, whereby the All Star Feature Distributors secure "Where Are My Children?" for California, Nevada and Arizona, at a price that is said to be the largest ever paid for a film production for western territory.

Lesser was the first man to get the rights, and has secured the only territory that has been disposed of so far. He is highly elated over his purchase, it being considered a masterpiece and one that will do any concern credit to handle.

"A YOUTH OF FORTUNE" (Universal).

Carter De Haven and Flora Parker De Haven will soon be seen in "A Youth of Fortune," which will be released on May 15 as a Red Feather production by the Universal. "A Youth of Fortune" was originally known as "Get the Boy." Mr. and Mrs. De Haven are supported in it by Harry Carter, Maude George, H. Holland, Bertram Grassby, Harry Depp, Hart Hoxie, J. Hope and Mr. De Haven's wonderful bulldog, "Judge Rumhauser."

"Rumhauser" is some dog, according to Carter De Haven. He is a keen truffle hound, can sniff deer at a distance of several feet, can muzzle tripe and noodles without a sieve, barks in several different dialects, can ride in De Haven's car without getting dizzy, never froths at the mouth when Carter wears watered silk stripes down the seams of his evening trousers, can sleep at all hours of the day and night and is prompt at meals.

This famous dog has been signed up by the Universal under a two-year contract. He will be educated in the scholastic kennels at Universal City under the tutelage of "Hump," the camel trainer, and his salary will be put aside to aid the wounded mitrailleuse hounds of Belgium. "Judge Rumhauser" was known as a "loop hound" while Carter played Chicago, and this famous dog has also smelled the interior of nearly every wine cellar in New York.

GENTER HAS NEW MACHINE FOR COATING SCREENS.

J. H. Genter Company has just completed a new machine which will coat Mirroroid on canvas a width of 12 feet without a seam. Running over 300 lineal yards per day. This machine is without doubt one of the greatest machines ever built as it automatically takes the cloth, shrinking same from a width of 13 feet to 12 feet and laying a perfectly even coating on 300 running yards lengths. In applying the material in this manner every square foot of surface reflects back the same amount of light, showing a perfectly even picture, something that cannot be obtained with an air or hand brush made screen.

The J. H. Genter Co. are sending out to the exhibitors a small moving picture of Charlie Chaplin in one of his funny stunts. This will be mailed to anyone on receipt of a postal requesting same. It makes a very funny souvenir.

NOTES OF THE TRADE

A BIG canning factory near Cordoba, Alaska, has been leased by the Lubin Company as one of the advance steps in the plans to put Rex Beach's novel, "The Silver Horde," into a multiple reel photoplay feature. "The Silver Horde" deals with the struggles of an independent operator against the efforts of the salmon canning trust to wipe him out.

Elizabeth Burbridge, whose latest work was Essanay's three-reel release, "The Danger Line," will be seen shortly in a two-reel play, "The Double Cross." The latter is a flippant tale of boy crooks, which points its moral cleverly and has nothing but light comedy angles.

Director Henry McRae has commenced a new railway photoplay entitled "A Railroad Bandit," which promises to eclipse anything he has yet attempted in the filming stories of the railroad. The featured leads are being played by Miss Marie Walcamp and Lee Hill. The film will be released in two reels when completed.

Victor Moore, comedian of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, will appear as a clown in his next photoplay on the Paramount Program. At the Lasky studios they have set up a three-ring circus, side show and menagerie to obtain atmosphere and color for the circus drama.

Doris Kenyon, who will be seen in "The Feast of Life" within the next two weeks, has been on the stage less than six months and in pictures less than four months, yet she is a star and working under a three-year contract with the World Corporation.

* * *

Those who are accustomed to seeing William Russell in virile "fighting" roles will get a glimpse of his softer side in "Soul Mates," an American release, and will see portrayed his genuine love for children. There is a nursery set in the picture and "Big Bill" acts like a regular kid as he sits down on the floor and joins little Dodo Newton in playing with toys.

* * *

Having completed the picturization of "The Three Godfathers," Peter B. Kyne's desert story, Director E. J. Le Saint and his company, headed by Harry Carey and Miss Stella Razeto, are engaged in making a two-reel film entitled "Club Law." In the supporting cast are Jean Hathaway, Frank Lanning, Hayward Mack, Albert MacQuarrie and a number of others from the University City stock company.

Robert Warwick, at present appearing opposite Grace George in George Bernard Shaw's comedy, "Captain Brassbound's Conversion," will begin work on "Friday the 13th" at once. Bruce McRae, another World Film star, will replace Warwick with Miss George when the show goes to Chicago next week.

* * *

"The Fugitive," in five acts, is the first of the eight "Thanhouser Classics" released by the Mutual, featuring Florence La Badie. According to plans recently announced by the Mutual and Edwin Thanhouser, Miss La Badie, during the course of the next twelve months, will be the featured star in eight productions to be released by Mutual under the title of Thanhouser Classics. "Woman, Saint and Devil," is the title of the second of these classic releases. The scenarios for both were prepared by Phil Lonergan and staged under the personal direction of Frederick Sullivan.

A photoplay has been prepared for Joyce Fair, Essanay's 12-year-old star, to meet the demand following her success in "Joyce's Strategy," "The Dixie Winner," and "The Little Samaritan." The new play, "Orphan Joyce," will give her just as fitting a topic, while offering her a wider opportunity to display her talent.

* * *

Director Robert Leonard practically has completed the filming of his story, "Ambrosia," in which film play Ella Hall is featured. The film is being made in five reels, and is designed to give Miss Hall the opportunity to once more play the role of a little girl, in which she has been so successful. In the supporting cast are Adele Farrington, Betty Schade, Harry Depp and Kingsley Benedict.

* * *

Fannie Ward, under the direction of George Melford, has begun work at the Lasky studio on a photoplay by Willard Mack, entitled "The Gutter Magdalene," which will be released on the Paramount Program. The famous star of "The Cheat" and "Tennessee's Pardner" will appear in this play as a Salvation Army lass who assuages the hurts and wrongs of society on the flotsam and jetsam of the Bowery.

* * *

A. A. Davison, auditor of the Selig Company, who is paying the Los Angeles studios a visit, was guest of honor at a recent dinner party given by Director Wm. Robert Daly and Fritzi Brunette.

During the next eight weeks the World Film Corporation will offer no less than sixteen famous stage and screen players, including Carlyle Blackwell, Gail Kane, Alice Brady, Robert Warwick, Frances Nelson, Holbrook Blinn, Ethel Clayton, Kitty Gordon, Muriel Ostriche, Jackie Saunders, Bruce McRae, Gerda Holmes, Arthur Ashley, House Peters and Barbara Tennant.

Friends of Nell Craig will see her in three new Essanay releases, each giving her ideal opportunities to exercise her talents. "Her Naked Soul," in three acts, gives her a dramatic role which she handles with customary ability. "Once a Thief—?" is another three-reeler in which she takes the feminine lead. She is now working in a new two-reel play, "The Consummation."

* * *

Director Rupert Julian is picturizing "The False Gems," in which Julian and Miss Elsie Jane Wilson play the featured leads, supported by Douglas Gerrard and Marc Fenton. Julian has completed the beautiful five-reel, "The Story of Edwin Baptiste," suggested by Tennyson's poem, "Maud," and which was prepared for the screen by Miss Olga Printzlau, featuring Julian.

Viola Dana, the newest of Metro stars, who will shortly beg[in] work on her first production for that program, will entert[ain]

a number of friends at the Narragansett Hotel, at Broadway and Ninety-third street, with a series of artistic dances. She began her career as a professional dancer when she was five years old, and she still keeps up her work in that art at private performances.

"Big Bill" Russell, of the American-Mutual studios, is the star as well as the director of "The Highest Bid," a forthcoming Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition. Charlotte Burton appears as his co-star.

The use of the largest steel mill in Los Angeles, during the busiest hours of the day, was secured by Director Wm. Robert Daly of the Selig Company for some of the big scenes in "The Hare And The Tortoise," the workmen playing actors and the actors workmen. Some wonderfully realistic scenes were secured.

* * *

Director Jacques Jaccard has assumed the direction of the big circus serial, "Peg O' The Ring." Jaccard is directing Ruth Stonehouse, who has been engaged by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and is being featured in the serial. The supporting company includes G. Raymond Nye, Charles Gunn and Eddie Polo with hundreds of others from Universial City. The scenario is by Jaccard and Miss Olga Printzlau.

* * *

Carl Brickert, the theological student from Indianapolis, who recently made his debut in motion pictures on the Metro program, playing the prominent role of the district attorney in "The Half Million Bribe," has decided to remain in the silent drama, and will be seen shortly in a big role in a Metro wonderplay.

* * *

Margaret Gibson of the Horsley-Mutual studios, who was co-star with William Clifford in "The Heart of Tara," "The Soul's Cycle," "The Hidden Law" and "The Leopard's Bride," Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition, has been delegated as the feminine lead in the two-reel Centaur features to be released weekly by the Mutual. The first of these, "Avenged by Lions," will be released May 7. The Bostock animals were used in the filming of a number of scenes for this release.

* * *

T. N. Heffron, Selig director, has begun work on "The Return," a psychological drama from the pen of William E. Wing. The drama is in three reels and features Kathlyn Williams, supported by Wellington Playter, Guy Oliver, Vivian Reed and Sidney Smith.

Charles Bartlett is a new Balboa director. He recently came from the American studio. Before producing, he was a well-known actor. He is putting on several three-reel pictures for Balboa with Marie Empress as the featured player.

* * *

With Francelia Billington in the featured lead, Director Jay Hunt is filming "The Iron Grip of Crime," a five-reel feature production. In the supporting cast are Gilmore Hammond, who plays opposite Miss Billington, Paul Byron, Miss Mina Jeffries, Hector V. Sarno, Jack Holt and W. F. Morgan.

Gertrude Robinson and Alexander Gaden appear as co-stars in "The Quality of Faith," forthcoming Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition. This marks their first appearance as stars in the same production since the release of "As A Woman Sows" some months ago. Several other productions featuring these two popular players are in course of preparation at the Gaumont-Mutual studios.

Balboa is winning a reputation for sprightly child players. The latest addition to the studio are the Corbin sisters. They are Ruth and Virginia, aged seven and three respectively. Both are attractive youngsters, light-haired and winsome. They will soon be seen in Balboa releases.

Holbrook Blinn, who is working at the World studio in "The Prima Donna's Husband," opened last week in "A Woman of No Importance," in which he is co-starring with Margaret Anglin. This makes ten World Film players starring on Broadway. Robert Warwick is co-starring with Grace George, Katharine Kaelred, Charles Cherry, William Courtenay, Lenora Ulrich, Alice Brady and others are busy at the theater when not at the studio.

Members of Flying A company No. 1, of which Vivian Rich is the star, have all but completed a three-reel drama to be released by the Mutual under the title of "The Cycle of Fate." The direction of the production is being handled by E. Mason Hopper, a newcomer at the American studios. The scenario was written by Nathan P. Oaks.

* * *

Director William Dowlan is nearing the completion of "The Madcap," a five-reel feature, in which Flora Parker De Haven is featured. Miss De Haven is supported in this film play by Richard Sterling and a number of other Universal City favorites.

Some strikingly beautiful scenes photographed in the wilds and the use of a dog and deer are but a few of the interesting features of "The Return," a Mustang-Mutual two reeler featuring Art Acord and Nita Davis. A large California bee ranch, on which considerable of the action of the piece takes place, is another interesting feature.

"A Raffle for a Husband," a one reel comedy written and produced by Allen Curtis has been completed by the Joker company with Gale Henry and William Franey in the featured leads. Others in the cast are Lillian Peacock, M. Moranti, and C. Conklin.

"Playthings of the Gods" has been made into a three-act photoplay for the Lubin Company by Captain Wilbert Melville. The cast includes Cecil Van Auker, Allan Forrest, Walter Spencer, Adelaide Bronti, Sydney Deane, Ruth Saville and Evelyn Page.

* * *

"The End of the Rainbow," an American Mutual three act drama featuring Edward Coxen and Lizette Throen will soon be released. Miss Thorne as a social favorite who casts aside her position to minister to the wants of the lowly in the slums has been furnished with a part that brings into play her many qualities as an emotional actress. Others in the cast besides Miss Thorne and Mr. Coxen includes Leona Hutton, George Field, Jack Farrell, Hazel West, Joseph Beaudry and George Ahearn.

* * *

Ben Weiss, who furnishes the hundreds of supernumeraries for Metro productions, spent three days walking the streets and through the parks before he found ten particular types that Director William Nigh wanted for his production of "Notorious Gallagher," a forthcoming Metro wonderplay.

* * *

In its titles "Ramona" brings to us something new. Over a background representing a scene suggestive of what is to follow are printed the leaders. The innovation has the effect of materially decreasing the illusion-destroying possibilities that crowd in the average leader. The atmosphere remains. If other manufacturers are not quick to grab the idea we will be much mistaken.

"Ramona" takes much from the stage and brings it to the photoplay. It assimilates it, welds it; and the composite whole is a thing of beauty and of charm.

Anna Little, Art Acord, Frank Borzage and Jack Richardson and all the members of the two "Mustang" companies of the "Flying A," besides the cowboy brigade, will play a prominent part in the coming rodeo being arranged by the studio forces. On a horse Miss Little can hold her own with the best of the cowpunchers.

* * *

House Peters, Gail Kane and twenty-eight players are at Washington, D. C., staging scenes for use in "The Velvet Paw." Maurice Tourneur is in charge of the direction and the picture will be released early in July.

* * *

Thomas Jefferson, with little Zoe Bech in the supporting cast, are at work under Director George Cochrane filming "The Attic Princess," a story just suited to the work of Jefferson and the little girl. The story was written by Calder Johnstone.

* * *

First of the Gaumont-Mutual contingent to break camp at the Jacksonville Winter studios are due at the Flushing plant some time in the early part of next week. The players in squads of five and six will make the trip north by water. The Flushing plant is rapidly being put in shape, so that there will be no slip up in the starting work. Alexander Gaden, Gertrude Robinson, Iva Shepard, Sydney Mason, Charles W. Travis and Henry W. Pemberton will comprise the first squad to reach Flushing. The others will follow just as soon as work on the productions in which they have been cast is completed.

Arrangements are going forward for the production at the World-Paragon studios of "Romeo and Juliet" with an all-star World Film cast. Maurice Tourneur will be in charge of the direction and the cast will consist of a number of prominent stars.

Lillian Rich has the role of a press "sob-sister" in "The Touch of the Key," and her characterization will be realistic. All note books are strictly tabooed by these volunteer "technical" men of the "Flying A."

* * *

"It Was Only in The Play" is the title of a comedy which has been picturized by Director Allen Curtis of the Universal Joker Company, featuring Gale Henry and William Franey, who are supported by Lillian Peacock, M. Moranti and C. Conklin.

* * *

Riley Chamberlin, Falstaff-Mutual comedian, has arrived in New Rochelle from Jacksonville, where he has been working for the past five months. Chamberlin will begin work within the week on the first of several comedies in which he is to be featured.

Albert Capellani has been chosen to stage "La Boheme" in which Alice Brady will make her next appearance. Miss Brady will portray "Mimi" and will have a cast of types and noted players familiar with the opera in support of her.

Under the title of "Reel Life," a new single-reel picture, will be released on Sunday of each week which should prove to be one of the most popular releases on the program. This innovation is the Mutual Film Magazine, which is produced by the Gaumont Company. The first release of "Reel Life" contains Feats of Horsemanship by Belgian Cavalry—An Alligator Farm showing Alligators from Birth to 1,000 years old—The growth of a Butterfly from the Caterpillar to Maturity, etc. This is an excellent single reel for all classes of houses and should be especially valuable to high-price theaters.

Director Lloyd Carleton is filming a two-reel society drama entitled "Number Sixteen Martin Place," written by Bess Meredyth, and in which Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnson play the leads. Others in the cast are Gretchen Lederer, Alfred Allen and Jack Abbott. It is the story of a criminologist and a girl, with many suspenses and a happy ending.

Margaret Gibson, the star of "The Soul's Cycle," "The Heart of Tara," "The Hidden Law" and "The Leopard's Bride," will be featured in the first Centaur two-reel picture, released Saturday, May 6th; a two-reel Centaur will be released every Saturday until further notice.

* * *

"The Rose Colored Scarf" is the title of a two-reel film play which has been commenced by Director William Worthington with Herbert Rawlinson leading and Agnes Vernon playing opposite. It is a comedy drama, said to be well suited to the clever work of Rawlinson and Miss Vernon.

* * *

C. M. White, assistant to General Manager F. G. Bradford of the Gaumont Company, is not only handling "See America First," but also the new weekly release from the Gaumont Laboratories, "Reel Life," the Mutual Film Magazine. Its subjects will deal in the main with outdoor life. Material not suitable for The Mutual Weekly will be filmed for it.

Malden, Mass., Censorship

All Films Must Be as Milk for Babes Is Plan of City's New Censor Board Appointed by Mayor Blodgett—No Censors Are Needed in Any Massachusetts City—Exhibitors Waiting to See Results.

By William M. Flynn, Boston Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

BOSTON, MASS.—Proprietors of moving picture houses in Malden, Mass., are now squarely up against the censorship proposition. The city has a board of censors appointed by Mayor Blodgett at the request of the Woman's Civic League of Malden. The members of the board will take it upon themselves to censor any moving pictures that are shown in Malden, which, in their opinion, are at all harmful to a child. Now the question has been raised: Who will censor the decisions of the board and how far will these decisions go?

The Malden moving picture men do not see the need of a board of censors in that city any more than in any other city or town in Massachusetts. The women behind the movement claim that every community in the country should have its board of censors. They have started with Malden and now moving picture men in Boston and other parts of the Commonwealth are wondering how far this censorship idea is going to spread.

"I don't see the need of this board of censors," said Oliver Ramsdell, proprietor of the Malden Orpheum. "The pictures that are shown in Malden have all passed one board of censors before they come to us—the national board—which is composed of 120 men and women of experience and education. It seems to me they are quite capable of deciding what pictures are fit to see. In the second place, it would be poor business on our part to accept pictures objectionable in any way. Women in Malden have no authority to stop any film we may choose to show."

W. B. Bradstreet, who conducts the Malden Auditorium, is also in a quandary.

"I fail to see the necessity of a censorship board in Malden," he said. "We could not afford to run any pictures our audiences would not care to see, but we must always be gallant to the ladies."

The board of censors is made up of three women, Mrs. Ralph M. Kirtland, president of the Woman's Civic League of Malden; Mrs. Willard C. Tilson and Mrs. Francis A. Shove, a member of the Malden City Planning Board.

There is one ray of sunshine from a moving picture standpoint. The committee will not attempt to take up the question of films insofar as it relates to race or creed. It will only deal with films that concern small boys, their morals, etc. Any woman in Malden who pays 50 cents a year is eligible to membership in the league. The city is more or less interested in the idea and more than one person is waiting to see what will happen if the board objects to some film and the proprietor of the house in which it is shown refuses to stop showing it.

"In every town where there is a motion picture theater," says Mrs. Shove of the committee, "there is need of a little censorship. But every film should be a film a child may see with safety; children are the most impressionable part of the audience. Don't think I'm censoring all moving pictures—I like them."

Therefore the Malden moving picture men have hope.

SOCIOLOGY AND FILMS.

Investigation of Effects of Pictures Being Made in Worcester.

Worcester, Mass.—At Worcester, Mass., Ellery F. Reed of Fulton, Mo., a student in the graduate department of sociology of Clark University, has launched a far-reaching inquiry into the nature of the photoplays that are being exhibited in Worcester theaters this month with the idea of determining, by scientific analysis, the good or bad influence of the motion pictures that are being shown throughout the country at the present time.

The idea is a novel one and the outcome of the investigation is awaited with much interest by moving picture men and others throughout Massachusetts. Mr. Reed and a corps of several hundred assistants are expected to pass on approximately 9,000 separate film plays.

Preparing a Plot Chart.

To facilitate the investigation a set of charts, covering practically every possible plot complication, has been prepared and these charts will form the basis of the good or bad computation when the investigation is concluded.

There are five charts and the subject matter has been divided under these headings: Social influence, static and dynamic, of pictures; sex relations in the pictures; the conflict of right and wrong, and the attitude of the pictures towards religion and the church.

The balances will be obtained by substituting arbitrary values for each phase of the plot of the film as outlined under the various chart headings. Where the feature of the plot is an important one the value three will be given in the check square on its respective chart; where the feature is of less importance to the rest of the film it will be given a value of two, and in cases of minor importance its value will be only one. Totals and averages will be placed in spaces provided beneath each table.

For Clark University.

Clark University is said to be behind the investigation which Mr. Reed says is the first of its kind to be attempted on such a scale. The young man hopes to derive figures that will show either that the pictures are exerting a good influence, or the reverse and to what extent, or figures that will indicate in what way the plots of moving pictures should be modified so that they will exert a good influence on the public in case the charts show that they do not.

Johnny Evers Will Be Camera Man.

Johnny Evers, the scrappy little captain of the Boston Braves, has an ambition to become a camera man. He said so himself, and to no other person than Manager McGraw of the Giants.

Evers and McGraw were posing together at the Braves Park for Dick Sears, local camera man for the Hearst-Vitagraph News Weekly, during the recent series between the Braves and Giants in Boston, when Evers turned to McGraw and said:

"When I get through with baseball I am going into the movie game. I am going to become a cameraman." And the fact later leaked out that Evers has been doing some work with a camera for quite a while.

PUTNAM-JACOBS INCORPORATES.

New Theater Company in Newark, N. J. Capital $100,000.

By Jacob J. Kalter, Special Correspondent, 51 Strand Theater Bldg., Newark, N. J.

NEWARK, N. J.—The Putnam-Jacobs Theaters Company last week filed papers of incorporation with the county clerk. Edward R. McGlynn is named as statutory agent. The authorized capital is placed at $100,000. The business given is to erect places of amusement.

The incorporators are: William B. Putnam of 63 Girard place, who owns four shares; George W. Jacobs, of 929 Broad street, who also holds four shares, and Charles Rosenthal, who holds two shares. The shares are valued at $100 each. The first two incorporators are the present managers of the Paramount theater, Broad and Hill streets.

M. H. Hoffman Visits Newark.

Newark, N. J.—M. H. Hoffman, general manager of the Universal Film, visited the local branch on Sunday. It was decided after some deliberation, to keep the office in the same building because no more suitable place could be obtained. Mr. Hoffman, in collaboration with Lee Gainsborg, manager of the Newark branch, drew up plans for the remodeling of the entire headquarters. The entire place will be renovated and improved greatly.

Special Children's Performance.

Montclair, N. J.—A special Saturday morning performance was inaugurated at the Montclair theater last Saturday. Special subjects particularly selected for children are shown. The movement of the children's performance innovation is sanctioned by the Montclair Better Films Committee, and the films are selected and indorsed by that body.

Irving Meisel Promoted.

Newark, N. J.—We take this opportunity to correct a mistake that appeared in our issue of last week. The man who was promoted to roadman of the Pathe exchange at 6-8 Mechanic street is Irving Meisel, and not Paul, as erroneously reported last week. Mr. Meisel visited the Newark office of the Moving Picture World Friday and he reports excellent bookings especially on the new Pathe series, "Who's Guilty?" Mr. Meisel is covering the southern part of the state.

Gainsborg Books Feature.

Newark, N. J.—Lee Gainsborg, the popular manager of the Universal Film, at 286 Market street, is now booking "The Melting Pot" exclusively for the state of New Jersey.

Fox Shows Features.

Newark, N. J.—Beginning last Friday, Fox's Carlton theater at Market and Halsey streets, under the management of Louis P. DeWolfe, is showing features instead of regular service as heretofore.

Rambonnet Now Leading Salesman.

Newark, N. J.—Edwin A. Rambonnet, according to advices received by the World correspondent, is now the leading roadman of the whole General Film Service. He bases his claim upon the fact that he has beaten William Osborne, former leader of the entire country. Mr. Rambonnet returned Thursday from a trip through his territory, and certainly brought home the bacon—thirteen new accounts. This beats any previous record by a long shot.

Supplies in Newark.

Newark, N. J.—The New Jersey Motion Picture Supply Company, Strand theater building, has been appointed exclusive agents for the Radioscope, manufactured by the Sabo Manufacturing Company, of New York, and also for the Radium Gold Fibre Screen. This supply company is probably the first to make a success of selling just supplies in Newark.

Paper's New Office.

Newark, N. J.—The Moving Picture World's Newark correspondent will move on May 1 to 51 Strand Theater building, 120 Market street. The change has been made so that we can be in the midst of the film activities of the city. Visits from local as well as visits from out-of-town film men will always be acceptable. Please brig or send your news-notes of general interest to this office. Subscriptions and renewals will be gladly received. Drop up for a chat, anyway.

Baltimore, Md.—Bids are now being received for the building of a $20,000 theater at Pennsylvania and Fulton avenues, by the owner of the property, S. Raith. John R. Forsythe is the architect of the plans, which are for a building 22 by 125 feet. The construction will be of brick with a slag roof, steel work, metal ceilings, concrete floors and steam heating.

New Theater for East Fayette Street.

Baltimore, Md.—Notice has ben given that Joseph A. Gallagher will have introduced in the city council of Baltimore an ordinance, in accordance with the laws of this city and state, granting him a permit to erect a moving picture theater on the premises known as Nos. 2239, 2241 and 2243 East Fayette street, being 50 by 90 feet, more or less.

New Aladdin Opens.

Baltimore, Md.—The New Aladdin theater at 930-932 West Baltimore street, opened under new management on Saturday April 29th. The new owner, B. Friedmann, will make a number of improvements, as well as to replace the old equipment with more modern appliances. The theater seats about 500 persons and is the most popular theater in the West End. A Band Concert preceded the first show on the opening day and a number of specialties was introduced between each show.

VIRGINIA NEWS LETTER.

By Clarence L. Linz, Special Correspondent, 635 Tenth St., N. E., Washington, D. C.

Censor Resolution in Richmond.

RICHMOND, VA.—The Social Service Federation of Richmond is using its best efforts to secure the passage of a resolution providing for the censorship of motion picture films, which is now pending before the Richmond City Council, and is preparing plans for the waging of an extensive campaign to create public sentiment for the resolution. Each of the fifty-five organizations which are members of the Federation have been urged to indorse the movement and to lend aid in securing the passage of the resolution.

This resolution provides for a board of motion picture censors with the superintendent of the Richmond public schools as chairman and one member of the administrative board, the judge of the juvenile court, and a representative of the Social Service Federation.

Apparently Mayor Ainslie is not inclined to view with any degree of favor the plans of the Federation to push legislation of this sort where there is absolutely no need of such restriction. It is said that the Mayor has pointed out that no film that has ever been excluded elsewhere has ever been shown in Richmond, and that every motion picture that goes into Richmond is censored before it reaches Richmond. The Mayor also receives a report on every picture prior to its production in the city, and in the case of every doubtful film a censor is detailed from the police department to pass upon its merits or demerits. "It should be borne in mind," declared the mayor, "that the theater is a place of public amusement and not for religious instruction."

Savoy Completes Circuit

Washington, D. C., Theater Circuit Made Complete by the Purchase of the Savoy by Crandall and Morgan—Now Control a House in Each District of the City—Will Enlarge the Theater.

By Clarence L. Linz, Special Correspondent, 635 Tenth St., N.E., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The big deal of the week was the purchase by Harry M. Crandall and Joseph P. Morgan of the Savoy theater, at Fourteenth street and Park road, Northwest, these two exhibitors paying $75,000 for the eight hundred outstanding shares of stock in the Savoy Theater Company. This is a record price for such a proposition as the amount paid is only for the equipment and the good will of the company, together with an eighten-year lease to the theater. The money paid does not give them ownership of the property as the building was erected on leased ground and reverts to the land owners when the lease is eleased by the occupants.

"This purchase," said Harry M. Crandall, "completes our circuit of the best residential houses in the city and we have one in each section. In addition to our downtown house, we have the Apollo, in the Northeast, and the Avenue Grand, in the Southeast. Both of there are representative houses, and are considered to be among the city's most attractive places of amusement.

"At the Savoy we will have a seating capacity of 850, but we are going ahead with plans already made to increase the number of seats to about 1,400. Adjoining the Savoy is the photoplay park which will accommodate about 1,500 people. The theater proper is to be enlarged so that we can house all of the patrons who may be in the park at the time of a sudden shower

"We feel that we will have to work very hard to make up for the large expenditure necessary to secure the Savoy, but we feel confident that we have not made a mistake in making it one of our string of houses."

As originally constructed, the Savoy cost approximately $40,000. It is substantially built and is one of the handsomest houses in this section of the country. It is wholly detached, and the front and side walls are of tapestry brick.

The floor of the lobby is of Mosaic block and ornamented in designs with blocks of contrasting colors. The walls to a height of up to six fet are of marble, giving the lobby a very rich appearance. All of the inner doors are mirrored and there is given to the lobby an appearance of being perhaps twice as large as it really is, although at the street it has a width of forty-five feet, and it has a depth of thirty-four feet. Entrance to the lobby is gained through massive doors of mahogany and plate glass. The lighting is particularly effective and is obtained from handsome drop light chandeliers and wall brackets shaped like massive bronze candelabra.

At the north end of the lobby is the manager's office. Next to this is a large, roomy ticket office. At the west end is a closet for storage purposes and another door leads to the stairway which goes into the operative booth above.

Operating Booth.

The operating booth is very large for it runs the full width of the lobby and has depth of eleven feet. It is equipped with full toilet facilities and is well ventilated, there being a window at each end and two vents, eighteen inches in diameter, leading to the roof directly above the projection machines. The projection and lookout openings are provided with slides fitted with fusible cords, and act automatically in the event of a conflagration.

The auditorium has a width at present of sixty-five feet, but this is to be enlarged to make possible about six hundred additional seats. It has a depth of about one hundred feet. The floor has been laid bowl-shape and on an incline, the incline being one-eighth inch to the foot. The shaping of the floor from side to side gives those patrons occupying seats nearest to the wall a better opportunity of looking directly over the heads of those occupying the more central seats on the aisles and gives an unobstructed view of the screen. The seats have been placed thirty-four inches apart from back to back. This gives the public the benefit of two inches more than is required by law and insures a more comfortable ingress and egress.

The interior decoration is quite elaborate. From the floor line to the belt course of the walls there is a base of imitation marble. The walls have been left in white with all ornaments brought out in low relief. The wall lines run to the first rib of the ceiling, forming a slow half ellipse. Pilasters are placed on each side of a blind window at each side wall, with a delicately moulded cap and a cartouche over the center of each opening.

On either side of the Gold Fiber screen the walls have been splayed to an angle of sixty degrees and a recess formed therein to give the appearance of private boxes. These are decorated with fan-shaped ornaments and above the center of each is a cartouche. Above the screen is a proscenium cover, ornamented with a large cartouche in the center, as seen in theaters having a stage. The screen in set in a shadow box having a bevel extending back fifteen inches to the line of the screen.

The floor of the theater is of cement, with a hardened top layer to prevent it from chipping. On either side of the house is an exit to which runs a cross aisle six feet in width. There are three very wide aisles running the length of the house.

The ornamented walls and panelled ceilings of the auditorium and lobby are in modified Renaissance. In the auditorium there is an ornamental plaster centerpiece, elliptical in shape, with a black blind vent in the center serving to break the surrounding dead white. Around this is a circle of electric lights. In the center of each of the four panels of the ceilings is set a one-hundred watt lamp. In addition, there are candelabra similar to those in the lobby, each being equipped with five lights.

Both the heating and ventilating systems are of the best.

Manager Joseph P. Morgan.

Joseph P. Morgan, who also operates the Princess theater and who has recently taken over the Maycroft airdome, formerly operated by Fred Stein, which is located on H street, Northeast, across the street from the Apollo, is to manage the Savoy. "Joe" Morgan, as he is better known, is, like Mr. Crandall, one of the best known of the city's exhibitors. He started in the moving picture business as part owner of the Scenic theater with Tom Moore, and manager of the exchange at that time owned by Mr. Moore, but which is now the General Film Company. He continued in this connection for about four years and in 1911 took over the management of the Princess theater which he has since retained. He leaves that house in care of Richard Waldron.

Crandall-Morgan Staff.

The Crandall-Morgan line-up will thus be Harry M. Crandall, general manager and chief factotum; Joseph P. Morgan, Savoy; George McDonald, Apollo; Jack Keenan, formerly with Harris & Davis, of Pittsburg, Avenue Grand; George Grouch, office manager for all of the properties, will exercise general supervision over the downtown house, and Mr. Shoemaker will continue at the Maycroft airdome this summer.

BURNING OF RENTED MACHINES.

Supreme Court Decides That Renter Is Not Responsible.

Washington, D. C.—A decision of considerable importance to the local motion picture interests was handed down by Chief Justice Shepard in the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia involving the loss by fire of certain machines which had been held under a lease contract with option to purchase. The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia had held that the lessee was liable for the full amount of the value of the machines and had assessed a sum against him equal to the balance alleged to be due from the sale. The court decided that the contract for the acquisition of the machines, which was labeled "lease," was in fact a conditional bill of sale. The machine company contended that since its contract required the lessee to use the machines with care and keep in like good condition, he should be responsible for the loss. The upper court held that only ordinary care was required and that in case of accidental fire, the lessee was not liable. The court merely allowed rental up to the time of the fire.

Theaters Help Infant Welfare.

Washington, D. C.—The managers of a score or more of moving picture theaters in the District of Columbia have consented to loan their houses for free matinees for mothers and children of Washington during baby week from May 6 to 13. The executive committee in charge of the arrangements for baby week have secured a series of films on "How to Care for Baby." These films will be accompanied by short talks by infant welfare workers of Washington.

The houses that have pledged their cooperation in the movement are the Circle, Lyric, Arcade, Dumbarton, Blue Mouse, Apollo, Meaders, Eastern, Avenue Grand, Star, Cosmos, Happyland, Liberty, Favorite, Truxton, Alhambra, Howard and Dudley.

Change in Bluebird Distributing Plans.

The Bluebird Feature Film Company, with offices in Charlotte, N. C., will hereafter serve the Virginia territory with the Bluebird features instead of the distribution being made through the Fairmount Feature Film Company, of this city. The latter company, however, will continue to look out for the District of Columbia, Maryland, Pennsylvania and West Virginia. Mr. Ezell looks out for the distribution of the pictures from Charlotte, while J. Leo Yates, manager of the Washington Film Exchange, does the booking in this section.

R. B. Dayton to Travel for Metro.

Washington, D. C.—There is soon to be a change in the local Metro Film Service Company that will produce many expressions of regret on the part of exhibitors in this territory for our old friend Brown, who has been its traveling representative since the office was first opened, is retired. He is to be succeeded as traveling representative and as a member of the company by R. B. Dayton, a brother-in-law of L. M. Day, the president of the concern. This is the first experience of Mr. Dayton with the film business. He recently graduated from Bethlehem College, in Pennsylvania, and has since been working in one of the plants that is turning out ammunition for the fighting troops of Europe. He is a great big chap, an athlete, and capable of doing good work in the film business.

In speaking of the change to be made, Mr. Day stated that it was Mr. Brown's intention of "settling down." He has just rounded out a quarter of century on the road and, while he is just as young as he was that number of years ago, he is anxious to get some place to sleep in other than a Pullman car or hotel—he wants to let go the anchor and stick in one place long enough to become acquainted with the same kind of cooking at every meal for a reasonable length of time.

It is understood that Mr. Brown will either open up a theater himself, or will endeavor to interest capital in a string of houses. He is not going to desert the film game, for he sees in this greater possibilities in the future than have appeared in the past, and he is not desirous of getting out of the game entirely.

At Local Exchanges.

Washington, D. C.—Manager Cunningham, of the Mutual Film Exchange, last week gave a private exhibition of the first three chapters of "The Secret of the Submarine," the new serial film story produced by the American Film Corporation, at Loewe's Columbia theater.

Quite a number of visitors were seen at the offices of the World Film Corporation in this city on Easter Monday when World Film Day was observed by the twenty-six offices of that company situated throughout the country. A number of films were screened for the benefit of the exhibitors. Manager C. W. Bunn, of the exchange, is well pleased with the way in which business is breaking with him, and predicts a good season for World and Equitable productions.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA.

New Parkersburgh House.

Parkersburg, W. Va.—Parkersburg is to have a large and modern photoplay house soon, with the combining of the Bijou and the Star theaters. Work will begin shortly on the remodeling of the two houses into one, with a capacity of 800. The theaters adjoin each other and the separating wall will be removed, the cost of the alteration to be about $14,000. Among other improvements will be an elaborate ventilating system. New equipment and interior furnishings also will be installed. Manager P. N. Barrett states that the houses will be closed the last two weeks in June, and hopes to have the improvements completed about July 1.

Fire Damages the Homewood.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Homewood theater, 811 Homewood avenue, Pittsburgh, was damaged recently by a fire of unknown origin. The blaze started just a few minutes after the audience had passed out and the theater had been closed for the night. Repairs and redecoration now going forward promise to make the interior of the house much more attractive than before the fire. Insurance covered the damage, which was not heavy.

Finkel-Rosenthall Wedding.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—William Lloyd Finkel, proprietor of the Colonial theater, on the South Side, Pittsburgh, and one of the best-known of the younger exhibitors of this section, recently joined the ranks of the benedicts, having booked for life Miss Esther Rosenthall, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Barney Rosenthall, of Beechwood boulevard. Mr. and Mrs. Finkel, who have the best wishes of their many friends in local film circles, spent their honeymoon in the East.

Reopening of the Adarry.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Adarry theater, Penn avenue and Matilda street, Pittsburgh, was recently reopened under new management, after being entirely remodeled and re-decorated. W. O. Bacon, Jr., has purchased the Adarry and is managing it personally. The comfort and attractiveness of this house, as well as its offerings, are scarcely equalled by any in its district.

Many Echanges Move

Pittsburgh Sees Exeunt from Old Film Row to New Building at 938-940 Penn Avenue—Among Those in the Building Are Metro, Feature Film & Cilcium Light, Pathe, World Film, Feature Film, Independent, International and Liberty.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—A removal of many film exchanges from the district long known as old "film row," on Fourth avenue and Ferry street, Pittsburgh, Pa., took place during the week of May 1. The new center of the trade, toward which the film section has been drifting for some time, is the building just completed at 938-940 Penn avenue. It is now occupied by a number of the city's leading exchanges and supply houses. The structure was remodeled extensively for the sole use of the moving picture business and is fireproof throughout. Film vaults have been installed and the building fitted up in such a manner that Pittsburgh can now boast of one of the finest exclusive film buildings in the country.

The Metro Pictures Service was one of the first concerns to get into the new building. The entire second floor has been equipped in a handsome manner for the Metro forces, with a suite of nicely-furnished and richly-carpeted offices. General Manager Skirboll states that the new quarters are a vast improvement over the old.

The first floor of the building is occupied by the Feature Film & Calcium Light Company. Both the supply and film departments of the company have been moved to the new location. A small portion of the first floor is occupied by the Exhibitors' Messenger Service and the Western Union Telegraph Company. The third floor has been taken over entirely by the Independent Film Exchange, the distributing agents in the western Pennsylvania and West Virginia territory for the Universal. M. C. Hughes is manager of this exchange. The West Virginia offices of the Independent are being continued as heretofore at Chaplin and Twelfth streets, Wheeling.

The Pittsburgh Pathe exchange has moved to the fourth floor of the new film building. The entire floor is occupied, and Manager T. S. Bradley states that the new quarters will enable his exchange to render better service than ever. The World Film Corporation has taken half of the fifth floor, the remainder being shared temporarily by the International Film Service, formerly at 804 Penn avenue, and the Poster Exchange. These letter concerns have leased the seventh floor, which is now being added to the building, but which will not be ready for occupancy for some time.

On the sixth floor are the Liberty Film Renting Company, of which Mayer Silverman is manager, and the Independent Display Company, formerly at 416 Ferry street, managed by T. P. Miller. The spacious basement of the building is occupied by the Exhibitors' Publishing Company.

SCREEN CLUB NEWS.

Chairman McAleer Back for New York—Political Campaign On.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—John McAleer, chairman of the campaign committee of the Pittsburgh Screen Club, has returned from New York City, where he spent about ten days in conference with the leading film manufacturers and the Motion Picture Board of Trade. His report on the success of the trip is gratifying to western Pennsylvania film men. Mr. McAleer received the assurances of a majority of the most prominent manufacturers and the Board of Trade that they would financially and morally support the Screen Club in carrying out its campaign for the repeal of the obnoxious censor law in the Keystone state. The campaign committee is now engaged in laying plans for covering the entire state in making a vigorous fight for the election of candidates to the next State Legislature who declare themselves for a repeal. The support of the exhibitors throughout Pennsylvania is appealed for by the committee.

While Away Sold.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The While Away theater, Federal street, Northside, Pittsburgh, Pa., has been taken over by Albert Haight, who recently purchased the Kumbak theater, on East Ohio street, in the same section of the city. The management of the While Away has been placed in the hands of Charles Bennett, formerly proprietor of the Kumbak. Mr. Haight now has negotiations under way for several other medium-sized moving picture theaters on the Northside. Both the Kumbak and the While Away are being extensively improved and re-equipped in an up-to-date manner. Mr. Haight is a well-known business man of East Liberty, and his application of aggressive business methods in conducting his picture theaters augurs great success for the new venture.

Ballet With "Dumb Girl" Film.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Pitt theater, at Penn avenue and Seventh street, Pittsburgh, Pa., is scoring great success with a two-weeks' showing of the Universal Company's Pavlowa picture, "The Dumb Girl of Portici." The crowds that throng the big auditorium of the Pitt daily have been equaled only by those during the recent three weeks' capacity run of the "Ne'er-Do-Well." Manager William Moore Patch has put on the Pavlowa subject in his characteristically elaborate manner, using twenty dancers in a ballet and appropriate music, vocal and instrumental. The prices are 25 cents to $1, three matinees and an evening performance being given daily.

New Theater Keeps Shilo Dark.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Shilo theater, located in the Mt. Washington district, Pittsburgh, Pa., has been closed permanently, as the result of a fire in a store room of the building occupied by the theater. The blaze did considerable damage and the owners decided not to remodel the house. Manager Polk states that work on his new theater, adjoining, is being pushed forward rapidly and hopes to have it ready for opening by the end of May. It is to be modern in every particular of equipment and decoration, and a first-class program and feature pictures will be shown.

New Lyric at Altoona.

Altoona, Pa.—The handsome new Lyric theater was thrown open recently and is proving a mecca for moving picture fans of Altoona. The Lyric is located at Fourth street and Sixth alley, and is one of the most imposing structures in that section of the city. It was erected by Contractors J. C. Orr & Son. The decorations and equipment are thoroughly up-to-date. Feature pictures are run daily. William H. Orr, formerly sheriff of Blair county, is the owner.

Motion Picture Specialties, Inc.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Motion Picture Specialties, Inc., of Pittsburgh, is making application at Harrisburg for a charter of incorporation under the laws of the state to manufacture, buy, lease and display photoplay films, accessories and advertising novelties. The applicants are: James Steele, George M. McClane and S. J. Stoughton, all of this city.

Cleveland Sunday Shows

Ruling of Ohio Supreme Court on Sabbath Shows May Not Affect Theaters in Cleveland—Federated Churches Will Probably Try for Closing, but Will Meet Strenuous Opposition from Exhibitors.

By Hubert Persons, Special Correspondent, 10612 Helena Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio.

CLEVELAND, O.—Will the Federated Churches, the strongest religious organization in northern Ohio, be able to force city and state officials to close moving picture theaters on Sunday as a result of a recent Supreme Court ruling? is the question every exhibitor here is asking.

The Ohio Supreme Court has just ruled that moving picture shows are theatrical performances and as such are illegal on Sundays. This law has always been ignored by common consent of city and state officials here, and city officials declare they will submit to contempt of court action before taking steps to close the picture theaters on Sunday.

Rev. E. R. Wright, secretary of the Federated Churches, says, however, that the body's committee on religious work will consider the situation and decide what steps should be taken.

The Cleveland exhibitors and film exchange men are planning to co-operate in fighting any move which would bring about Sunday closing.

"Many theaters would be forced out of business if they were deprived of the right of giving Sunday exhibition," P. A. Bloch, manager of the World Film Corporation in Cleveland said. "Week day receipts in many theaters do not more than pay expenses. If there is any move to put the closing law into effect here, it will meet with stiff opposition both from exchange men and exhibitors."

City officials also express themselves strongly on the matter, Director of Public Safety Sprosty, Director of Law Fitzgerald and Mayor Davis himself, declaring they are opposed to closing theaters on Sunday.

"I would rather go to jail for contempt of court than to issue an order which would force the theaters to close," Director Sprosty said.

"The law is a relic of the old blue laws," Law Director FitzGerald said. "The law department will never issue any warrants unless positively ordered to do so by the Mayor," he added.

"We are not worrying about the enforcement of this law in Cleveland," Benjamin J. Sawyer, president of the exhibitors' league, said.

The case on which the decision was based, originated in Chillicothe, O., with the arrest of Clarence Meyers, an exhibitor there. He was tried before the Mayor and found guilty of violating the law. The common pleas and appellate courts upheld the Mayor, and the Supreme Court applied the same ruling.

NEW SUNBEAM PICTURE CORP.

Capitalized at $2,500,000—Cleveland Men Interested—Begin Production Soon.

Cleveland, O.—The organization, production and distribution plans of the Sunbeam Motion Picture Corporation of New York City and Cleveland have just been announced here by Wilbur Dunham, president and general manager.

The corporation, capitalized at $2,500,000, is to maintain an office in Cleveland but has no intention of building a studio here. Because of the opportunity for out-door stuff and scenic effects obtainable in the South, a studio site has been tentatively chosen in Jacksonville, Fla.

The assembling of an efficient producing force has already commenced and work is to start on four, five and six-reel features. The productions will be largely distributed through the corporation's own exchanges, in accordance with the "producer-to-exhibitor" policy of the organization.

Mitzi Hajos, musical comedy star, and Vaughan Glaser will be the leading members of the producing company. Miss Florence Webber, another star of the stage, will also appear in Sunbeam features.

In addition to President Dunham, Miss Hajos, Mr. Glaser, Harry W. Davis, secretary of the Delaware Trust Company, Wilmington, Del., George Leon More, of New York and John D. Raridan, formerly Cleveland manager of the Fox Film Company and former Cleveland correspondent for the Moving Picture World, will be directors. Mr. Raridan is to be director of publicity.

The company has opened offices in the Leader-News building and has commenced the marketing of stock. Seventy-five per cent. of the stock of the company is to be sold in small lots all over the United States.

SANDUSKY LICENSE FEES.

New Ordinance Increases Annual City Tax.

Sandusky, O.—Local exhibitors, in spite of a vigorous protest and combined kicks, will have to stand a city tax on their theaters, the city commission having enacted an ordinance providing for annual license charges as follows: For houses outside of the fire limits, $30; for all within the fire limits, but seating less than 350 persons, $35, and for all within the fire limits seating more than that number, $50.

Cleveland Shows in July?

Cleveland, O.—The Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League will probably not hold its contemplated debate on the question of closing all picture theaters during July. After debating teams had been chosen and all arrangements practically completed, it was decided to leave the question in the hands of the executive committee. Practically every theater owner in the league has expressed himself as in favor of closing during July. This is expected not only to give time for repairs and alterations, but is expected to bring audiences back in double numbers when the houses reopen.

Successful Showing of New "Casey" Pictures.

Cleveland, O.—The success of the one-reel comedies produced by the new Reserve Photo-Play Company is assured if the audience which responded to the invitation of Robert H. McLaughlin, president, for a private view of the first three of the pictures is an index. The Hippodrome theater was well filled at noon, April 23, when the comedies were shown. Admission was by invitation only and a representative audience of educators, clergymen and profession people attended.

"Casey, the Fireman," "Casey's Dream" and "Casey the Bandmaster" were shown and were applauded by the audience. The pictures star Johnny and Emma Ray, former big circuit comedians. The films were made in the company's studio here.

World Film's "Show Me" Campaign.

Cleveland, O.—The World Film Corporation is conducting a "show-me" campaign for exhibitors all over the state to introduce the corporation's new policy of "Education by entertainment and no suggestiveness." The campaign is the result of the recent flying visit here of William A. Brady, new head of the organization.

Exhibitors have been invited to private screenings of the first pictures produced under the new policy. These are "The Feast of Life," with Clara Kimball Young; "The Closed Door," "Her Eternal Right" and "Sudden Riches."

Clerk in General Film Office Killed.

Cleveland, O.—Hugh Staley, 21 years old, assistant shipping clerk of the General Film Company, was killed April 26 in a fall down an elevator shaft at the company's building, 1022 Superior avenue. He fell when he attempted to stop an elevator by pulling at the cable as it passed the second floor.

Gave the Kiddies Candy.

Cleveland, O.—Children attending matinees at the Alhambra theater on Saturdays have been presented with candy of the kind called "suckers," with the compliments of the management. Special programs for children are shown.

Young Woman Exhibitor.

Sandusky, O.—Miss Louise Ramm, a Sandusky girl just out of high school, is managing a moving picture theater here. She says the box office receipts have greatly increased during her management. She not only manages the house, but sings between pictures, and helps at the door or box office.

She declares she gave up a concert career to go into the picture business for herself.

New Mall to Have Two Auditoriums.

Cleveland, O.—The Mall is to be the first duplex motion picture theater in Cleveland. It is proposed to have two auditoriums each seating about 700 with entrances on Euclid and Superior avenues. The decision to have two auditoriums was made because of the difference in the levels of Euclid and Superior avenues. The theater will be completed in the fall.

Second Floor Theater Closed.

Steubenville, O.—Mayor W. C. McMaster, on instructions from the inspection department of the Ohio Industrial Commission, has ordered the Rex theater closed, on the ground that it is unsafe, being on the second floor. The department is eliminating second-floor houses not constructed specifically for use as theaters, and the Rex, as well as others of the sort, will have to be completely remodeled to comply with the wishes of the authorities.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

BUFFALO NEWS LETTER.

By Joseph McGuire, Special Correspondent, 611 Erie County Bank Building, Buffalo, N. Y.

Buffalo Screen Club Meeting.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—At a meeting of the Buffalo Screen Club, Monday night, April 24, several applications for membership in the organization were posted. The membership list is steadily increasing. It is reported that the Rochester exchange men and exhibitors will come in a special train to the Buffalo Screen Club's Ball, May 15th. A popularity contest with free transportation and a ticket to the ball as the prize for the winning couple is being conducted in Syracuse. The program committee reports that several screen stars will appear in person at the ball. The decoration and music committees are carrying out elaborate plans to make the event a great success. The ball is being given wide publicity in the Buffalo newspapers.

Exhibitor H. B. Franklin.

Buffalo, N. Y.—H. B. Franklin, Manager of the Lyric and Family theaters, Buffalo, gives a nine-reel show at the Family each day. Four of these are a daily first-run of the Universal. The other five reels are choice features picked from the Metro, Red Feather, World, Kleine-Edison, Triangle, V-L-S-E and other programs. By offering well-balanced programs and live advertising he broke the Holy week records for attendance at his two houses. At the Family he carried a large sign, advertising the Buffalo Screen Club's ball, and sold tickets for the event at his box office. He also ran slides booming the ball.

Unicorn Notes for State.

Buffalo, N. Y.—G. A. Hickey has resigned as Buffalo manager of the Triangle to become general manager of the Buffalo, Syracuse and Albany offices of the Unicorn service. His headquarters are at 551 South Salina street, Syracuse.

H. E. Hughes, manager of the Buffalo branch of the Unicorn Service, will remove his offices from 23 West Swan street to 39 Erie street, May 1st.

William H. Lawrence will be in charge of the Unicorn branch at 680 Broadway, Albany.

Fred B. Murphy, eastern division manager, gave a screening of the first weekly program of twenty-one reels before Buffalo exhibitors at the Becker exchange Monday evening. Other screenings were at the Victoria theater, Rochester, Tuesday; Happy Hour theater, Syracuse, Wednesday; Broadway theater, Albany, Thursday evening. The Albany screening was attended by members of the New York State Exhibitors' League immediately after they had enjoyed a beefsteak dinner at Keeler's hotel in that city. Charles H. Barolet, formerly in charge of the Syracuse office of the company, will be assistant to J. A. Eslow, western division manager of the Unicorn service in San Francisco.

Manager Courdingly of Oswego is Ill.

Buffalo, N. J.—J. M. Gorchof, traveling representative of the Mutual office in Buffalo, who has just returned from Oswego, N. Y., reports that Manager Courdingly of the Gem theater, that city, is seriously ill.

Rochester, N. Y.—William Gorski has reopened the White Eagle moving picture theater, Hudson avenue, Rochester, the name of the house has been changed to the Gem.

Rochester, N. Y.—The Star theater, has been bought by Mr. Sheer of Benton Harbor, Mich.

Binghamton, N. Y.—Hider Bros., contractors of Binghamton, N. Y., have built the Hider moving picture theater in that city, with a seating capacity of 500. Jack Boyle has reopened the Glenwood theater here.

Binghamton, N. Y.—The Star theater of this place has been remodeled at a cost of $5000. Ned Cornbleit is the proprietor.

IN DETROIT.

Detroit Notes of Interest.

Detroit, Mich.—It is reported that John H. Kunsky has secured a long extension of his lease on the Washington theater. When his new Madison theater is completed it will give Mr. Kunsky two immense first-class theaters in the Grand Circus Park district.

May 15 is the date definitely set by Frank Drew for the formal opening of the new Drury Lane theater, Woodward avenue.

N. L. Lefkowitz has been appointed assistant manager of the Detroit office of the Standard Film Service Company. He will assist J. C. Fishman, manager.

The Broadway-Strand theater, Detroit, smashed all records on Sunday, April 23, the opening day of "The Ne'er-Do-Well" when 9,783 people paid admission to the theater for the five shows.

Plans for Detroit Ball

The Arcadia, Detroit's Biggest Dancing Floor, Will Be the Place—May 15 Is the Night—Many Famous Screen Stars Expected to Be Present—Plenty of Music—Proceeds to Be Given to Actors' Fund.

By Jacob Smith, Special Correspondent, 503 Free Press Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—Monday, March 15, is the date set for the first annual screen ball to be given by the recently-organized Screen Club of Detroit. The place selected is Arcadia, the largest dancing auditorium in the city, located on Woodward avenue. Plans are being made for an attendance of 4,000 people, expectations being that at least 2,000 tickets will be sold, each good for two people, at two dollars per ticket. It will cost considerable to give the dance, and whatever profits accrue will be turned over to the Actors' Fund.

Practically all of the leading producing companies have given their positive assurance that they will send some of their stars to Detroit for this event. Their railroad fare, incidentals, hotels, etc., will be paid for by the Detroit club. Everything will be done to make their stay in Detroit a most pleasant one.

Tickets for the ball will be on sale at all of the leading theaters throughout the city. There will be two orchestras of twenty pieces; one at each end of the hall so that there will always be music—as soon as one stops the other will begin, and so on. The hall will be especially decorated for the event. In fact, it is going to be a real screen ball in every particular.

The committee in charge of the dance comprises: Harry I. Garson, chairman; Joseph Kent (World) and Bill Bailey, of the Universal. This committee will co-operate with the other members of the club.

Remember the date, Monday evening, May 15, at the Arcadia. Every Michigan exhibitor should try to be on hand to make this the greatest social event the moving picture industry has ever had in Detroit. Don't forget there will be many film stars—and they will be there in person.

Duplex Theater for Flint.

Flint, Mich.—Fuller Claflin, architect and promoter of the Duplex theater, Detroit, announces that he has practically closed negotiations for the erection of a similar theater—Duplex style—in the city of Flint, Mich. It will be in the rear of the building now under construction at West Kearsley and Beach streets. An entrance to the theater has already been arranged for with the owners of the Bush building. The actual construction work will start almost at once and the theater will be ready in September. It is understood that an eastern manager will be the lessee.

Will Gum-Shoe the Theaters.

Detroit, Mich.—During a 30-day period the dates of which are to be kept a close secret, hundreds of Detroit club women and members of the Detroit Pastors' Union, will undertake the surveillance of all theaters in the city. The idea of citizenship surveillance of the theaters originated in the Pastors' Union and already several women's organizations have assured their co-operation.

Manager Campbell May Build.

Menominee, Mich.—Word has been received at our Detroit office to the effect that Manager Campbell of the Grand theater, Menominee, Mich., is behind a project to build a new $25,000 motion picture house in that city.

Howard O. Pierce to Become Specialist.

Howard O. Pierce, publicity manager for John H. Kunsky, Inc., and editor of the Weekly Film News, the weekly house organ of the Kunsky theaters, has tendered his resignation to take effect as soon as his successor is appointed. Mr. Pierce will devote his attention to the specialization of theatrical enterprises of all kinds. He has opened offices at 2030 Penobscot building, Detroit. Mr. Pierce is extremely well known in Michigan and in the moving picture business. Previous to doing the Kunsky publicity work he was manager of the Washington and Liberty theaters. His theatrical experience extends back to the time when he was a property boy. The writer has secured many a good story for the WORLD from Mr. Pierce and with the publishers of the WORLD he joins in wishing Mr. Pierce the greatest success in his new venture.

L. E. Davis Goes to Hearst Exchange.

Detroit, Mich.—L. E. Davis has resigned as city salesman for Pathe Freres and has been appointed local representative for the Hearst International Film Service, Inc. For the past week he has been working in conjunction with John F. Bowman, of Chicago, district manager, who has been looking over the field in Detroit. Later a branch will be established in Detroit.

Harry Goldberg Changes.

The Detroit office of the World is in receipt of a communication from Harry Goldberg, formerly manager of the Casino Feature Film Company, Detroit, in which Mr. Goldberg writes that he has resigned as manager of the Atlanta office of the World Film to take over the active management of the Criterion theater in that city, now in process of construction, which will rank among the finest playhouses of the south. Mr. Goldberg extends to the World correspondent and his other Detroit friends an invitation to pay him a visit whenever they may be in Atlanta.

Pathe Exchange Notes.

L. E. Franconi, for the past year manager of the Pathe Detroit exchange, has been transferred to New York, where he will be assistant to the vice-president and general manager of the corporation. Mr. Franconi has made many good friends in this territory and his unusual enthusiasm in everything pertaining to Pathe—his real interest in everything he undertook—made him much admired not only by exhibitors but by competing exchange men. Detroit regrets losing Mr. Franconi.

L. G. Parkhurst succeeds Mr. Franconi as manager of the Detroit exchange. He has been connected with the local office since its establishment.

R. von der Goltz has resigned as assistant manager of the Majestic theater, Detroit, and has been appointed special representative in the northern part of Michigan for Pathe, making his headquarters at the Detroit exchange. Good luck, Von.

James Oliver Curwood Heads Authors' Club.

James Oliver Curwood, a Michigander, author, novelist and scenario writer, his latest being "The Hunted Woman," produced by the Big Four, has been elected president of the Michigan Authors' Club. Mr. Curwood makes his home at Owosso, Mich.

Manager McGrath, of the New Stratford theater, Detroit, says business is 25 per cent. better than he anticipated. He is installing a new organ twice the size of the one originally installed.

Louisville Screen Club

Movement Started to Organize a Local Screen Club of Exhibitors, Exchange Men and Newspaper Men Interested in the Business—Purpose Is Social—Percy L. Smith of the Mutual Exchange Is Behind the Idea.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Special Correspondent, 1404 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—A movement has been started in Louisville by Percy L. Smith, manager of the Mutual Film Corporation's local office, looking toward the organization of a local Screen Club. Mr. Smith figures upon getting exhibitors, exchange men and newspaper men interested in the club. At present the publicity agents, handling moving picture material, the exhibitors and exchange men are not as closely allied as they should be, it is stated. The Louisville Photo Play Association is strictly an exhibitor's organization. The exchange men and newspaper writers are not included, and have no organizations of their own. Mr. Smith figures that such an organization would bring about co-operation between the three groups, and improve conditions all around. It would be especially good in that publicity agents would be enabled to profit greatly by the knowledge gained through the club. It is proposed to organize the club along the social line, meetings to be held about once a month, with dinners, dances, or special entertainments of some kind every few months.

Mr. Smith has sent out letters to a number of the exhibitors, moving picture editors, exchange men, and people closely allied with the industry. These letters ask the opinions of those addressed concerning such a movement, and assistance in aiding in organization.

TO RAISE ADMISSIONS.

Louisville Photo-Play Association Wants Higher Price Agreement.

Louisville, Ky.—A strong movement has again been started in the Louisville Photo-Play Association looking toward an advance in prices among the local moving picture theaters. During the past few weeks the matter has frequently been discussed, and there have been several meetings of the organization devoted to the subject. The managers are generally of the opinion that something should be done to offset the present high cost of production and all moving picture products.

It is claimed that during the past two years everything has advanced except the price of admission. The movement is toward raising the admission at five cent houses to ten cents and of ten cent houses to fifteen, at night, anyway. It is stated that five cent houses in the downtown districts are handicapped in getting such productions as they wish to show on account of some of the film producing companies barring ten-cent pictures from five cent houses. It is claimed that in the past year or two it has been almost impossible to get good service for five cent houses regardless of the fact that the exhibitor is willing to pay a fairly good price for service.

Joe Goldberg, manager of the Hippodrome, is helping to pave the way for an advance in having advanced prices from five to ten cents on Wednesdays and Fridays during the showing of Triangle second-run films. It is thought that others will join this movement shortly.

New Aristo Opens.

Louisville, Ky.—The new Aristo theater, Second and A streets, opened for business on Monday evening, April 24. The theater is large and roomy and one of the handsomest outskirts theaters in the entire district. The building is erected in an exceptionally rich residence district, which is said to be the best suburban location in the city.

Local Notes of Interest.

Louisville, Ky.—J. G. Connore, of the Indianapolis office of the Mutual Film Corporation, was recently in Louisville where he spent several days in booking the new Mutual serial "The Secret of the Submarine."

Louisville, Ky.—The Ruby Amusement Co., operators of a colored moving picture theater on Walnut street, has filed article of incorporation listing a capital stock of $1,800, divided into 180 shares of the par value of $10. The incorporators are Floyd White, Henry T. Kraft and F. L. Wilhoyte.

Sardis, Ky.—Albert Hill, of Maysville, Ky., has just completed the installation of an electric plant at the Sardis opera house. The plant will furnish power for operating the moving picture machines and lighting the theater, and plans are under way for furnishing electricity to the entire city.

Glasgow, Ky.—A. K. Maluff who four years ago established the Lion opera house, operating as a moving picture theater, has given up the theater in lieu of certain obligations to the Trigg estate, and has relinquished up the active management. Mr. Maluff and his family have gone to Philadelphia. The management of the theater has been taken over by T. P. Dickinson and J. B. Lessenberry. The latter will be the active manager.

Midway, Ky.—The Midway Amusement Company, with a capital of $7,500, has been incorporated by John Wise, W. A. Anderson and W. M. Campbell. Others interested in the concern are Richard Godson and C. W. Parrish.

Owensboro, Ky.—One of the incorporators of the new Owensboro Athletic Association is George Bleich, of the Empress theater, of Owensboro, who is one of the best known moving picture men in the state.

Louisville, Ky.—T. J. Johnson has reopened the Parkland theater and is now using the Mutual service. "The Girl and the Game," and "The Diamond from the Sky," are two serials being run. Three Mutual master pictures and the regular Mutual program is being run weekly.

Sebree, Ky.—H. Waggoner, of Calhoun, Ky., was recently in the city looking over several sites for a proposed moving picture theater. No definite arrangements have been made as yet.

Mr. Exhibitor:—You will get more helpful information by carefully reading one trade paper weekly than by skimming over three or four. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD is the one paper you need.

TENNESSEE NEWS LETTER.

By G. D. Crain Jr., Special Correspondent, 1404 Starks Bldg., Louisville Ky.

Crescent Amusement to Build.

CLARKSVILLE, TENN.—The Crescent Amusement Company, of Nashville, Tenn., operators of a big chain of theaters at Nashville, and other cities in Kentucky and Tennessee, has had plans completed by architects Marr & Holman, of Nashville, for a new home to supplant the present building of the Elite theater, of Clarksville, Tenn. W. J. Williams, of Nashville, secretary-treasurer of the Crescent Amusement Company, recently returned from Clarksville, where he made arrangements with W. M. Daniel, Sr., whereby the latter will erect a new theater at Third and Franklin avenues, the contract having been let to Contractor Elliott.

The building will have a seating capacity of about 1,000 and will cost between $20,000 and $30,000. It will be of brick, fireproof construction and will cover a lot 46x120 feet. A ten-year lease has been arranged for with the privilege of ten additional years. The plans provide for the installation of a modern pipe organ. The company has been operating the old Elite theater for a number of years. It is estimated that about four months will be required in completing the theater.

New International Circuit Grows.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—It is reported that the exhibitors in Memphis, Nashville, Brimingham, Louisville, and several of the other Southern cities will have some new opposition in the form of the theaters of the new International Circuit Clarence Weis, of New York, was recently in Memphis, Tenn., and made arrangements whereby the Lyric of Memphis, will be added to the chain. Mr. Weis stated that he held franchises on theaters at Birmingham and Nashville.

Special Children's Shows.

Memphis, Tenn.—The Majestic Amusement Company of Memphis, Tenn., has joined the ranks of the theaters which are playing special Saturday morning performances for children. The first of the shows in Memphis started at Majestic theater, No. 2, on Saturday morning, April 1. The management had the backing of the schools and mothers' clubs, and arranged an especially attractive program composed of the following reels: A two-reel Thanhouser on bird life, entitled "The Spirit of Audubon"; two educational subjects, "Gorges of the Tarn" and "The Praying Mantis," a Biograph play entitled "The Lady and the Mouse," featuring Lillian and Dorothy Gish, and the travel pictures, "See America First." The shows start at 10:30 in the morning and last until 12:30.

SPECIAL CHILDREN'S SHOWS.

Indianapolis Society Women Interested in Child Welfare Behind Movement.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

Indianapolis, Ind.—A movement which is in accordance with the nation-wide plan to provide motion picture entertainments for children by selecting photoplays designed to educate the young in the proper channels has been undertaken in this city by leading society women—women who are interested in child welfare and education. The first exhibition for children was held recently at Keith's vaudeville house. The pictures were presented after a committee of thirty women had passed them during an exhibition held for that purpose. The class of this "censor" performance was indicated when the censors failed to find anything in the pictures shown which they considered objectionable.

The movement met with instantaneous success not only from the standpoint of the children but from that of the grown-ups. The aid of the women who are to select pictures for the entertainments was offered voluntarily.

The pictures will be shown every Saturday morning during the summer months and it is quite likely that they will extend through the winter months, although plans have not been completed that far ahead.

In addition to the thirty members composing the committee of censors ten women will act each week as hostesses for the youngsters. Several hundred women have volunteered for this work and the weeks will be divided up between them in such a way as to assure timid mothers that the children attending the performances will be well taken care of. The movement, purely a motion picture success, is certain to meet with favor.

SUIT OVER THEATER CANOPY.

Circle Theater Asks Court Order Against Interference.

Indianapolis, Ind.—The Monument Realty Company, builders of the Circle theater, the latest addition to the moving picture field in Indianapolis and what promises to be the finest theater of the state devoted to moving pictures, brought suit in the Marion county superior court to arrest the contemplated acts of city officials, the city of Indianapolis being made the defendant with Jacob H. Hilkene, city building inspector. An injunction is asked restraining the city building inspector from interferring with the building of a metal canopy, to cost $1,800, over the sidewalk in front of the new Monument Place theater.

It is alleged by the realty company that several months ago, or when the contract for the erection of the theater building was let to the Bedford Stone and Construction Company, that the plans were submitted to the building inspector, Hilkene, for his approval. The plans, then containing the specifications for the canopy in front of the theater, were passed by the inspector.

Within the past week, it is alleged in the complaint, and after the canopy as set out in the plans had been partially erected, the building inspection department officials appeared and demanded that the canopy be torn down within three days. The inspectors gave orders that unless the canopy was down within the required time that the inspectors would stop all work on the building until such time as the canopy was torn down.

It was pointed out to the building inspectors that the canopy being built over the sidewalk met with the requirements of the law in every particular; that there is a city ordinance which permits the building of metal canopies, providing they extend entirely over the sidewalk and are placed not more than 12 feet above the sidewalk level.

The new case recalls a similar decision here some months ago when the Alhambra theater owners built a canopy over the sidewalk. The building inspector stopped this work but was thrown out of the way by the heels when a superior judge ordered the company to proceed with the work. The court held valid the law permitting the erection of canopies under certain restrictions.

Indiana Trade Notes.

Indianapolis, Ind.—C. E. Penrod, assistant manager for the Central Film Service, handling Universal productions, says that the bookings for the serial "Peg o' the Ring," have been surprising. The feature is going better than most of the recent serials put out by the Central Service.

Odon, Ind.—The largest crowd that ever attended any theater of this city was present when the Odon opened its doors to the public recently.

New Castle, Ind.—The "Battle Cry of Peace" was the best drawing card in a moving picture way ever visiting this city.

Bedford, Ind.—The management of the Crystal theater recently announced that hereafter only feature pictures will be shown at the theater. The change was welcomed by Bedford patrons, who have grown fond of the feature productions with the famous stars they don't get to see in real life.

Alexandria, Ind.—"Pop" Fuller, popular manager of the Angela of this city, has installed a Wurlitzer player piano in his up-to-date theater and the music helped to draw large crowds to his house.

Thorntown, Ind.—James French has opened a new theater in Thorntown.

Cincinnati Sunday Shows Will Continue

Exhibitors Realize the Dangers from Recent Supreme Court Decision; but Shows in the City Will Probably Not Be Shut Down.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Special Correspondent, 610 National Bank Bldg., Cincinnati, O.

CINCINNATI, O.—As predicted some time ago in these colums, when the court of appeals at Chillicothe, O., decided that the old Sunday law prohibiting theatrical performances applied to moving-picture theaters, the Supreme Court of Ohio sustained the holding of the lower court, thus emphasizing the decision of the Chillicothe tribunal, and placing in the hands of the zealots who have been trying to prevent Sunday picture shows a rather dangerous weapon.

The Supreme Court did not pass directly upon the question involved, but its refusal to review the decision of the lower court is taken as virtually affirming the ruling, and, in fact, no other decision could have been expected. However, as far as Cincinnati is concerned, no trouble is anticipated, and there will be no change in the prevailing custom of showing on Sunday as on other days of the week.

Churches Should Not Interfere.

One of the leading representatives of the organizations which have from time to time registered objections to certain films has taken the broad and sensible stand that pictures of the right sort are no more objectionable on Sunday than on any other day. Exhibitors were worried over the decision, seeing its possibilities in the hands of fanatics; but in view of the fact that the city authorities and the civic organizations alike take the position that there should be no attempt to enforce Sunday closing of theaters in Cincinnati, not the slightest trouble is anticipated. In many of the smaller towns, however, where there has been agitation on the subject, it is practically certain that exhibitors will be forced to close on Sunday, as there is no alternative where the authorities ask it, in view of the decision in question.

Compromise on Sabbath Shows.

Lowellville, O.—The fight by a certain element to force the Sunday closing of moving-picture houses in Lowellville has virtually ended in a compromise. The theaters will not be closed, nor will they be permitted to exhibit without limitations. The council has decided to pass an ordinance giving the mayor limited powers of censorship, and specifically providing that on Sunday only pictures of an educational or religious nature may be shown. While this may interfere, to a certain extent, with the arrangements of exhibitors for Sunday programs, making it rather more difficult than ordinarily, it is more satisfactory than having to close entirely, and if the mayor adopts a liberal construction of educational or religious, it is believed that everybody will be satisfied.

EPOCH CO. APPEALS.

Supreme Court to Be Asked to Set Aside Censor Decision.

Cincinnati, O.—Indications are that the fight to give the people of Ohio a chance to see the great Griffith production, "The Birth of a Nation," has only begun and possibilities of a successful outcome to the struggle on behalf of the Epoch Producing Co. are seen. The Federal Court at Columbus, where suit was filed to enjoin interference with the exhibition of the picture, has decided that as long as the Ohio Supreme Court has yet to pass upon the ruling of the censors barring the picture, the Federal court should not interfere.

Immediately following this decision, which was handed down on April 19, the company instructed its counsel in Cincinnati to prepare an appeal to the Ohio Supreme Court to set aside the ruling of the censors. The strongest possible showing will be made in the appellate tribunal, with a view of getting a reversal of the board's holding, if possible, and the hearing and the decision will be awaited with considerable interest. Ohio exhibitors and people alike are beginning to feel a little peeved at the situation, as they have the questionable distinction now of being residents of the only State which has not seen the Griffith picture, and are wondering if it may not be possible that the rest of the country is right on the subject.

EDGEWOOD PHOTOPLAY CO.

A New Producing Organization to Begin Work.

Dayton, O.—The Edgewood Photoplay Co. is a new concern which is planning to do some ambitious work in the producing line in Cincinnati this summer, according to Edward C. Larkin, its president. The company was organized at Dayton, O., but decided to maintain its principal offices in Cincinnati on account of the greater facilities available in the larger city for distributing its product. Mr. Larkin is a Dayton man and is one of the directors, others on the board including W. M. Seely, a Dayton exhibitor, who is secretary of the company; E. S. Harter, Indianapolis; George B. Fulton, Baltimore; R. McElhaney, Portsmouth, O.; Roth Wallace, New York; Harry W. Davis, Wilmington, Del.; E. A. Gaphart, Dayton, and J. H. Boggs, San Angelo, Tex. The company is incorporated in Delaware with a capital stock of $50,000, and plans to maintain a winter studio in Jacksonville, Fla. It will release eight five-reel features a year.

A Pathe Exchange at Columbus.

Columbus, O.—The Pathe company has opened an exchange here which will be under the general charge of the Cincinnati office, with R. E. Brown as manager. This makes the fortieth branch exchange opened by the Pathe organization within the past two years, it is stated, indicating accurately the growth of the company's business. Incidentally Manager Wessling states that the Pathe collection of war pictures, which is being booked in three reels under the title "The Horrors of War," has made such a hit that the National Security League is using it as the best possible argument in favor of preparedness to prevent war.

R. W. Reuben Gets "Dumb Girl" Rights.

Cincinnati, O.—McMahan & Jackson, who control State rights in Ohio to the Universal production of "The Dumb Girl of Portici," featuring Pavlowa and her company, announced a few days ago that they have disposed of the Cleveland rights to the picture to R. W. Reuben, of the Central States Film Company, for $10,000. Mr. Reuben, the Cincinnati firm was informed, immediately arranged six weeks' solid booking at three prominent Cleveland houses, thus making it virtually certain.

Cincinnati, O.—Under the auspices of the World Film Corporation's Cincinnati branch, in charge of Manager L. Baum, a private showing of unusual interest was given at the Hotel Sinton on April 24, consisting of the first three films released by the company under the direction of William A. Brady. They included "The Feast of Life," featuring Clara Kimball Young, "The Closed Road," with House Peters, and "Her Maternal Right," with Kitty Gordon.

Atlanta Doings

Screen Club Takes Over the Splendid Quarters of the Transportation Club in the Walton Building, Downtown—Buys Furnishings and Fixtures—Interesting Local Notes About Exchanges and Theaters.

By A. M. Beatty, Special Correspondent, 43 Copenhill Ave., Atlanta, Ga.

ATLANTA, GA.—The quarters of the Transportation, one of the most prominent downtown clubs who cease operations when the dry laws go into effect, will be occupied May 1 by the Atlanta Screen Club, Atlanta's newest trade and social organization.

The officers of the Screen Club last night signed a lease for the Transportation quarters at a meeting held in the club. All the furnishings and equipment were purchased outright by the Screen Club officers. Additional furniture and fixtures that are being furnished will make the club one of the most attractively-furnished institutions of its kind in the city. An elaborate housewarming program is being planned. William Oldknow, president of the club, announced plans Monday night for a formal dinner he will tender the club members and friends as soon as the organization is established in its quarters.

The Transportation Club quarters are on the eighth and ninth floors of the Walton building, at Walton and Cone streets.

Lucas Theater Supply Co. Moves.

Atlanta, Ga.—The Lucas Theater Supply Company, of Atlanta, have leased the first floor and basement of 158 Marietta street, and the place is now in the hands of the contractors, being especially remodeled and made up to date for the occupants. The company will move May 1 and will, in the new place, be most admirably situated for the growing business of the concern.

Wide Censorship in Waycross.

Waycross, Ga.—City Attorney John S. Walker has been instructed by council to have ready for the next meeting of council an ordinance establishing a board of censors for all shows exhibiting in Waycross, whether under canvas or in theaters, vaudeville, moving pictures or otherwise. The board will not be paid any salary for services and will be given authority to stop any exhibition considered objectionable.

A board of three will be named, one of the members to be a woman. It is believed the ordinance will be passed. A resolution on the subject has been considered by council, but it was found not to contain sufficient power for the censors and the attorney was told to prepare the proper ordinance.

Filming Atlanta.

Atlanta, Ga.—Historic Atlanta is to be filmed. Beginning Monday the Pathe Exchange, Inc., of New York City, will through the director of its Historical America Department, begin the taking of historical sites in this community. Maxwell H. Swain, special representative of the Pathe company, arrived here Saturday, bringing with him Joseph Rucker, one of the best-known scenic camera men in the motion picture field.

New Policy at the Grand.

Atlanta, Ga.—O. P. Hall, former manager of the Fox Film exchange in Atlanta, has taken over the management of the Grand theater.

Announcement regarding the future policy of the Grand will be made by Mr. Hall later. A contest somewhat similar to that recently conducted by the Universal company will be inaugurated and Atlanta girls, who possess ability and comeliness, will be given another chance to enter movieland.

Mr. Hall is a film man of long experience, and expects to make the Grand theater a picture house of constant surprises.

Petersburg, Ill.—The site of the Rex theater destroyed by fire January 1 is being cleared for the erection of a new theater which will be operated by Lawrence Watkins who now is conducting the Elite.

Litchfield, Ill.—S. E. Pirtle of Flora has purchased the Lyric theater. The new manager believes that there is not much good theatrical and vaudeville talent available for cities the size of Litchfield and as long as there are plenty of good films his patrons will see pictures and hear good music except when he can guarantee a road show attraction.

Bloomington, Ill.—William A. Peterson has re-entered the amusement field as manager of the Princess theater.

Illinois Brief Notes.

Jacksonville, Ill.—Several hundred pupils from the Illinois State School for Deaf here attended a show of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Grand Opera house, making one of the most enthusiastic crowds which Manager Johnson handled.

Brighton, Ill.—Citizens of the town soon will vote upon a proposition to issue $5,000 bonds for the erection of a building, the first floor of which is to be used for municipal purposes and the second for a moving picture show.

Springfield, Ill.—The Illinois Film Company, 121 South Fourth street has been advertising for local people to take part in a comedy. D. M. Primm, who has done considerable camera work about Illinois and G. C. Fortune of this city are interested.

Peoria, Ill.—In celebration of the completion of the new studio and plant, the officials of Barker-Swan Film Company gave a luncheon to city officials, leading members of the Association of Commerce and newspaper men.

Mattoon, Ill.—Moving pictures will be used in municipal parks in Mattoon this summer according to one of the park commissioners. Some travelogs and religious pictures will be used but as he expressed it "there will also be such favorites as Charles Chaplin, Roscoe Arbuckle and Ford Sterling." The plan was tried successfully last season at Lytle park.

Elgin, Ill.—Robert Spears, operator at the Orpheum theater was slightly burned about the hands in trying to extinguish a film fire. The steel and asbestos booth and automatic shutters proved their value and damage was confined to the film.

Oak Park, Ill.—Patrons of the Oak Park theater recognized the merit in the Paramount "The Cheat." Consequently it played a return date.

Knoxville, Ill.—"Damon and Pythias" went on at the Lyric theater under the auspices of Horatio lodge Knights of Pythias.

Ottawa, Ill.—Manager Bradley closed the Crescent theater during Holy Week and it emerged with new decorations.

Kewanee, Ill.—The Majestic theater believes in more than a bare screen and has had the Stage Craft company of New York install a garden setting, in harmony with the interior decorations, for the stage and orchestra pit.

ST. LOUIS NEWS LETTER.

By A. H. Giebler, Special Correspondent, 236 Vanol Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.

Two Airdomes Opened Easter Sunday.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—The first airdomes to open this season in St. Louis were the Queen, at 4700 Maffit avenue, and the North Grand, at Grand avenue and Natural Bridge road, two of the three airdomes operated by Warner Brothers. These opened for the spring and summer season on Sunday, April 23. The opening of the Zelphia, the third summer theater controlled by the firm, was postponed until April 30. An all-picture program is the order at all three airdomes, and on Saturday and Sunday an extra feature is put on and the price of admission, which is five cents during the week, is raised to ten cents on those nights.

Many airdomes were running full blast by the last of April last year, on account of the balmy weather that prevailed in St. Louis at that time, but when May arrived a great many exhibitors had to move back into the theaters because of an unusual cold wave that lasted practically all the motnh of May. This year, however, April has been so cold that no one has moved his program out of doors except the daring Warner Brothers. Judging from past seasons, nearly all airdomes should be open by the middle of May in this part of the country.

Barrett Brothers Buy Knickerbocker Theater.

St. Louis, Mo.—The Knickerbocker theater, at 3145 Park avenue, has just been purchased by James J. Barrett and Brothers, owners and managers of the Chippewa theater at Broadway and Chippewa, and will be operated under the same policy as the Chippewa. The Knickerbocker is in a splendid neighborhood for business, and has always enjoyed the patronage of a good-sized audience. A large airdome is connected with the theater. The Knickerbocker is an all-picture house and was opened several years ago by Meyer Brothers and Pracht, who now operate the Shaw theater, 39th and Shaw avenue, one of the handsomest theaters in South St. Louis.

Egg-Eating Contest.

St. Louis, Mo.—The Cherokee theater, Ohio and Cherokee street, and the Best theater, Jefferson and Cherokee, both had special celebrations on Easter Sunday. Manager Edward Westfield of the Cherokee, had an Easter egg-eating contest, an amateur contest, and Charles Chaplin film, all in honor of the day, and had a crowded house. Fred Wehrenberg of the Best, in the near neighborhood of the Cherokee, gave away souvenirs and had a special feature program. He also had a full house at both matinee and evening performances.

Latest World Film Releases Shown.

The World Film Exchange, under the management of George W. Fuller, arranged with Mr. Paul Stromberg, proprietor of the Delmar theater, 4936 Delmar avenue, to show on April 24 the latest World releases to theater managers and moving picture exhibitors of St. Louis and surrounding towns. An announcement appeared in the newspapers, inviting every exhibitor in the territory to attend this private showing, and many regular and prospective users of the service availed themselves of the opportunity to see the new features before booking them.

International Installs a Projection Room.

E. W. Dustin, manager of the International Film Company in the Plaza Building at 3300 Olive street, has installed a projection room on the second floor of the building, where exhibitors may come to look at the films before selecting their program.

Film Ball in Omaha

Screen Club to Hold a Ball During Coming Convention in City on Evening of May 11 at the Auditorium—General Committee of the Club Appointed—Other Committees—Club Will Hold Exhibit of Equipment at Convention.

Special to Moving Picture World from Mid west News Service.

OMAHA, Neb.—The Omaha Screen Club is to hold a Screen Ball on the night of May 11 at the Auditorium. It also has been decided to hold an exhibit of photoplay theater equipment and supplies for theaters in connection with the convention of the exhibitors of Nebraska which will be held May 10 and 11.

The following committees have been appointed:

General Committe of the Club, Messrs Goldberg, Jensen, Monahan, Van Husen, Schlank.

Advertising, Messrs. Weisfeldt, Goldstone, Mitchell, Ellsworth Goldberg, Doods, Oliver Hall and S. H. Goldfish of New York.

Programs and Tickets—Messrs. Williams, Watts, Monroe, Pramer and Williams.

Reception and Entertainment, Messrs. Thomas, Kirk, Goldberg, Nickerson, Atkins, Ratchman, Taylor, Sturm and Adler.

Manager Sues for Damages.

Omaha, Neb.—Alleging that Oscar W. Johnson inspired and caused to be circulated in the neighborhood a hand bill tending toward a boycott of the Arbor theater at 2506 South Thirty-second street. Geneva Marsh who operates the theater has filed suit against Johnson for $12,000 damages for malicious libel.

New Muse Theater Opens.

Omaha, Neb.—"The Ne'er-Do-Well" was the opening attraction for the new Muse theater at Twenty-fourth and Farnam streets and despite rain did turn away business. Nine hundred persons can be satisfyingly seated in this handsome theater. The decorations are unusual. Four panels "The Nymph and the Faun," are at the entrance, the foyer is a tapestry panel reproduced from a famous piece from Gobelin looms now hanging in the Louvre in Paris and the auditorium has a panel effect of festoons and floral runs of mulberry Gobelin blue and French gray and black.

New Theaters and Changes.

Hastings, Neb.—Charles A. Beghtol of Denver, Col. has leased the new theater building which William Brach will erect at Second street and Burlington avenue. A tile floor with marble trim is planned for the elaborate lobby. The installation of an $8,000 orchestra organ is contemplated.

Chapman, Neb.—Morris Nelson and Doctor Boyd have purchased the moving picture show here from Manager Vansickle.

Wausa, Neb.—Contract has been awarded for construction of the Bijou theater.

Archer, Neb.—George Lindgren and James Sporer have purchased the moving picture theater here.

Bradshawa, Neb.—Park Switzer and son are now owners of the Star theater.

IN IOWA.

Fire Inspections Throughout State.

Des Moines, Ia.—A number of Iowa cities of more than 15,000 population have no ordinance relating to theater fire escape regulations according to State Labor Commissioner, A. L. Urick. He has instructed his inspectors to visit these cities as soon as possible to see that safety requirements are met. Local ordinance will take precedence over state regulations, but where there is no city provision the rules of the state will be rigidly enforced.

Waterhouse Once More Acquitted.

Charles City, Ia.—He's been acquitted again. For the third time William Waterhouse, manager of the Hildreth theater, has been exonerated by a jury of the charge of violating the law by operating a moving picture theater on Sunday.

Fine New House in Ames.

Ames, Ia.—A. L. Champlin's new $25,000 moving picture theater on Lincoln Way will cater to students at the Iowa state college. Decorations will be in cardinal and gold the college colors. Matinees will be run for the female students at the school. The new house will seat 700 and there will be room on the second floor for a dance hall.

Iowa Changes and New Theaters.

Dubuque, Ia.—G. S. Underkoffer of Bancroft, Ia., has purchased the Royal and Amuse theaters from Samuel E. Buettell and will operate them under the name of the Amuse and Royal Theater Company. A. L. Stevens formerly with the Paistorff Amusement company and for the last year assistant manager for Buettell will be resident manager. Miss Myrtle Stevens will be house manager for the Royal. Following the close of the serial "The Girl and the Game" both houses were closed for redecoration and remodeling.

Ashton, Ia.—Fred Breneman who operated shows at Sheldon and Rock Rapids has opened the Star theater here.

Marshalltown, Ia.—E. L. Jones has purchased the Colonial theater here from F. L. Keith, also owner of the Lyric. Keith will remodel and enlarge the Lyric.

Corydon, Ia.—E. E. Orris who sold the American theater here to G. M. Anspach and D. Wilson will devote his time to the photoplay interests in Boone where he and his brother own a show.

McGregor, Ia.—Site for the erection of a new motion picture theater has been purchased by Harry Simpson and construction soon will start.

Iowa City, Ia.—"His Picture in the Papers" was the initial offering at Thomas A. Brown's new Strand theater here. The Strand is handsome, but not "overdone." Brown is the pioneer moving picture man of Iowa City. Billy Burke in "Peggy" is booked for an early showing.

Estherville, Ia.—The Grand theater, operated by F. H. Graef, will vacate its present home. This building and the adjoining drug store will be razed and in their place will be erected a handsome new moving picture theater.

Grinnell, Ia.—Mart & Son contemplate the erection of a $20,000 moving picture theater.

Alden, Ia.—Algot Anderson and Hilding Nylander have taken over the Majestic theater.

Essex, Ia.—The Charles Carlson building has been rented by Mr. Carlson of Clarinda who will open a moving picture show.

Dakota Theater Changes.

New Rockford, N. D.—Although Manager Charles Hersey expected to limit his shows at the new Strand theater (Niven's opera house) to two or three a week he promises good attractions. Early features were "The Kreutzer Sonata" and "The Spoilers."

Van Hook, N. D.—Ted E. Besion and Ed Amsler have leased the motion picture equipment and hall of Charles A. Wales and will give shows three times a week.

Ipswich, S. D.—C. B. Reeves has sold the Columbian theater to John Pesava.

Canastota, S. D.—The construction of an opera house here is contemplated.

Chester, S. D.—B. F. Tufts has opened a moving picture theater here.

Jamestown, N. D.—S. K. Leen of New Ulm, Minn., who took over the Bijou theater plans remodeling the entrance, reseating and redecorating it.

The Week in Kansas City

Kansas Censor Board Compelled to Vacate Its Projection Room by State Fire Marshal—No Booth for Machines and Inadequate Exits—Notes of Interest About Local Exhibitors and Exchange Men.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—For once Kansas exchange men have the laugh on the Kansas censors. With the view of bettering conditions and eliminating some expense, that body decided to install two moving picture machines in a room in the state house at Topeka. The equipment, two up-to-date machines, arrived and the room was fitted up in nice shape, when the labor commissioner of the state, working in conjunction with the fire marshal's office, refused to allow the room to be used for that purpose. In the first place, it seems as if entrance and exits to the new quarters were limited, making it unsafe, while the machines were not placed in a booth at all. Consequently the state censors are looking around for a new room for projection purposes.

Gilday's Clever Publicity Plans.

Kansas City, Mo.—In connection with the announcement that he has booked the new Billy Burke picture, "Gloria's Romance" for a twenty-weeks siege in Kansas City, Joseph Gilday, manager of the Willis Wood theater, will soon begin an advertising campaign that will far surpass any such enterprise ever attempted by a local firm. The first release of this picture will be in Kansas City about May 1. Some time before that small announcements of various kinds appeared in the advertising column —"Movies"—of a local newspaper. This was increased the second day, and the third, and so on up until in May, when the first performance is given, a full page ad will be the result. Eventually twenty-two full pages of advertisement matter will be before the public, and it will be as he says it is—"The largest advertising campaign ever pulled off by anybody or firm in this section of the country."

Bluebird Prizes for Contracts.

Kansas City, Mo.—Out of four possible chances, W. B. Emrich, traveler for the Bluebird Photoplays out of the Kansas City office, has won the prize offered by that exchange to the representative bringing in the most number of contracts during a week. The first went to Mr. Emrich, the second to Harry Rosenberg, and the last two of April were given to Mr. Emrich. At five dollars a prize, it pays to hustle about for the business.

The Big Exposition Pictures.

Kansas City, Mo.—The pictures of the Panama-California International Exposition have been taken over by the Gate City Feature Film Company, of this city, which announces that it has secured the world rights for the same. The immediate territory is now being covered, and an expansion will soon take place.

"Peace" Film in Topeka.

Topeka, Kans.—The Hip theater in this city has the honor of playing the longest run of the "Battle Cry of Peace,"—just completing its second week. This includes the state of Kansas only, however. Generally houses throughout the state have contracted for this picture for one night and have done a lot of extensive advertising for that period, but the Hip has had it two weeks and it is still drawing large crowds. Topeka has a little more than ordinary interest in the film as one of its native sons, J. Festus Foster, Jr., who is a student at Annapolis, is plainly discernible. Young Foster is a member of a company that was taken "close-up" and his features are very familiar. Incidentally, he is the son of Festus Foster, the prominent Kansas censor. As an introduction to this place, Battery A of the Kansas National Guard gave a drill in front of the Hip.

Blue Bird Theater Opens.

Girard, Kans.—The Bluebird theater opened here recently with a very large attendance. Souveniers were distributed to the ladies and a very neat opening was held. Thomas Miller, manager, imported "Red" Jones, a well known Kansas City film man, here for the occasion, and Jones pulled off some advertising stunts, such as the clown and policeman stunt on the public streets. He got away with it in great style and the house was packed. Mr. Miller shows Universal, Bluebird, and Red Feather pictures.

Notes From Local Exchanges.

The Navajo Film Company announces that it has secured some Chaplin pictures for release and will handle some of that service from now on. Great success is being made with their latest acquisition, "A Princess of Bagdad," the seven-reel feature with Helen Gardner leading. This has been snapped up wherever offered and is proving a great drawing card. George Harris, an old showman and exhibitor, and C. S. Steetle, a traveler in the West, are two new representatives with the Navajo company.

A recent visitor to the Kansas City office of the Metro exchange was Sol. J. Berman, a brother of H. E. Berman, local executive for the Metro people. Mr. Berman is connected with the Clara Kimball Young corporation now, but it is hardly right to say that he has been working so hard for that company that he had to take a rest. However, he passed through here on his way to Excelsior Springs for a short period of recuperation.

"Pat" Hall, manager of the Western Film and Supply Company, was recently visited by Max Kravetz, a well known exchange man in the West. Mr. Kravetz, the manager of the Capitol Film Company, at Denver, Col., has recently been to Chicago and stopped off here on his return trip.

E. W. Parker, ex-manager of the Orpheum theater at Enid, Okla., has been added to the traveling force of the Associated Film Service, acting as special representative for that company. He is now in the Oklahoma territory where he has an exceptionally large acquaintance.

F. C. Mills, of the Mutual service, has been so busy lately that he does not have time to think of publicity. Mr. Mills is the author of "dope" regarding moving picture conditions in the local field, which he publishes in a Kansas City magazine, but he is getting to miss out on that feature more and more each month, owing to a great amount of business of his own. "You see, the Mutual hires me, and I have to give them some of my time," was the recent comment after a request for news items to a Moving Picture World representative.

C. H. McCann, booker with the Metro Service, recently took active charge of the Broadmour, the theater here which he has been handling for some time for Donnici, the former owner. Not as a warning or threat to his patrons as to conduct, but as an introduction, Easter Sunday, Mr. McCann decorated the lobby by dressing up in a full Tuxedo dress suit and welcoming his customers in great style.

The Associated Film Service has secured the Missouri and Kansas right for "The Melting Pot," "Cabiria" and "Silver Threads among the Gold," and Missouri rights for "Neptune's Daughter." They are now being sold in the territory by the Associated's representatives and are taking in great style.

H. E. Berman, manager of the Metro office here, has recently returned from a very profitable trip in Kansas, where he did some great work for Metro service.

HEARST FILMS OPEN AN EXCHANGE IN MINNEAPOLIS.

Perry S. Williams, Minneapolis Correspondent Moving Picture World.

International Film Service Opens Office. Hugh Andress Is Local Manager.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—William Randolph Hearst film exchange locates in Minneapolis. Hugh Andress, who has had a long and varied experience as an exhibitor and film salesman, will be in charge. It is planned to launch an unusually lively campaign of newspaper, poster and bill board publicity throughout the territory. This advertising work is due to begin practically at once. Mr. Andress asserts the Hearst office here eventually will be a large one.

Mr. Andress should prove a fine choice for Mr. Hearst inasmuch as he is well known here for his work as salesman, particularly. He has been ahead of some of the best known films shown in the country as well as legitimate productions. His experience also includes work as sales representative for film manufacturing companies which would fit him excellently for his work with Mr. Hearst here.

Mr. Andress has been very busy in these parts the past few days selling bookings for a serial entitled "The Mysteries of Myra" with which the International will begin work in the Northwest. The eagerness with which it has been grabbed up shows the new office will get away with a flying start. A leading downtown theater has signed up for a first-run in the city. The film will open with a three-reeler. A split reel animated cartoon and topical also will be on the opening programs. Afterward will come a two-reeler with another split reel. The serial will run fifteen weeks and is being offered at a particularly low price. Regular International service will follow the showings of "The Mysteries of Myra." Mr. Andress says Minneapolis will be made one of the principal distributing centers for International because his company realizes the city is fast taking a rank far in advance of many cities for purposes of distribution for all services.

New Screen Club Governor.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Ralph Bradford has been added to the board of governors of the Twin City Screen Club.

Some Friedman Film Company News.

Minneapolis, Minn.—The Friedman Film Corporation, as rumored several weeks ago, has succeeded the Western Kriterion Film Company. The Friedman brothers will continue in active control. Business is all right, but incidentally Benjamin Friedman has been found out. His recent inattention to business was not due to illness. The St. Paul papers have announced his engagement to Miss Alys Finkelstein.

Harry V. Slide Managing the Elk.

St. Paul, Minn.—Harry V. Slide, recently manager of the New Lyndale theater in Minneapolis, has taken the reins at the Elk theater in St. Paul.

Exhibitor Visitie to Build.

Slayton, Minn.—A little thing like a fire which totally destroyed his playhouse at Slayton, Minn., has failed to act as a damper on the enthusiasm of O. L. Visitie. Mr. Visitie already is busy buying equipment for a new house which will cost him $12,000. Construction already has been started. The new theater will seat 300 and will be modern throughout.

New Houses and Changes.

Waterville, Minn.—W. L. Buck has opened a new theater, the New Gem. It has a capacity of 400.

St. Peter, Minn.—M. A. Callieot has taken over the Princess theater from Henry J. La Due.

Little Falls, Minn.—The Commercia Club has tentative plans for a moving picture house.

Gaylord, Minn.—C. R. Brown has bought a theater

Atwater, Minn.—The Lyric theater will be devoted entirely to moving pictures hereafter, according to the announcement of C. W. Stenberg, new lessee of the building.

J. C. Moore after a year of absence in the West has returned to his old work as salesmen for the Feature Film Company of St. Paul.

Mr. Woodhouse, press hound for the Strand theater, has decided to cut out trying to play the Good Samaritan role. He attempted to quell a crush of patrons outside the Strand several days ago and while doing so lost $18 to some pickpocket.

WISCONSIN NEWS LETTER.

They Put Pants on 'Em.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

UPERIOR, WIS.—City authorities objected to the nude figures on the posters used to advertise "The Rack" at the Princess theater. Instead of removing the posters the figures were adorned with overalls, men for the larger posters and kid's garments for the one-sheet stuff.

Children's Shows at Waukesha.

Waukesha, Wis.—Discussion of the problem of the best pictures for children by the Parent Teachers' association of the Union school brought an offer from Mrs. Florence Jones of the Colonial theater to run special shows from 2 to 3 o'clock every Saturday afternoon. Mrs. Jones was one of the speakers at the meeting.

Wisconsin Theater Changes.

Waukesha, Wis.—Julius Wasnensky of Milwaukee has leased the Park theater from Jacob H. Schiffman, owner who has been operating it for some time. Wasnensky operated the Park several years ago.

Waukesha, Wis.—The Frellson Amusement company has sold the Unique theater to William L. Dietrich of Milwaukee.

Ettrick, Wis.—Grover & Hamilton have been making arrangements to open a moving picture show here.

North Prairie, Wis.—F. Hess has opened a moving picture theater here.

Wittenberg, Wis.—Otto Ribeck has opened a moving picture show in the opera house.

IN INDIANA.

Leading Paper Attacks Censorship.

Evansville, Ind.—The Journal-News of this city is taking an active part in the nation wide campaign against censorship of the motion picture productions. In an editorial which was given first page prominence recently the Journal-News had some caustic remarks to make against the censorship of the movie. After all the newspapers are really the ones to help out in the fight and this paper has picked up the burden as it applies to Evansville. Since it is the leading paper of this city it undoubtedly will have some weight.

There is every prospect that motion picture men who are fighting against censorship of the motion picture on the ground that it is un-American and not according to the principles of our government will get the strongest kind of support from this and other live papers in Indiana.

Trouble in Choosing Chilren's Films.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Indianapolis women who have become interested in the movement to provide specially censored motion picture entertainments for children only in the big theaters of the city, are having trouble getting together on the selections for the "Children's Hour." The difficulty is not of a discouraging nature, however, although because of this the first shows tried were not pronounced successes except from the stand point of enthusiasm as displayed by the children. The discussion centers in just what kind of a program the most children like. Many of the prominent women of the city and state are interested, including the wives of Governer Ralston and Mayor Bell of this city

Indiana Censorship?

Exhibitors Throughout the State See Danger Signals in the Coming Attempt of W. C. T. U. to Force a Censorship Measure Through the State Legislature—Film Men Will Not Be Caught Asleep.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

NDIANAPOLIS, IND.—Agitation looking toward the establishment of state censorship over films shown in the state was begun at a recent meeting of the W. C. T. U. at Evansville, Ind., and the action endorsing such a censorship has aroused interest throughout the state.

It was announced that it was the sense of those attending the meeting that the matter should be taken up before the state convention in October and pressed to the fullest extent. It was also decided to take the matter before the state legislautre next spring, but this action is believed to depend largely on the attitude assumed toward the motion picture censor at the fall meeting of the W. C. T. U. It is admitted that the situation might develop seriously for the motion picture men of Indiana if action should be taken not founded on good principles. It is admitted that this is not without the bounds of possibility since so few persons are well informed concering the inside working of an undesirable censorship and what it might lead to.

It is safe to say that the motion picture men will not overlook an opportunity to present their side of the case in the effort to prevent any hasty or un-thought-out action which might be taken and which would be detrimental, not only to the motion picture theater men, the producers and others in the trade but would work a hardship on the picture loving public.

AURORA'S GRAND OPENS.

Charles A. McIntyre's Fine New House of Features.

Aurora, Ind.—The Grand, the beautiful new playhouse and motion picture theater, has been opened to the public of this city. Only feature productions are used. Charles A. McIntyre, the new motion picture theater owner, announced before he began to build that it would be a model theater from a sanitary and safety standpoint and it is the judgment of local citizens that Mr. McIntyre has carried out his promise.

The new theater is built of brick and concrete and is considered fire-proof. The safety first idea was not dropped there, however, but was carried on so that nine exits have been provided in case there was "fire where fire could not be." A new screen of the latest model, together with two machines of the late patterns were installed in the theater. The stage settings are beautiful. Much of the design work in the interior of the theater was turned over to local talent and there is no cause for complaint on that score. Mr. McIntyre, the owner, is a former Thespian and should know classy productions when he goes to select them for his audiences.

THE INEXPERIENCED FAIL.

Pathe Traveler Sees Signs of Wholesome Weeding Out of the Unfit.

Indianapolis, Ind.—A. Clough and O. P. Francher, traveling, representatives of the Pathe in Indiana recently returned from an extensive tour of the territory. "One of the things that is striking among the exhibitors throughout the state," said Clough, "is the trend for the inexperienced moving picture house owner to get out of the business. I know of at least three changes which have been made within a week or ten days which will benefit the exhibitors materially in the cities in which they took place. The experienced exhibitors have taken over theaters operated by men who had taken fliers and lost. When this becomes the general rule, and appearances indicate that it is this point in Indiana, then the moving picture business will begin to get a more substantial footing. I don't mean that it has not already gained that footing but I do mean that it will become more substantial than it ever has been.

Strand's Popularity Contest.

Evansville, Ind.—The Strand, one of the leading moving picture theaters of the city has greatly increased business, because of the interest which has been aroused by the popularity contest, with an automobile the prize, which was instituted some weeks past. The theater recently took on a new line of features and at the same time announced the contest. The contest is given the credit for packing the house night after night. A number of Evansville's prettiest are entered in the contest.

New House in Auburn.

Auburn, Ind.—Auburn is to have a new theater within a month. W. H. Willennar, W. H. Schwab and William H. Thomas have filed articles of incorporation to build and operate a theater to be called the Court.

New Theaters and Changes.

Scottsburg, Ind.—The Scenic Theater Company of this city announces that it has filed articles of incorporation and will operate a new motion picture house. The capital stock is placed at $2,200. The incorporators are Henry N. Marshall, Samuel Wells and William M. Wells.

Evansville, Ind.—The Standard Amusement Company of Evansville, has filed articles of incorporation, capital stock $5,000 and will operate a motion picture house. The directors are August Mulhauser, James E. Cox and C. H. Hendricks.

Veedersburg, Ind.—H. C. Whistler, the live wire owner of the Tokyo, is visiting several of the larger cities near here trying to get new ideas for his theater. He intends making alterations and additions.

Evansville, Ind.—The Theater Supply Company, to operate theaters and furnish supplies, has filed articles of incorporation with a capital stock of $7,500. The incorporators are H. E. Cook, R. R. Russell and John H. Foster.

Kokomo, Ind.—Pictureland, one of Kokomo's leading moving picture theaters has been completely redecorated, inside and out. New seats have been put into the big auditorium and a new gold fibre screen has been installed.

Heard at the Exchanges.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Two hundred exhibitors from all over the state recently attended one screening of World feature films. G. N. Montgomery, local exchange manager for the World Film Corporation had charge of the big day, the biggest in the history of the exchange. The exhibitors nearly filled the Strand theater. Montgomery was well pleased with the success, booking heavily on some of the features. Among those shown was "Sudden Riches"; "The Feast of Life" and "The Closed Road."

A screen showing of the "Secret of the Submarine" brought heavy bookings for the American serial. J. G. Conner, who is handling exclusively the serial announced that the serial looked like the best thing he had ever handled.

There has been a change in the Mutual office at Evansville. W. H. Engleman, formerly assistant manager of the Indianapolis office has been sent to Evansville to take charge of the branch.

Lafayette, Ind.—Charles F. Stark, manager of the commercial department of the Essanay company, of Chicago, was here recently to take two 1,000 reel pictures of Purdue University campus, student life and faculty members. The pictures are to be used in the production in Chicago of George Ade's play, the "Purdue Revue."

Dallas Has Odd Theater

The "Golden Oaks," Opened on April 15 by E. W. Copley, Has Several Interesting and Original Departures—Stuffed Animal Museum—Perfectly Appointed Playground for Children—Novel Publicity Stunt.

By S. A. M. Harrison, Special Correspondent, 618 Comal Street, Dallas, Texas.

DALLAS, TEXAS.—A new theater has been opened in Dallas that is so vastly different from the general run that it might almost be called a freak. This is the "Golden Oaks," opened April 15, owned by E. W. Copley, an old-time exhibitor and amusement man of Dallas. It is in the heart of the amusement district, just a couple of doors east of the Old Mill theater.

The lobby itself gives one an inkling of the peculiar arrangement inside. The entrance consists of a large frame in imitation of natural logs, which are gilded. The frames for the posters are also rustic, as is the entire frame work of the ticket booth. Between the entrance and exit doors is a rustic fountain, and back of this is a handsome mechanical orchestra. The screen is at the front, which makes this mechanical orchestra do duty both inside and out. The walls of the interior are decorated with oil paintings of mural scenes with the same rustic frames. The house is very deep, having a throw of some 90 feet. Back of the theater proper, down a short flight of stairs, is a very interesting museum of stuffed animals. Mr. Copley is a taxidermist and all of these exhibits are his own handiwork, as well as the wall decorations and other adornments of the theater. On the second floor is a large play room for children containing a merry-go-round, sand pile and other delights for the youngsters. This is in charge of matrons, and Mr. Copley emphasizes the fact that these matrons are white women.

A Novel Publicity Stunt.

To arouse interest Mr. Copley had large gilded letters placed over the front bearing the legend:

"DONEGAKOLS"

He offered prizes to persons who would re-arrange these letters into the correct name of the house.

Mr. Copley is using General program service and is very much pleased with the way the house is taking. He has issued a special invitation to shopping mothers to leave the children in his charge.

Two 1916 Motiographs do the projecting and a Minusa Gold Fibre Screen is the target. This equipment was installed by H. K. Barnett.

Battle Pictures at Fort Worth.

Fort Worth, Texas.—The Wilbur H. Durborough war pictures, "On the Firing Line with the Germans," closed a successful run of several days at the Healy theater April 21. These pictures were made at the various fronts with the sanction of the German government, more particularly showing the drive on Warsaw.

Showless County.

Austin, Texas.—There is one county in Texas that has neither cigarettes, booze nor picture shows, according to tax reports. This is Lamb county, in the Panhandle district, which has a population of less than 1,000.

McHenry Takes Large Office.

Dallas, Texas.—L. C. McHenry, a Dallas independent exchange man, doing business as the Southern Cabiria Company, moved May 1 to 1911½ Commerce street, so as to obtain more room.

This company has recently contracted to handle the California Motion Picture Corporation's output in this territory and the old quarters on Main street were entirely too cramped.

Mr. McHenry is well known in this territory, having been manager for the World company just previous to branching out independently.

Ed Ward, of Ada, Okla., Dead.

Ada, Okla.—While sitting in the box office of the Majestic theater at Ada, Okla., of which he was manager, Ed Ward was stricken with heart failure April 4 from which he died next day. The remains were shipped to St. Louis for interment. Mr. Ward was 55 years of age at the time of his death, and a prominent Elk, which lodge took charge of the funeral arrangements.

Mr. Ward's partner, Charles Burns, is in charge of the theater pending settlement of the estate, and probably will continue its operation.

Quality Buys "Pierre."

Dallas, Texas.—Rights in this territory for "Pierre of the Plains," the All Star feature, have been purchased from the Southern Cabiria Company by the Quality Film Service. The film was run off for examination at the Best theater, Dallas, March 24, and found to be in excellent condition as well as a very good picture.

Cats 3, Cubs 2.

Dallas, Texas.—A nine-reel feature was pulled off Sunday, April 23, at Sears-Roebuck park, Dallas, with the Consolidated Cats and the Motion Picture Cubs in the principal roles. The Cats carried off the honors by a 3 to 2 count. There was more slapstick than heavy dramatics, but the spectators—several score of the trade representatives—were well satisfied that it was a feature.

Dallas Trade Notes.

Sherman, Texas.—The Queen theater of Sherman has been leased by H. C. Kyle, who was manager for William Batsell, Jr., at this place for several years. Mr. Batsell will still continue the management of the King theater.

Durant, Okla.—The Orpheum theater of Durant, Okla., has been leased to Richard Webber of Muskogee, Okla., by Sittel J. Benfer. Mr. Webber is treasurer of the Broadway theater at Muskogee.

Dallas, Texas.—The United has a new road man, R. W. McEwan, an old-time exhibitor at Hillsboro, and formerly with the R. D. Thrash Film Company of Dallas.

Dallas, Texas.—Messrs. Gwan and Byar, exhibitors at Terrell, Texas, were both in Dallas looking over attractions, April 20.

Dallas, Texas.—B. A. Dunn of the Majestic theater at Mabank, Texas, visited Dallas week of April 17-24.

Dallas, Texas.—Among the visitors to exchange row in Dallas the week of April 17-24 was C. A. Dayvault of the Paramount theater, at Victoria, Texas.

Temple, Texas.—The New Crescent theater, managed by J. J. Hegman, has changed from an all-feature program to one that consists of features for half the week, and program and vaudeville for the other half. Pantages road shows will be booked.

Ballinger, Texas.—The White City Airdome at this place opened for business May 1 under the management of Roy Reeder.

Cisco, Texas.—J. H. Judia opened the Cisco airdome May 1 for the summer run.

Ballinger, Texas.—L. Cohen, manager of the Queen theater at this place, is preparing for the summer business by a general renovation and the installation of two immense exhaust fans.

Road men in this territory report that the smaller town shows hold strongly for the serials. Many houses have held their business through them the past winter.

PICTURE DAY IN DENVER.

"We're a Mile High and Will Do or Die," Says the Screen Club.

By E. C. Day, Denver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DENVER, COLO.—On invitation from Sylvester Sullivan, executive secretary of the National Body, the Rocky Mountain Screen Club at its last weekly luncheon voted to observe Moving Picture Day, May 15, and do its share in raising funds for the Actors Home planned for Staten Island, N. Y.

Following similar action by New York, Chicago, Pittsburg and other eastern cities the local organization adopted a motto and named a committee to take charge of the Money raising campaign.

We're a Mile High and Will Do or Die" is the Rocky Mountain Screen Club motto and the energy that has been put forth thus far indicates that it will be lived up to to the letter.

The committee named by the club is composed of the following: Harry T. Nolan, president, Dr. Grey, W. E. Foley, Al Hagan and Frank Harris.

They are now making a canvass of every theater in the Denver territory with the view to getting each and every exhibitor to contribute 10 per cent. of his receipts on May 15. Thus far the responses have been beyond the expectations of the club and indications are that the Rocky Mountain Region will have reason to be proud of the part it takes in the Actors Fund campaign.

Manager Goldstein Resigns.

Denver, Colo.—Louis Goldstein has resigned as manager of the Universal exchange in Denver. His resignation was tendered two weeks ago and went into effect April 29. His action terminates a period of several years service with the Universal company. He broke into the moving picture business in the Universal office in this city when the exchange was operated by Swanson and Nolan. Since then he has served as exchange manager at El Paso, Butte, Salt Lake and Denver.

While the Universal loses a valuable man, neither Denver nor the moving picture industry will be deprived of his services. Goldstein will open an exchange of his own in this city and will distribute big features that are not now on the local market. He has contracted for the productions of several manufacturers of features and with the public clamoring for big stuff he has bright prospects of making the venture a huge success.

R. M. Owen to Start Circuit Show.

Denver, Colo.—R. M. Owen has sold the Star theater at Fowler to W. C. Bevard and is now in Denver completing arrangements for a new moving picture project. He plans to form a circuit of small towns around Denver and by means of automobile carry a first class moving picture show to each one of them once a week.

Red Cross Benefits in Pueblo.

Pueblo, Colo.—Pueblo's moving picture houses took a hand in the campaign to aid European war sufferers this week. Every exhibitor in the city donated a percentage of the gross receipts on Wednesday to the fund that is being raised by the City Federation of Women's Clubs. The donations were strictly neutral and will go to the Red Cross societies.

News Notes From Denver Exchanges.

Jack Scott has returned from a trip over the Western Slope in the interests of Paramount features and added several theaters to the list of Paramount exhibitors.

Charles R. Gilmour is rapidly recovering from the effects of an operation for appedicitis and is expected to shortly resume his post as manager of the World Exchange.

W. S. Rand, manager of the Triangle exchange, has just returned from a trip to Idaho points. Rand has the largest territory of any Denver exchange and has earned the distinction around Denver of being the champion long distance film salesman.

Ward E. Scott, Manager of the Denver Mutual Exchange made a trip to Salt Lake this week for a conference with Manager Moran relative to film exchanges between the two offices.

Swanson to Put Films at Surgeon's Service.

Denver, Col.—W. H. Swanson, a pioneer of the film industry here, but now of New York, is visiting old Denver haunts, and incidentally making a tour of inspection of his string of theaters in Colorado. He will spend a week or two in this vicinity.

While in Denver he made announcement of a plan that has an important bearing on the moving picture industry as well as the medical profession. He revealed plans for the taking of motion pictures of major operations performed by the greatest surgeons in the world. These are to be reproduced in natural colors and then sent to all parts of the globe to be exhibited before doctors and medical students. It is figured that this will relieve physicians and surgeons from the necessity of traveling miles to attend clinics and will be an important factor in improving the knowledge of student doctors. In connection with the production of films Mr. Swanson also intends manufacturing a machine that will enable physicians to repeat an operation on screens in their own offices.

IN SAN FRANCISCO.

Local Notes About Theaters and Exhibitors.

A beautiful garden has been laid out adjoining the quarters of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc. on one side, while on the other an ice rink has been opened.

C. O. Winrick, who came here several months ago to join the local force of the Mutual, has returned to Indianapolis, Ind., where he was formerly located and will be associated with the branch in that city.

Among the recent visitors here were C. H. Douglas, of the Elite theater, Merced, Cal.; Frank Veseley, Liberty theater, Salinas, Cal.; K. A. Adelburg, Liberty theater, Marysville, Cal.; Mr. Godfrey, of Vacaville, Cal.; A. C. Rattenbury, of the Palace theater, Dixon, Cal.; Charles Goddard, of the Liberty theater, Sacramento, Cal., and J. Piratsky, of the Opera House, Watsonville.

New California Theaters and Changes.

Sacramento, Cal.—Chas. Goddard, of the Liberty theater, is making arrangements for the erection of a new house in that city with a seating capacity of 1700 persons.

Oakland, Cal.—The Sequoia theater has been sold by Fisher Bros. to C. H. McDowell.

William Dawson has disposed of the Piedmont theater to J. M. Hill, formerly of Canada, who has appointed A. E. Tipple manager.

C. W. Midgley of the Franklin theater recently made a trip to Los Angeles in company with James Beatty, of the Liberty theater, San Jose, to look over film productions.

Berkeley, Cal.—A number of improvements have been made in the Berkeley theater of late, including the installation of a Baird projector secured from G. A. Metcalfe of San Francisco.

Santa Rosa, Cal.—C. W. Reaves, who for a year conducted the Berkeley theater at Berkeley, Cal., will shortly open a large house here.

Napa, Cal.—A late model Motiograph has been placed in the Lyric theater through Edward H. Kemp of San Francisco.

Redwood City, Cal.—The new house of Ellis Arkush will be opened about the first of July.

Marysville, Cal.—K. A. Adelberg, who conducts a large house here, presents a show once a week at Hammontown, a dredging center nearby, showing the best features he can secure.

San Francisco Ball

Exposition Auditorium to Be Scene of Grand Film Ball on Night of May 13—Plan to Raise Money for the Actors' Fund—Able Committee Appointed to Carry Matter Through and Brilliant Affair Promised.

By T. A. Church, Special Correspondent, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—Plans are rapidly being perfected for a fancy ball to be held here on the night of May 13th to secure a contribution to the Actors' Fund worthy of this city. Owing to the fact that exhibitors, as a rule, suffered quite severely last year as a result of the Exposition, it was decided that a ball would be a better means of raising a fund than by asking exhibitors to set aside a portion of their receipts, as has been done in many places. The Exposition Auditorium, one of the largest and finest gathering places in the country, has been secured for the event and producers, exchange interests, exhibitors and players are now working hard to make the ball a huge success.

The committee in charge of the campaign for the Actors' Fund in this city consists of Herman Wobber, chairman, manager of the interests of the Progressive exchange in this territory; Mark M. Leichter, of the Rex theater; Irving Ackerman, of the Hippodrome circuit, and Louis Levy, manager of the Exposition Auditorium. Word has been received from leading producers to the effect that they will send talent, and many will doubtless come from Los Angeles, William Farnum having signified his intention of being present.

Selling Jungle Film Rights.

San Francisco, Cal.—Frank Hawkins, representing the E. & R. Jungle Film Co. of Los Angeles, was a recent visitor here and made a short stay with the Peerless Film Exchange, which handles these films in California, Nevada and Arizona. He found manager E. H. Emmick doing a splendid business with these, having recently placed them with the Liberty theater at Marysville, the Liberty theater at Sacramento, the Liberty theater at San Jose and the Franklin theater at Oakland, all representative houses. He left later for Seattle and after a stay there will start on a trip through the entire country.

Rialto Secures Metro Service.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Rialto theater, formerly the American, the opening date for which is April 30, has signed a contract whereby it will be enabled to show Metro productions exclusively in this district for a period of six months, with ample renewal privileges. The first feature to be shown will be "Her Great Price," with Mabel Talliafero, the balance of the opening bill including a news weekly and the first installment of the "Mysteries of Myra." J. J. Unger, district manager for Metro, left for Los Angeles shortly after this deal was completed and upon his return will make a trip to Denver.

Theatrical Magnate May Produce Film.

San Francisco, Cal.—Alexander Pantages, who conducts one of the largest vaudeville circuits on the Pacific Coast, is considering entering the producing field, with a studio in California, possibly in the vicinity of San Francisco. He plans to star Chris Richards, a comedian who appeared here recently at Pantages theater, and would use the films over his own circuit before offering them for use elsewhere. Mr. Pantages believes that this comedian and acrobat is a distinct find and will back his convictions by venturing into the producing field at least in an experimental way.

Federal Officials Collect Double Tax.

Berkeley, Cal.—W. S. Roney, who purchased the Berkeley theater several months ago, has complained to the Collector of the Port at San Francisco that a double tax has been imposed upon this house. The Federal tax was paid by the former owner C. W. Reavis, up to the first of June, and Mr. Roney was under the impression that his purchase of the house would not call for another fee. He has been compelled, however, to pay another tax from March 1st, when he took the house over, to June 1st and in his complaint to the Federal officials calls attention to the injustice of this.

Ticket Brokers Attack Ordinance.

San Francisco, Cal.—Legal steps have been taken by theater ticket brokers to invalidate an ordinance recently passed, imposing a license of $300 a month on speculators in tickets. A temporary injunction against the operation of the ordinance has been secured and the matter will be threshed out in the courts. The plaintiffs claim that the measure is illegal in that it was not passed for revenue, but to stop them from dealing in tickets.

Operators Dissatisfied.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Motion Picture Operators Union is discussing the matter of abrogating its agreement with the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League, it being charged that certain conditions of the compact have been violated. The matter is being taken up with the Labor Council, the latter wishing to have a full understanding of the trouble before any drastic steps are taken.

Turner and Dahnken Activities.

San Francisco, Cal.—E. B. Johnson, secretary of the Turner & Dahnken circuit, has returned from a trip through the Northwest in the interests of this concern.

Work on the new T. & D. theater at Stockton, Cal., will be commenced early in May, the plans for the house having been completed in detail. Plans for the new house at Sacramento, Cal. have also been finished and ground for this will also be broken in May.

Business has been excellent this spring in all the houses of this circuit, even during the Lenten season, and the best year ever experienced by the firm is being looked forward to. With work under way on three new theaters, and further expansion planned, this concern is maintaining the lead it has held for years in the Pacific Coast field.

San Francisco Notes.

Seymour Tally of Los Angeles, the owner of a circuit of moving picture houses, was a recent visitor here on business connected with his theaters.

Hershel Mayall, who took a leading role in the Thomas Ince production "Civilization," dropped into the city a short time ago to visit old friends. Mr. Mayall is well known here, having appeared with stock companies in the days before the great fire of 1906.

E. H. Emmick, of the Peerless Film Service and Picture Playhouse Film Corporation, has resigned from the board of directors of the Screen Club of San Francisco, owing to business duties. Mrs. E. H. Emmick has left for the East to spend the summer and Mr. Emmick is compelled to spend considerable of his time searching for places where the culinary art promises to distantly approach that accustomed to at home.

J. Piratsky of Watsonville, Cal., was here recently and announced that he was planning to re-open the Opera House there with moving pictures. For several months he has been showing features occasionally.

Roy Howard has been placed in charge of the interests of Mrs. Nellie Michaels in the Verdi theater on Broadway.

Interesting Statistics

Facts and Figures on Film Industry in Oregon—State Has 198 Picture Theaters—Portland Distributes Films to Big Territory—Service Formerly Handicapped by Lack of Railroads Is Bettered.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of the Moving Picture World.

PORTLAND, ORE.—A. S. Kirkpatrick, manager of the Metro office in Portland, has the reputation of being the most thorough statistician on Film Row, and in response to a request by the writer and without divulging any trade secrets, he gave the facts and figures which are the basis of this article dealing with the conditions in Oregon and Portland from both an exchange man's and an exhibitor's standpoint.

Population of Oregon.

Oregon has a population of approximately 680,000. Of this number approximately 250,000 live in Portland. Computing the population on a square mile basis, there are 8 people to the square mile of territory. Considering the number of people in Portland, the other portions of the state are very sparsely populated. But as distinguished from other thinly populated states, Colorado, for example, which has about the same number of people to the square mile, a great part of Oregon's rural population live such a distance from the towns that it cannot be classed as theater-going public.

Theaters and Their Patrons.

Oregon has 198 moving picture theaters. Of this number about 40 are located within the city limits of Portland. Portland's six first run downtown picture theaters have a total seating capacity of about 5,800 and the total seating capacity of picture theaters in the city is about 17,000. In addition to the moving picture theaters, the city's legitimate and vaudeville theaters seat about 9,000. With its 250,000 population. Portland is estimated to have 70,000 theater-goers and the average paid admissions are computed to number 214,000 a week.

The Film Exchange Territory.

Portland is the distributing center for all of Oregon, parts of southern and eastern Washington and parts of western Idaho. Between the two extreme points in the territory, Ashland, Oregon, and Nampa, Idaho, by rail through Portland, is 767 miles. The fartherest point to which films are shipped from Portland is 554 miles, to Burns, Oregon, 100 miles of this trip being by stage. Until a few weeks ago, when the Coos Bay railroad opened, it cost more to ship 5 reels from Portland to Marshfield, Oregon, than from New York City to Portland and Portland could book a show to play a four day change in New York City and get the films back just as quick as if the show was booked to play but one day in Marshfield.

Film Men on Trade Committee.

Portland, Ore.—E. J. Myrick, G. T. Holtzclaw and E. Shainwald were recently selected to represent the Portland moving picture industry on the Member's Council of the Chamber of Commerce. Every industry in the city is entitled to representation on the Council.

Baum Quits Censors.

Portland, Or.—Sol Baum has resigned from the Portland censor board. Mr. Baum, who is manager for the Portland Bluebird office, has been a member of the board for several years, having been appointed by the Mayor to represent the moving picture interests. He resigned because his present duties with Bluebird took him from the city a great deal of the time when his presence on the board was required. The mayor has requested the moving picture men to submit other names from which to make an appointment to fill the vacancy. The censor board is supposed to comprise two members from the film industry and five others.

Censorship Becomes More Strict.

Portland, Or.—Less than a year ago "The Thorns of the Great White Way," a Warner's feature, was last shown in Portland. During its run it was shown at the Globe Casino, American, Nickelodeon and New Grand theaters. Prior to that time it was viewed by the Portland board of censors and passed. W. A. Stone, of the Service Film Company which now has the picture, stated he thought Mrs. E. B. Colwell, secretary of the board, was its representative who passed the picture when it came to Portland several years ago.

Recently the board's viewers again examined the picture. They refused to allow its exhibition and it was put to the regular censor board on April 22. It was condemned by the board except that it can be shown at Fritz's a place where laboring men congregate since Oregon went dry. Apparently Portland's censorship has become more strict that it was a year or two ago.

T. & D. Man Visits.

Portland, Or.—E. B. Johnson, secretary of Turner and Dahnken, San Francisco, was a recent visitor in Portland looking over the moving picture situation. He left without disclosing the outcome of his observations. With the coming of Ackerman & Harris from San Francisco, the theatrical situation is somewhat unsettled at the time of this writing inasmuch as the A. & H. people have two theaters in Portland on their hands, the policies of which have not been outlined. The cutting of the price of admission at the Strand where Bluebird features and four or five acts of vaudeville are now shown for 10 cents, competing with other straight picture houses showing seven reels for 15 cents, may eventually cause another change in Portland's realm of films.

"Photoville" House Opens.

Seattle, Wash.—S. Morton Cohen, of the Strand Theater Company, Portland, and a pioneer picture theater man on the coast, has opened the old American theater under the name of the Oak. It is being conducted under the same policy as the Strand in Portland, the entertainment consisting of photoplays and vaudeville under the name of "photoville," a word of Mr. Cohen's own coinage. Bluebird's "Great Problem" was the feature of the opening bill.

New Man at Grants Pass.

Grants Pass, Or.—Ed Lawrence, who formerly conducted the Lyric theater at Ashland, Oregon, has bought out Harvey's interest in the Gaiety Amusement Company at Grants Pass and the Company will now be controlled by Lawrence and Morey. The Gaiety Amusement Company controls the Gaiety and Bijou theaters in Grants Pass.

New Universal Road Men.

B. Latz, formerly in the insurance business in Portland, has been employed as road man for Blubird with headquarters in Portland and F. W. Parker has joined the Film Supply Company of Oregon as road man. This makes three outside solicitors working out of the Portland Universal office.

Local News Notes.

Forest Grove, Or.—Florence Wickizer has opened a theater in this place. A. W. Walker is manager of the house.

Soda Springs, Id.—The Service Film Company of Portland recently supplied R. S. Gorton, Soda Springs, Idaho, with a new Powers 6B machine.

Portland, Or.—The visiting guests at the film men's luncheon at the Oregon Hotel April 20 were Roy Madden, road man for Mutual and H. M. Wilson, representing Kalem's "Social Pirates."

WILL FILM CODIAC BEARS.

Spokane Men Form Company to Get Nature Films.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SPOKANE, Wash.— Al Smith of Spokane, who has been taking moving pictures for the Pathe weekly in this section including a mountain lion hunt in Montana, and W. A. Hillis of Portland, Oregon, representative there of the Union Metallic Cartridge Company and the Remington Arms Company have formed what they call the United States Film Company. Mr. Smith said:

"Accompanied by Mr. Hillis, who is a crack shot, C. M. Carson of St. Louis, Mo., who is connected with the Missouri State Life Insurance Company and W. H. Wright, an implement manufacturer of Acorn, Ohio. I will sail from Seattle, May 10, for Codiac Island, Alaska. Mr. Hillis was with me on the Montana trip and we have planned to get about 10,000 feet of film of the Codiac bear, which is claimed to be the largest bear in the world. Mr. Hillis has hunted there three times. We plan to exhibit these pictures of Alaskan country including some of the people also birds and other animals aside from the bear upon our return to the United States. We expect to be away about three months."

A New Picture Theatre Chain.

Spirit Lake, Idaho.—H. E. Dotson of this city, a railroad dispatcher who a couple of years ago bought a moving picture theater in Wenatchee, Wash., which he later sold, now announces that he contemplates, with associates, to establish a chain of moving picture theaters in northern Idaho with Coeur d'Alene as a distributing point.

Mr. Dotson is now interested in two moving picture theaters in Coeur d'Alene and is soon to open a house in Spirit Lake. The building is now being constructed by H. Krech and will be opened as soon as completed. It is to be modern in every respect, according to reports from Spirit Lake, and will have an excellent ventilating system, fire escapes and fine seating accommodations.

Filmed Lively Bear Hunt.

Tom Hopper, sportsman and guide, shot a 350 pound bear a few miles from Spokane several days ago and moving pictures of the final part of the chase, the fight between the bear and the hunter's dogs and the shot that killed bruin were taken by M. B. Martin who accompanied the hunter on the trip for the purpose of getting the action pictures. The dogs were badly chewed up in the combat with the beast.

Local Business Notes.

Waitsburg, Wash.—A. C. Stewart, who some time ago sold the Empire theater here to C. M. Alexander has re-purchased the place after a year's absence and is conducting it himself. He is using Mutual service.

Newport, Wash.—W. L. Casey, of Fids opera house, this place, has contracted for the exclusive Mutual program.

Whitefish, Mont.—L. J. Sissel of the Orpheum theater is erecting a new theater which will be modern in every respect.

Clarkstone, Wash.—L. J. Fox of Clarkstone has spent several days in the Spokane purchasing equipment to open a new theater.

Columbia Falls, Mont.—O. J. Wolgomuth of Columbia Falls has contracted for the full Mutual program.

George J. Ekre, manager of the local exchange of the General Film company announces that some part of the General releases are now being shown in 50 per cent. of the theaters in this section. He added: "We are fully satisfied with business and the future outlook."

TORONTO NEWS LETTER.

By W. M. Gladish, Special Correspondent
1263 Gerard St. East, Toronto.

"Britain Prepared" Stirs Canadians.

TORONTO, Ontario.—Canadian moving picture fans are being stirred by the presentation of the British official war pictures, "Britain Prepared," in 10 reels. At Toronto, Montreal, Ottawa, Brantford and other cities where the feature has already been shown, considerable excitement has been raised and in several places return engagements have already been arranged. The Famous Players' Film Service, Limited, is handling the feature.

Films at Shea's Toronto House.

Toronto, Ont.—For the first time in the history of Shea's theater, Toronto, the finest vaudeville theater in Canada, the management advertised the showing of a film when the Universal war picture, "The Daredevils of the War," an Italian subject, was presented during the week of April 24th. The posters and newspaper advertisements of the house for the week contained references to the striking picture. During the previous week another Universal war picture giving scenes at the Dardanelles was also shown at Shea's.

New Plans at Photo-Play, Ltd. Office.

Toronto, Ontario.—The present plans of the United Photo-Plays, Limited, Toronto, film distributors, include the opening of four more branches in Canada. Offices have been maintained by this company in Toronto and Montreal for some time but four more Canadian cities are to have branches in the near future.

The matter has been held up, it is declared, through the development of the move on the part of the Fischer brothers to open a New York exchange, the name of which is the Quality Film Service, Inc. Henry and A. Fischer have gone to New York to operate the office there while Herbert Fischer, formerly of Alliance, Ohio, has become manager of the Montreal branch of the United company. M. Fischer, now in charge of the Toronto branch and headquarters of the Canadian interests, has become Canadian general manager.

Conference at Big "U" Headquarters.

Toronto, Ontario.—A conference of Universal branch managers in Eastern Canada was held recently at the Toronto headquarters of the Canadian Universasl Film Company by Claire Hague, general manager. Those who attended the convention included Sid Taube and Tom Byerlie of the Montreal branch, and G. A. Margetts who came all the way from St. John, N. B., to discuss things with the head office officials. Of course "Bud" Lennon, manager of the Universal's Toronto branch, was in the local scenery for the talk-fest. With the expectation that trade activities will increase, the road staffs of the branches have been augmented. In Toronto, J. R. MacKinney, a new face in the moving picture field, has been added to the road force.

The Toronto branch of the Universal will discontinue the handling of various accessories with the exception of tickets, film cement and lenses. The Toronto office has, in the past, acted as agent for the sale of projecting machines and other equipment. The Universal Company is now referring supply enquiries from Ontario exhibitors to Charles Potter & Company.

Rosedale Changes Hands.

Toronto, Ontario.—The Rosedale theater, Yonge street, one of the oldest theaters in Toronto, has changed hands. The new owner is Mr. Rappaport.

Metro in Western Canada.

Toronto, Ontario.—The interesting announcement has been made by W. B. Lubin, Toronto, assistant general-manager of Star Films, Limited, that Metro rental offices would be opened in a number of Western Canadian cities.

Alberta Ticket Tax

Provincial Treasurer Mitchell of Alberta Has Introduced an Act for Taxation of Theater Patrons—Fixes Limits but Leaves Rates to Lieutenant Governor of the Province in Council.

By E. C. Thomas, Vancouver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

EDMONTON, Alberta.—As forecasted in a recent issue of this paper, Hon. C. R. Mitchell, provincial treasurer, has introduced in the Alberta legislature an act to provide for the taxation of theater-goers. Instead of a flat one-cent tax on every ticket, however, the scope of the assessment is very elastic, as evidenced by the following clauses in the bill:

"Every person attending any theater in the province to which an entrance or admission fee is charged shall on each admission thereto pay to the provincial secretary for the use of the province such tax as may be fixed by the lieutenant governor in council in that behalf, provided that such tax shall in no case be less than one cent nor more than twenty-five cents.

"The provincial secretary shall in his discretion have power to exempt from taxation hereunder all persons attending at any theater, any performance, entertainment or exhibition the proceeds of which are to be devoted wholly or in part to religious, charitable or patriotic objects."

It is understood that exhibitors will be supplied with books of the tax stamps, and that they will be paid a commission on those sold. A higher rate probably will be fixed for cities than for towns and villages, although this is not assured. Mr. Mitchell announced that he would explain the bill fully when it comes up for second reading, and it is expected that when it reaches the debatable stage an interesting discussion will ensue.

PICTURES ACT AMENDMENT.

Premier Bowser Introduces New Ordinance for Licensing Operators.

Victoria, B. C.—As a result of the recent interview between Premier Bowser and members of the operators unions of this city and Vancouver, the Premier has introduced in the British Columbia legislature an amendment to the Moving Pictures Act, placing the examination and licensing of operators under the exclusive control of the censor's department of the provincial government, and taking away this function from the various municipalities, which have been conducting supplementary examinations through their city electricians. It is thought that a higher standard of efficiency will result from this change.

It is stated that most of the examinations will be held in Vancouver, with members of the operator's union on the examining board, while a member of the censor's staff whose duties include inspection of all moving picture theaters in the province will also conduct examinations at other points. The first of these will be held about Oct. 1, and it is expected that the work will be completed and all operators supplied with new cards by the end of the year.

NEW CENSOR BOARD.

Manitoba-Saskatchewan Censoring Provision Authorized.

Winnipeg, Man.—On June 1 censoring of films for Manitoba and Saskatchewan will go out of the hands of the city of Winnipeg, and the work will be taken up by the inter-provincial censor board, recently authorized. Concurrent with this, the Manitoba government will establish a system of inspection of theater buildings and examination of employees. The officials for these purposes will be named in the near future.

Hon. Edward Brown, sponsor of the bill which is to bring about these changes, has returned from Regina, Sask., and announces that the Saskatchewan authorities will retain Charles Robson, now representing that province on the Winnipeg board, as the Saskatchewan member of the new board. Alberta has not yet notified the Manitoba authorities as to whether that province will enter into the inter-provincial censoring arrangement. If Alberta comes in, Manitoba will appoint only one member for the board. If, however, Alberta refuses to enter the arrangement suggested, Manitoba will appoint two censors, and one of them will be a woman. The man has already been selected, but the authorities are not ready to announce his name.

Completing a Moose Jaw Theater.

Moose Jaw, Sask.—Work has again been taken up on the partly-completed Allen theater, located on the side of the Monarch, on Main street, and the house is now scheduled to open on Aug. 1. The Allen Company of Calgary, which took over the structure from the Monarch Theater Company, decided to make provision for vaudeville, in case of future contingencies, and a large stage has been included in the plans. Otherwise, however, with a few minor changes the building will be put up as planned by the original company.

The house will have a seating capacity of 950, and will be very handsomely finished. The exterior will be of marble, ornamental iron work and tapestry brick, while the large foyer will be finished entirely in marble. Paramount Pictures will be shown.

Film Boosting Vancouver.

Vancouver, B. C.—In spite of the city council's refusal to render financial assistance, the local Rotary Club is going ahead with its determination to include Vancouver scenes in the moving pictures of the principal Northwestern cities, to be sent East with a lecturer this summer. The municipality of South Vancouver, the Pacific Great Eastern Railway and others have contributed to the fund being raised, and a full reel will be shipped from Vancouver.

Interesting Local Notes.

Vancouver, B. C.—J. P. Sewell, formerly bookkeeper at the General Film exchange in this city, has joined the staff of the local Mutual office.

Vancouver, B. C.—The Globe theater, as well as the Rex, is conducting an extensive advertising campaign for the opening of the Triangle program, and the former house has included street car fenders in its list of publicity mediums. Banners on the fenders announce the initial showing of Triangle pictures.

The Rex, with the first run franchise in this city, started off auspiciously with "The Lamb" and "My Valet," which go to the Globe for the last half of the week.

Winnipeg, Man.—Universal's big feature production, "The Campbells Are Coming," officially approved by the Canadian government, opened a week's engagement on April 17, at the Bijou for its first showing in Western Canada. Canadian Highlanders take a prominent part in this picture, which is expected to have a wide appeal in this country.

Winnipeg, Man.—J. A. Schuberg, manager of the Province and Bijou theaters, started his Triangle service at the Province on April 20, showing "The Iron Strain" as the initial subject. Second run on this and all succeeding Triangle issues will be taken by the Bijou. This picture was sent here so as to give both ends of the circuit a start at approximately the same time. Within three weeks, when a sufficient number of subjects have been put to work in the Western Canadian territory, two programs per week will be shown at both houses.

The magnet of the movies—
a FEDERAL simplex electric sign

Don't think for a minute that a FEDERAL simplex is just an ordinary electric sign. It is really many signs in one—a changeable letter sign that gives you up-to-the-minute newsy advertising.

A FEDERAL simplex will do more than simply fix your theatre in the public mind—it will advertise the feature you are showing that night—be a bulletin of information that will pull in the crowds.

In a FEDERAL simplex electric sign, the connections between the letter and panel are made by plugs in the letter fitted into the porcelain insulated sockets in the panel. In putting on letters or removing them, it is unnecessary to work from rear of the board, as the letters are easily placed in position on the front of the board. When you put a letter in position, the connection is made; removing the letter breaks the connection.

The standard size simplex electric sign is 13 feet long, consists of three letters to each line having a maximum capacity of twelve 16-inch simplex letters. The standard colors are black background with white faced letters. The overall dimensions of a sign of this size are 13 ft. by 5 ft.

Besides the FEDERAL simplex electric sign, we make electric signs in all sizes and designs for motion picture theaters. If you are going to get a sign, you'd best get a FEDERAL. We will be glad to send the FEDERAL theater bulletin No. 140. Write for it to-day. There is no obligation whatsoever.

ESSANAY.

A RETURN TO YOUTH AND TROUBLE (Two Parts—April 29).—The cast: Karl Myron (Harry Dunkinson); Mrs. Wyck (Lillian Drew); Mr. Wyck (Edward Arnold); Mrs. Myron (Frances Raymond).

Karl Myron, aged forty-five and a model husband for eleven years, is astounded when brought to a sudden realization that he is showing the marks of age, "Why, I am an old man," he tells himself, and straightaway dons a loud suit long discarded. A jaunty hat and a glaring gift tie, never before worn, added to his reckless attempt at youth. Myron didn't come home for dinner that evening but wandered about in the bright lights as completely lost as any model husband should be. He was thirsting for romance and adventure.

Then he met Mrs. Wyck, who appropriately was all "lit" up in brilliant attire. The Myrons knew the Wycks, but weren't enthusiastic about them. Mrs. Wyck burned too brightly. Nevertheless, here was adventure for Myron. Mr. Wyck had failed to appear and his wife had the theater tickets. "Would Mr. Myron go with her?" Would he? Easy! He even held her hand all thorugh the show. For a supper after the theater he was compelled to suggest a place; she was so tired of the big cabarets. He did suggest one—an Italian place he used to know—and never saw the cabman wink at the policeman when he gave the directions, for eleven years is a long time and place deteriorates.

The place was raided and Mrs. Wyck fainted. Myron was thoroughly alarmed. In the midst of the confusion he phoned to his wife and told her the truth. Mrs. Wyck, aroused, hastened to the phone and lied glibly to Mrs. Myron. Mr. Myron was at her home, whence Mr. Wyck brought him, she explained. He had had a few cocktails and seemed rather intoxicated. Myron went home and faced his wife and tried to lie to her and uphold the story that he had been at the Wyck's home. He couldn't lie, so he blurted the confession. Understandingly, she made one of her own. "And besides," she concluded, "Mr. Wyck phoned early in the evening that he had seen you in his seat with his wife and thought it was such a joke he didn't disturb you." What she meant when she said it was, "You can't put anything over on the old girl yet." Myron got her meaning all right.

THE FABLE OF THE GOOD FAIRY WITH THE LORGNETTE AND WHY SHE GOT IT GOOD (May 10).—Once Upon a Time there was a Broad Girl, who take it in the Morning when she showed up on the Level, looked like a Street just before they put on the Asphalt. She had the Red Corpuscles scared out of the 2x4 Midget known by Curtes~ as her Husband. The Down-Trodden Man has Her Sized all right, but Not being Strong enou~ to push her in front of a Trolley, or with the Nerve to get a Divorce, he stood for Everything. She decided to allow the Glory of her Presence to burst pon the Poor and Uncultured and show what a Real Lady was like. The Poor and Uncultured knew how to stand-off the Rent-Man and the Dog-Catcher; but when 235 ~ounds of Sunshine came wafting along the Street, they were up against a New Game. "Be sure you dress the Children in Sanitary underwear, you can get it for Four Dollars a Suit," she told the wives who supported Eight or Nine of them on what was left after the Old Man came home from the Corner with his Dollar Ten a Day. She would Duck and the Uplifted Mother would put a Nickel in the Can and rush Lizzie over to the Dutchman's. In this Manner the Benevolent Lady derived much Joy from the knowledge that it didn't Cost anything. One day a Scrappy Kid, whose Mother didn't have a Lorgnette spotted the Benevolent Lady telling his mother what a glorious Privilege it was to wash for a Living.

The Kid and his Gang pelted her with Tomato Cans. She fled and told her Husband the Liquor Interests tried to murder her for reforming so many Drinkers. The Kid grew up into an Alderman, and bought his mother a Lorgnette, which she was afraid to wear.

MORAL: To Uplift, begin Underneath.

THE JESTER (Three Parts—May 13).—The cast: Bob Blair (John Junior); Jane Whitman (Gertrude Glover); John Blair (William Burke).

Having a good time at father's expense is the principal occupation of Bob Blair, son of the steel magnate. Finally he gets into a disgraceful brawl in a cafe and the papers naturally play up the story big—especially those controlled by the steel trust, which it was trying to force the elder Blair to sell out. "Go out and get him good," the city editor of one of these papers tells Jane Whitman, the girl star. She finds young Blair well irritated under the cross examination of the men reporters, but wins him over to an interview. In her story she makes him look ridiculous, the idle youth who does nothing himself and jests about everything worth while.

The story stings young Blair and he decides to go to work for his father. He starts in overalls and again the girl is assigned to the story. Because her first story showed him how useless he was and caused him to go to work he consents to see her again. While in the office she notices John Blair's secretary and recalls a trial when he was sentenced for wrongdoing. She mentions this to Bob, who decides to watch the clerk. She returns to the office and writes her story. She praises the boy instead of writing a satire on the gilded youth in overalls and is discharged when she refuses to turn in the kind of story desired.

Young Blair gets in touch with her to tell that the secretary has been found to be a spy of the trust and was discharged. When she tells him she also was discharged, he sees that she is hired in the place. The two young persons discover another plot, and Bob has a terrific fist fight with Donovan, the man planted in the shops by the trust to cause labor trouble. With proof of the conspiracy, John Blair is able to warn the trust to refrain from pressing him, and when Bob takes charge as superintendent, his father's secretary leaves the position for a place in the family.

BIOGRAPH.

DURING THE ROUND-UP (May 8).—The cast: The rancher's daughter (Lillian Gish); the ranch foreman (Fred Burns); the stranger (Henry Walthall); the Mexican (William Carroll).

Called away on a deal, the ranchero left the foreman in full charge of the round-up. That was the opportunity the stranger and his accomplice were seeking. The girl's determination to recover the money at all costs resulted in a daring rescue on the part of the young foreman, who registered another triumph at the final round-up.

MERRY MARY (Two Parts—May 9).—The cast: Professor Noggs (Jack Drumeir); Merry Mary (Vola Smith); Paul Jerome (Jose Ruben); Brannigan, the lunatic (Jack Mulhall); Miss Twemlow (Claire McDowell); Mary's old nurse (Adelaide Wood).

Merry Mary is the ward of Profesor Noggs, a bookworm. The Professor sent Mary to college when she was quite a young girl, keeping her there through all the years until her graduation, which occurs at the opening of the subject. The Professor receives a letter which states that Mary has finished her college period and will arrive home possibly as soon as he receives the letter. Poor Noggs is quite beside himself, because he resents the presence of any woman besides his old housekeeper in his home.

When Mary arrives, the untidy condition of the house to her, is overwhelming, and when the Professor is called away for a few days to deliver a course of lectures, she avails herself of the opportunity to transmodify the home. You may imagine that the Professor upon his return is staggered. As the finishing touch to her efforts, Mary gives a party to some of her young friends, among whom is a young man whose attentions and appearance quite appeal to Mary. This attachment is noticed by the Professor, who decides to put Mary out of harm's way by sending her to Miss Twemlow, an old friend and sweetheart of his.

Mary resents this move by the Professor, but his word is law, and she becomes quite resigned to put herself in the companionship of what she assumes is a straitlaced old maid, until a happy thought comes to her, which she acts upon. Anna Nelson, an old nurse of hers, keeps an inn near the town where Miss Twemlow resides, so Mary decides to pretend to leave for Miss Twemlow's, but instead goes to visit her old nurse Anna.

Mary's trunk arrives at Miss Twemlow's, who after waiting a day for Mary's arrival, becomes alarmed and wires the Professor that though Mary's trunk has arrived, Mary herself has not yet put in an appearance. This brings the Professor to Miss Twemlow's to investigate. In the mean time, Paul Jerome, who is a doctor at a neighboring insane asylum, is invited ostensibly by his aunt to spend his vacation with her, but really to meet Mary with a view of a match.

As Paul leaves the institution, Brannigan, a lunatic who believes himself a detective, decides to escape, which he effects by concealing himself in the back of Paul's auto. Midway along the road, Brannigan leaps up to attack Paul, but through a sudden swerve of the car is thrown on the road. Before Paul can right his machine, it runs into a tree, throwing Paul forward, wounded and insensible. When Paul recovers, he realizes that he cannot leave for his aunt's house that night, on account of the condition of the machine, and makes his way to the nearest roadhouse, which happens to be the inn kept by Anna. Here he is cared for and his wounds dressed by Anna, assisted by Mary, who makes quite an impression on him, so much so that Paul prolongs his visit there for several days, all the while gaining the confidence of Mary, who, being of a romantic nature, sees in Paul her hero, eventually consenting to go with him to the nearest minister to be married. In the mean time, the Professor has arrived at Miss Twemlow's, and from there institutes a search for the missing Mary. While Paul and Mary are at the minister's, the guards from the insane asylum have reached the inn, after a scour of the country, and inform Anna of the escape of the lunatic, begging her to be on the lookout for him.

When Mary and Paul return, Mary tells Anna of her secret marriage, and together they go to the kitchen, where Paul had stopped to get something to eat. Certain actions on the part of Paul cause Anna and Mary to believe that Paul is none other than the escaped lunatic, from whom they flee in terror. Mary, escaping through the woods, comes upon the hut where the lunatic had put up and seeing the approach of the lunatic, she rushes in, bolting the door, preventing his entrance. He simply marches up and down, keeping guard over the entrance, imagining her some queen in captivity and preventing her escape.

Paul has overtaken Anna and convinces her of her mistake, so together they hurriedly make their way back to the inn, where they find Mary missing. About this time the searching guards come upon Brannigan, and in a humoring way induce him to return to the asylum. They have hardly left the front of the shack, the guards, of course, ignorant of the fact that Mary is on the inside, when Paul and Anna come up, explaining the object of their search. Brannigan, boasting, says: "I have her in captivity in yon castle," and Paul finds that this is the truth, and immediately releases her.

Brannigan is taken back to the asylum, while Paul takes Mary to his aunt's house, where he explains that he has just married the sweetest little girl in the world. Of course, this apparently knocks into smithereens the intentions of the aunt, who does not recognize Mary, until the poor old Professor returns after a fruitless search, to see that Cupid has joined hands with fate to bring about the very condition that the old folks wished for.

Gerry when the young millionaire roughly refuses to aid her. Gerry, making a pretence of "settling down to business," has opened offices as an architect. Mona awakens his interest by posing as a wealthy girl interested in the erection of a bungalow.

Later, through a well-planned "accident" they become acquainted with Mary and her supposed father, Deering, posing as a telegraph company employee. Gerry's unscrupulous cupidity makes him an easy victim for a scheme to make large sums of money by using advance knowledge of the racing results which Deering is supposed to receive. The suspense is increased steadily in a series of strong incidents that ends with Gerry musing over a sternly-taught lesson and the washerwoman happy in the return of her money.

HAM'S WATERLOO (April 25).—The cast: Ham (Lloyd V. Hamilton); Bud (Bud Duncan), Miss Nearly-a-bride (Norma Nicholls). Directed by Harry Edwards.

Ham has proven the successful suitor for Norma's hand, but Bud though vanquished still has hopes. With Bud butting in, and the girl's father decidedly opposed to Ham, the big fellow's days are anything but pleasant. But at last he reaches the wedding day and in his compassion he invites Bud to the feast. All goes well, until he notices Bud passing a note under the table to Norma. As Norma is entirely innocent, Ham slips his hand under the table and takes the note. He then slips a reply back, "Meet me in Ham's room." Bud falls. But what a meeting! Ham is "prepared"—with the weapon a fire-hose. The things that happen after that leave the house a wreck and Ham without a bride.

COUNTING OUT THE COUNT (April 26).—The cast: Trixie Carr (Ethel Teare); Dick (Jack MacDermott); Count de Wigglesby (Victor Rottman); Mrs. Carr (Mrs. A. Davenport); Trixie's father and Trixie's uncle (Gus Leonard); Sophie (Myrta Sterlin). Author, Samuel J. Taylor. Director, William Beaudine.

Trixie's father's greatest worry is keeping the suitors away; her uncle must lay awake nights devising schemes to get Sophie married. When the Count de Wigglesby arrives Trixie's mother bans Dick, the favored suitor, so that young man conspires with Trixie, after many vain attempts to get rid of the Count in ordinary ways, to marry him off to Sophie. Trixie pretends to be capitivated by the Count's attentions, but, she says, "I am not going to take any chance of losing you. You must sign a contract to marry me." Dick is introduced as her lawyer, and the Count is marched off to Sophie's father, who looks just like his brother, Trixie's father. The contract is signed, but when the Count sees Sophie he collapses. Later Dick, by the heroic deed of jumping overboard after Mrs. Carr's dog, earns Trixie's hand. Of course, only that wise young woman knew that it was Dick himself who kicked the pet overboard.

A LUCKY MISTAKE (April 28).—The cast: Sis Hopkins (Rose Melville); Mr. Skeezicks (Richard Purdon); Mrs. Skeezicks (Olive West); Nell Skeezicks (Mary Kennedy); Jack (Arthur Albertson); Nervy Nat (Henry Murdock); His aide (Fred Schierbaum). Author, Frank Howard Clark. Produced by Robert Ellis.

Jack, whose office is right across the hall from Mr. Skeezicks, wants to marry Nell, but he will be lucky if he pays his board bill if he doesn't get the five thousand needed for his account with the brokers soon. Nervy Nat is wise enough to pick Skeezicks' office when he plans a robbery. He forces Skeezicks to telephone to his home, "Send $5,000 down here right away." Sis is sent with the money. Of course she has to make a mistake and deliver it to Jack with word that it is "From Mister Skeezicks."

Jack, overjoyed, rushes off to his brokers. Sis, however, has to turn back for the bag she has forgotten and this time she walks into the right office to find Skeezicks bound and gagged. Sis quickly chases Nervy Nat and then there is great hub-bub when Skeezicks learns that his five thousand has been given to someone else. Sis and Skeezicks arrive home to find Nervy Nat rifling the family safe. He is captured just before Jack arrives with the news that he has cleaned up a small fortune on his stocks and that Mr. Skeezicks must share the profits since his five thousand saved the day.

THE TRAIL OF DANGER (No. 77 of the "Hazards of Helen"—April 29).—The cast: The Operator (Helen Gibson); Train Despatcher (George Williams); Detective Burton (Roy Watson); The conspirators (P. Pembroke, Harry Schum and Ray Lincoln). Directed by James Davis.

Following the wreck of the pay-car, it is rifled by a band of conspirators. All but one of the band later succeed in making their escape from the town by automobile, but this one is forced to jump aboard a freight train to which is attached the wreck train and huge crane. It is planned for the automobile to follow the train and when far out in the country he will jump from the car and rejoin his companions.

The conspirator's actions in waving to his companions as the train is just beyond Helen's station arouses her suspicions and she remembers the warning sent out from headquarters. Jumping on her horse she sets out cross-country on a short cut to warn the engineer and crew of the train. As she passes the automobile the bravest of the conspirators jumps from the speeding car to the horse's back and soon forces Helen to a stop. In the scuffle she has dropped her revolver but the spurs applied to the horse throw her captor to the ground and in a flash she has swept along the road and, leaning far out of the saddle, regained the revolver.

A short-cut brings her up with the train, but as she cannot attract the attention of the engineer, and crew of the wreck-car, grasping the situation, turns the huge crane out over the road and dropping the chain within her reach swings her through the air to the speeding train. It is but a few moments before the train is brought to a stop and the band captured.

THE MAN WITHIN (Three Parts—May 1).—The cast: Tom Melford (Tom Mix); Vi Gatlin (Victoria Forde); John Gatlin (Pat Chrisman); Gafney (Sid Jordan); Gunner (Joe Ryan). Written by E. Lynn Summers. Directed by Tom Mix.

Tom Melford, foreman of the Double O ranch, has one weakness—that of strong drink. John Gatlin and his daughter, Vi, arrive at the Redwood Hotel, where it is a case of love at first sight between Tom and Gatlin's daughter.

Gatlin purchases the Double O ranch, and Tom continues as his ranch foreman. He also discovers Tom's secret fondness for whiskey. Tom and Vi marry and announce the news to Vi's father, who, infuriated, denounces Tom as a drunkard and drives them both away from the ranch.

The home of Tom and Vi is blessed with a little daughter. Tom, one day, is summoned to Sonora to break wild horses, just as Loraine, the little one becomes ill. After his work, Tom is tempted to drink, visits the Golden Nugget saloon and indulges in a spree. Vi sends word to Tom that their little daughter is dying.

The baby dies and Vi leaves her home. She returns to her father, but again he refuses her a home. Vi, now homeless, accepts the position of cook at the Golden Nugget saloon. There, the photograph of her dead child is taken from her and made sport of by the habitues of the place.

Tom sobers up, returns home and finds a note from Vi telling him of the death of their child. He then and there vows never again to touch strong drink and goes forth in search of gold and becomes a better man.

A renegade discovers Tom's gold mine, ties Tom to a tree, and flees to the claim agent's office. Tom shoots the rope tying him to the tree into two parts, makes his escape, overtakes the renegade and after a sensational battle, overpowers the man and registers his claim.

In the meantime, Vi makes her escape from the place and is pursued by two ruffians. Tom sees the picture of his dead baby behind the bar, recovers it, mounts a horse and goes in search of his wife. He rescues her just in time.

AN ELEPHANT'S GRATITUDE (May 6).—The cast: John Blythe (Harry Lonsdale); Ellen Blythe (Edith Johnson); Huntley Jackson (Leo Pierson); Kasu (Dan Noonan). Written by Mrs. Carrie Hagerman. Produced by Thomas Santschi.

A STRANGER IN NEW YORK (Three Parts—May 8).—The cast: A. Stranger (Otis Harlan); I. Collier Downe (Robert Bolder); Wright Innitt (John Charles); Mrs. Wright Innitt (Emma Glenwood); Miss Weigh Innitt (Grace Darmond). Directed by T. N. Heffron. Scenario by Gilson Willets.

A. Stranger, who registers from any old place, calls on I. Collier Downe, a Chicago millionaire to sell the famous volume "Success Secrets." They reach an agreement by which A. Stranger, furnished with funds by Downe, goes to New York to clean up a million in seven days.

In New York, A. Stranger, posing as I. Collier Downe, meets Wright Innitt, a New York society leader, and his daughter Weigh Innitt. Posing as a hotel detective, he secures money from a guest, and speculates in Prune Juice stock, which is quoted at one cent a share. His spectacular adventures arouse the attention of the Metropolitan Press, and when it is discovered that the pseudo I. Collier Downe uses Prune Juice to bathe in, Prune Juice becomes the fashion in social circles. The former book agent capitalizes his notoriety, and Prune Juice stock rockets to $28.00 a share.

The real wife of the real I. Collier Downe lives in the New York Hotel, where the false I. Collier Downe holds forth. She believes her real husband is there. In the mean time, the real I. Collier Downe reads in the newspapers of his impersonator's success and newly-found fortune in Gotham. He hurries to New York to cash in and expose the faker, so-called. He is refused entrance to the hotel, and the former book agent is instrumental in having I. Collier Downe incarcerated in a lunatic asylum.

Then it is that the man who impersonates the real I. Collier Downe sells his stock for a million dollars and immediately thereafter there is a crash in Prune Juice stock, which breaks to a jitney per share. The real I. Collier Downe makes his escape from the asylum and rushes into the hotel, confronting A. Stranger and his friends. I. Collier Downe's wife spies her husband and there is a reconciliation. "We promised to split fifty fifty on the money I made in New York, and here is half of the check," says A. Stranger, and I. Collier Downe and his impersonator divide the proceeds.

THE SHERIFF'S DUTY (May 13).—The cast: Sheriff Gibbons (Joe Ryan); Dan Nelson (Pat Christmas); Betty Nelson (Betty Keller); Ed. Jones (Sid Jordan). Written and produced by Tom Mix.

Sheriff Gibbons is in love with Betty Nelson, daughter of Dan Nelson, an old miner. Ed. Jones, infuriated because he has lost in the game of love, threatens Nelson, and is reprimanded by the sheriff.

Ed. Jones discovers that Betty's father has found pay dirt. He overpowers Nelson in his home and escapes with the gold. The sheriff and Betty, returning from a ride, find the old man in a weakened condition. Sheriff Gibbons and a posse go in pursuit of Jones, locate him, and by strategy the sheriff captures the cowpuncher without a shot. The sheriff returns with the stolen gold to Dan Nelson. The boys take Jones to the lock-up, but the sheriff remains behind and takes Betty into his arms.

CELESTE OF THE AMBULANCE CORPS (Three Parts—May 9).—The cast: Celeste (Leonie Flugrath); William Howard (Charles Sutton); Captain Haywood (Pat O'Malley); Paul Hewitt (Paul Bliss); two war veterans (Harry Linson and Julian Reed). Director Burton George.

Celeste is the granddaughter of William Howard, a Civil War veteran. She leads a life of ease and luxury. Her only care lies in keeping her appointments for the theater and the dance. War is declared, but her grandfather's perturbance means nothing to her.

That evening grandfather's cronies meet with him to discuss the coming war. One, sightless, the other with but one arm, they recant the horfors of the old days. As they tell their tales, one describing the loss of his sight, the other, the loss of his arm, Celeste sits by horrified. For the first time she realizes that life is not one great round of pleasure. They picture in detail the sufferings and agonies of battle—the dead, the dying, the wounded, the shrieks of the shell and the screams of its victims. The one bright spot, and they bow their heads in reverence as they speak of it, the comforting presence of the Red Cross nurse. To the women of old, they lift their glasses. Celeste feels her insignificance, and, with a strong resolve, she determines to prove the womanhood of the women of today. She will enlist in the war as a Red Cross nurse.

In the crucible of war, the butterfly is born again. Celeste, once a little child of never-a-care, picks her way around the battlefield, nursing, ministering, and saying words of cheer to the wounded. The hellish tests of war have shown her a real man. She now knows a strong and earnest love, and when a piercing shell lays Captain Haywood low, she grasps his sword and faces the enemy, only to suffer his fate, and to fall dead across his body. But their spirits pass into eternity to enjoy the love that knows no end.

A MIX-UP IN BLACK (May 10).—The cast: Bob Banderbilt (Raymond McKee); Anita Gould (Sally Crute); Dorothy Morgan, her chum (Gladys Gane); Anita's mother (Mabel Dwight); Jim Whitney (Guido Colucci). Directed by Will Louis.

Bob is late for the office. "Let her out," he yells to his chauffeur. Anita is going over to help Dorothy get out the invitations for her dinner party. Anita's car has a blow-out and just then Bob's machine passes. He stops to help her. Bob hurts his finger and Anita ties it up for him. They look into each other's eyes—they smile———they love; and each forgets to ask the other's name.

Bob's club is rehearsing its minstrel show. Only five minutes to catch the last train. Bob rushes off without a chance to remove his make-up. He enters the train and there—there is the one girl of his dreams. She knows him not, and Bob, in his grotesque make-up, dares not reveal himself.

Anita is bound for Dorothy's dinner party The train stops. Anita leaves the train. She also leaves her purse—and Bob sees it. Off he rushes after her car. He reaches Dorothy's house just a few minutes after Anita arrives, and finds both girls very much upset. The butler in Dorothy's home is intoxicated and so, unable to serve the dinner party that night. As Bob returns Anita's purse to her, Dorothy offers to employ him in the butler's stead. Bob, who, of course, has been mistaken for a real negro, accepts. Butling, of course, has never been Bob's strong point, and such small accidents as tipping the soup plates or dividing the gravy impartially among all the ladies' gowns, must be expected. But Bob is compelled to disclose his real identity. The police enter the house in search of the negro thief, and Bob has to take off the make-up to save himself. When Anita sees him, she recognizes her knight errant and then—oh, well, that's altogether different.

IMP.

WHEN A WIFE WORRIES (May 9).—The cast: Prof. Cecil Cimp (Victor Potel); Sallie Sloppus (Jane Bernoudy); Mrs. Cecil Cimp (Doris Fellows); Willie Wise (Eddie Boland); Harry Pepper (Harry Mann). Written and produced by Hal Clotworthy.

Prof. Cecil Cimp, a beauty doctor, is the father of an infant son, who is heir to all the Cimp wealth in cosmetics, face powders and hot towels. Sallie Sloppus, who is the maid-of-all-work in the Cimp household, discovers that Cimp, Jr., has cut a tooth. Prof. Cimp is notified of the epochal event and, ignoring the advice of wife, maid and mother-in-law, goes forth to find the proper article on which his son and heir should cut his teeth.

Meeting Willie Wise and Harry Pepper, he is convinced by them that the only safe thing for a baby to cut his teeth on is the wishbone of a cuckoo. Convoyed by Willie Wise and Harry Pepper, Prof. Cimp starts forth to find a cuckoo's wishbone. He meets with many wild adventures, and when he returns home early the following morning and meets the wife, who has waited his arrival throughout the night, he experiences even more exciting ones.

THE GO-BETWEEN (May 10).—The cast: Bill Harding (William Garwood); Rosemary Brandon (Violet Mersereau); May Wilson (Gene Dumar); William Harding, Sr. (Bert Busby). Written by Samuel Greiner. Produced by William Garwood.

Bill Harding, a young bacteriologist, is in love with May Wilson and confides this to Rosemary Brandon; not suspecting that Rosemary cherishes any other sentiment than friendship for him. Rosemary is naturally disappointed when he makes this confession, but promies, nevertheless, to do what she can to induce May to look favorably upon his suit.

On his arrival home his father hands him a letter announcing his appointment to a position in the bacteriological division of the Smithsonian Institute, with a request that he take up his duties at Washington as soon as possible. Accordingly he proposes to May, but is rejected.

Two months later we see Bill at the Smithsonian Institute engaged in a bacteriological experiment. The postman hands him a letter from May in which she tells him that Rosemary has prevailed on her to become his wife. Transported with delight over this welcome news, he allows the liquid contents of a tube to drop on his hand unnoticed. After a while he notices the dripping, and rushes over to the hydrant to bathe his hand in cold water.

Bill returns to his home town by the next train. After greeting his father, he confides to him that May is to become his wife. The old man congratulates him in a half-hearted way, and says: "I wish it had been Rosemary." On leaving his house shortly afterwards, Bill reels and nearly falls on the steps. He is helped back into the house, and is put to bed.

After a physician has diagnosed his case, Bill's father rings up Rosemary, who is helping May to prepare her trousseau. Rosemary is horrified at the message and at once informs May that Bill is down with typhus fever. Rosemary and May hasten to Bill's house, but are stopped at the entrance by the attending physician, who warns them that their lives are in danger if they go near the patient. May is undecided as to what she had better do, but Rosemary enters the house without a moment's hesitation.

Two days later May is still undecided. Meanwhile, Rosemary has been nursing Bill through his serious illness, imperiling her own life. In his delirium Bill thinks Rosemary is May. He draws her to him, and kisses her. After the crisis his illness takes a favorable turn, and Rosemary withdraws before he knows who has been his nurse. The danger over, May enters the sick room, and is overwhelmed with shame as Bill expresses his gratitude for her unselfish devotion. She calls on Rosemary and says to her: "I know your secret; you love him."

Later, when Bill calls on May after his recovery she draws back as he tries to embrace her, and, confessing that it was Rosemary instead of herself who nursed him back to health, she covers her face with her hands as she rushes out of the room. In the final scene Rosemary is trying on the bridal veil intended for May just as Bill enters, and endeavors to pull it off in great confusion. Bill, however, prevents her from doing this, as he looks tenderly into her eyes and enfolds her in his arms.

THE CAPITAL PRIZE (Two parts—May 12).—The cast: George Dumont (Harry Benham); Mrs. Dumont (Mrs. J. H. Brindage); Muriel Trent (Miss McGrae); Mary Lane (Tina Marshall); Baron Reze (Joseph Granby). Written by Edwin Stevens and Norbet Lusk. Produced by Edwin Stevens.

George Dumont is warned by the secret service bureau that he is in grave danger of losing the formula of an explosive he has invented. It is known to be coveted by foreign powers. To be sure the formula is safe, George opens his vibro-tone vault. This is done by striking certain notes on the piano, which causes the door to swing open. The formula is undisturbed.

George's mother and a number of society women are planning a war sufferers' bazaar. Muriel Trent, one of the girls, suggests they have a lottery, and for the capital prize daringly bits upon—George Dumont; that is, he will be the lucky girl's beau for a whole week. George consents.

The town boasts a fine laundress—Mary Lane. She is shy, dresses plainly and is hardly noticed. She makes an apparent mistake when she steps into the Dumont library carrying her basket of laundry—just in time to prevent the murder of George by the Baron—who has received instructions from his government to stop at nothing to obtain immediate possession of the formula. George, unaware of the Baron's attempt on his life, courteously ushers Mary out through the hall.

Muriel Trent schemes to win the lottery. George is on exhibition in the lottery booth. Every woman has a ticket, including Mary Lane. Mistakes will happen, however, and the winner of "the perfect beau" is none other than Mary Lane. A sensation follows, increased when George's mother befriends the bashful girl, and invites her to put herself in Mrs. Dumont's hands. Mary goes home with George and his mother.

Baron Rezek, listening outside the library door when Gorge places his mother's jewels in the vault, hears the combination of notes which opens it. Late that night Mary, in her room upstairs, remembers the lottery ticket she has misplaced, and creeps down to the library for it. Finding the ticket, she curls up in the big chair before the glowing fire.

Baron Rezek comes downstairs, intent upon opening the vault. His fingers fairly ache to try the combination on the piano. But he sees Mary apparently asleep, and reluctantly goes out. Mary has seen it all. At the end of the week George's mother gives Mary her last party. While the drawing room is crowded Baron Rezek determines to open the vault.

The music and conversation will enable him to work undisturbed. But Mary, hearing him strike the combination, quietly steals out and while the Baron is inside the vault she closes the door. Then, summoning George and the excited guests, she cries, "Open the vault."

George strikes the combination, the door swings open and Baron Rezek totters out and falls. Mary snatches from his inside pocket the precious formula and then snaps handcuffs on his wrists. Amazed, George asks who she is. "I'm Mary Lane, of the Secret Service," she answers. Her mission completed, Mary is leaving for good when George intercepts her. He induces Mary to change her mind and become his capital prize—for life.

LAEMMLE.

HER HUSBAND'S HONOR (Two parts—May 11).—The cast: Richard Otto (Emory Johnson); Mabel, his wife (Dorothy Davenport); Tom Willis (T. D. Crittenden); Baby Otto (Frankie Lee). Scenario by Eugene De Rue. Produced by Lloyd Carleton.

Richard Otto and his wife, Mabel, have a little child of three. The Ottos are giving a reception and the child is made much of by the guests. Tom Willis, a drifter, reads of the announcement of the reception given by the Ottos. He recognizes Mrs. Otto as a woman he had picked up in the underworld and made his companion, and who later left him. He determines to seek out the woman and win her back.

The child, who has been put to bed, has been unable to sleep and rings the bell for his mother. She leaves her guests and coming to the room starts to put the little one to sleep. Otto is informed that a visitor is waiting to see him and leaves the guests. He meets Willis and recognizes in him a man who once had done him a favor. Otto questions him and the outcast tells him that he has been hiding in the underworld where he had found a mate, only to lose her. He tells Otto of their improper relations and of his willingness to go through fire and water to win her back again. Otto sympathizes with him and in turn tells him of his happy home life with his wife and child. He tells Willis that because of his underworld associates he thinks it best that he should never meet his wife.

Willis tells him that he is up against it for money and relying on the favor he had once done Otto, he begs for a loan. As a gift to his wife Otto had purchased an expensive lavalliere which lies on a table nearby. Willies notes this and covets the trinket for the money it would bring him. Otto advances Willis a sum of money and the latter leaves the house. He is determined to return later and secure the jewels. Willis awaits the opportunity and when the room is deserted slips back to steal them.

Otto has returned to the guests. Mabel, having put the child to sleep, remembers leaving the lavalliere in the living room and goes inside to get it. Willis has sneaked through the window and is on the point of taking the piece of jewelry when confronted by Mabel. The two recognize each other and have a dramatic scene in which their former relations are revealed. Otto wonders at his wife's absence and, hearing voices in the living room, steps in in time to hear his wife's confession of her former life. He determines to turn his wife out.

Willis becomes desirous of possessing the woman again and tries to embrace her. She struggles with him and calls for help. The husband interferes and starts denouncing her. She pleads for his forgiveness and tells him that while her early life had been bad she has been true to him since their marriage and begs him for the sake of their child to take her back. Willis sneaks out and escapes. Mrs. Otto assures her husband that Willis has never entered into her life since the two parted. The little child has awakened and comes downstairs. He pleads with his mother to sing him to sleep. The husband recognizes the tie between them and forgives his wife for the sake of the child.

HER GREAT PART (May 14).—The cast: Marguerite Clemens (Myrtle Gonzales); John, her husband (Fred Church); Rupert St. John (Jack Curtis). Written by Lynn Reynolds. Produced by Lynn Reynolds and Val Paul.

Marguerite Clemens, while happily married, is interested in acting. Her husband, who once was a well-known actor, does his best to discourage her. Marguerite's friends, however, compliment her acting; and she thinks that John is merely making fun of her. She has many hard experiences in getting started, but finally secures booking with an actor who desires a partner. The next day Marguerite goes to the booking agency and meets her partner, and is given a costume to try on. When Marguerite sees the scantiness of the attire she is expected to wear, she almost rebels; but decides to go on with the try-out. Marguerite and her partner set out for the town of Bloomingdale, and she is surprised that they do not rehearse the act. St. John tells her that everything has been arranged and that no rehearsal is necessary.

The night of the performance arrives. Marguerite is told to hurry and get into her costume. Her partner, who has a sleight-of-hand act, is arranging his apparatus for the stage. Marguerite is about to back out of appearing before the public in her costume, when the call boy hurriedly tells her they are holding the curtain and the act must go on. She finally comes out, and her partner tells her that she is expected to assist him in his act. She refuses to go on; and St. John is forced to go ahead with his act, assisted by one of the call boys.

John, meanwhile, has disguised himself and caught a train for Bloomingdale. He succeeds in getting by the door man and makes himself known to the management. The latter had heard of John, and he is invited to make himself at home behind the scenes. St. John, in a rage because Marguerite has fallen down on the act, follows her to her dressing room and tries to get in. Marguerite has changed to her street costume, and finally admits St. John to her room.

Frightened at his appearance, she shrinks against the wall, and he begins to fiercely berate her. She breaks into tears; and putting his arms about her, he attempts to comfort her. John has wandered close to the door. At the touch of St. John's arms about her, Marguerite screams with fright, but he continues to hold her in his arms. John opens the door, jerks St. John aside and the two fight furiously. St. John is bested, and leaves. John then takes Marguerite in charge and escorts her to her hotel. She does not recognize him in his disguise, and is very grateful for his assistance. John hurries home that night; and upon his arrival is greeted with a telegram from his wife, stating that the part is too strong for her and that she is returning home.

NESTOR.

POTTS BUNGLES AGAIN (May 8).—The cast: Betty (Betty Compson); Potts (Lee Moran); Eddy (Eddie Lyons); the Constable (Ed. Burns). Written and produced by Al E. Christie.

At an election of the Police Commissioners in Rockton, Betty is made the first policewoman in the history of the city. Potts, the great detective of the town, resents having a woman on the force.

Eddie is a reporter on the local newspaper. His managing editor, learning that a police woman has been appointed on the force, tells him to write a story. Eddie has been going with Betty for some time and is not aware that she is connected with the police department. Without getting any details, he accordingly writes a stiff article holding up the new policewoman to the ridicule of the public, and also roasting the police force.

Eddie meets Betty on the street that evening and tells her of his great writeup about the new policewoman, and tells her that when she reads it there will be quite a surprise. His prediction is fulfilled when Betty reads the newspaper and sees the roasting she has received from the hands of Eddie. She decides that Eddie will be given a much-needed lesson.

News comes that a famous criminal has held up a train in a nearby town, and the constable asks for assistance from the police department. Eddie's paper sends him to cover this story, and the great Detective Potts is given charge of the case. Betty is assigned to some other work, but decides to be on the lookout for the highwayman on the quiet. The constable tells Potts that the bandit has one hand bandaged, and also gives a description of him.

In getting over a fence, Eddie scratches his hand and bandages it with his handkerchief. He is seen by the detective Potts, who takes him in on suspicion. Eddie has lost his identification cards, with his pocketbook, and the policeman will not believe that he is a reporter.

Meanwhile Betty scouting about the railroad, finds a suspicious character and takes him in. She recognizes him as a notorious crook. At the police station Betty and her prisoner meet the constable, Detective Potts and poor Eddie. The constable identifies Betty's prisoner as the right man; but it is decided to hold Eddie on suspicion. He pleads with Betty to help him out of his scrape, but she tells him that until he apologizes for his article in the paper she will not help him.

Eddie agrees that he was in the wrong; and the next day there comes out a wonderful story of the bravery of the new policewoman capturing single-handed the notorious bandit. Eddie is forgiven and he and Betty find many opportunities to work together, much to the disgust of Detective Potts.

NEVER LIE TO YOUR WIFE (May 12).—The cast: Mr. Grey (Harry Rattenbery); Jimmie (Ray Gallagher); Mrs. Grey (Stella Adams); Her Daughter (Billie Rhodes); Detective Snitch (Neal Burns). Written by Al. E. Christie. Produced by Horace Davey.

Grey and his son-in-law, Jimmie, are quite sociable. Nearly every night they have an engagement for business, and their wives are frequently left at home. Mrs. Grey and her daughter become tired of being left alone so much, and remonstrate with their husbands. While the heads of the families are indulging in a poker game, their wives pass the evening the best they can in reading and wondering where their husbands are.

Mrs. Grey delivers an ultimatum to her husband and tells him that there will be no more going out at night unless the two women accompany them. The next morning the wives insist that four seats for the opera be secured that night.

Unfortunately, Grey and Jimmie have made an engagement to take a hand in a poker game that night, and the theater arrangement does not fit into their plans at all. During the day the two devise an excuse for staying at home. Grey has his foot bandaged, while Jimmie has his head done up in tape. Both claim they have been in a serious accident. The wives are given the theater tickets and told to go ahead and enjoy the show. The two husbands are left at home to look after each other.

Mrs. Grey is suspicious of her husband, having been fooled before, and has a detective watch the men. Grey and Jimmie, left alone, hastily remove their bandages and sneak over to the room where the poker game is in progress and take a hand. Detective Snitch arrives at the house and begins his investigations. He traces the two men to the gambling house.

A raid has been planned on the gamblers, and Grey and Jimmie are caught by the police. Jimmie knocks over their guardian, however, and the two escape and reach home safely. But Grey drops a card in the shuffle and this is picked up by the police. The wives arrive home, expecting to find their husbands out, and are very much surprised to find the two bandaged and groaning over their supposed injuries. Mrs. Grey declares that never again will they doubt their husbands' word.

While the two couples are making up they are interrupted by the entrance of the policeman. He presents the card, and announces that he wants the two for gambling. In spite of the wives' protests, the two men are taken to jail. The judge gives them thirty days; and when the two are released they declare that never again will they leave their wives to indulge in gambling. The two couples make up and vow that where one goes the other will always be taken.

POWERS.

STARS AND STRIPES IN MEXICO (Special—April 27).—The scenes in this release show, first of all, the American army making ready to go after the notorious bandit, Villa, following his raid on Columbus, N. Mex., in which many American civilians and soldiers lost their lives. Views of Columbus taken on the morning after the raid show the houses where Villa slaughtered sleeping Americans and where Uncle Sam's troops made their stand against Villa's banuits.

Then follow views of the ignorant young half-breeds, treacherous and vicious, who supported Villa in his murderous campaign and who were captured by the American troops on the night of the Columbs raid. These young bandits will be tried before Judge Rodgers of New Mexico, a close-up view of whom is shown.

Next are seen W. C. Miller, a veteran Texas "ranger," and Dorothy Shirley, a girl "ranger," who proved to be as good a soldier as any of Uncle Sam's men in the attack on Columbus. Troop trains carrying the soldiers to the border roll into the picture, column after column of cavalry is seen detraining at the border, water wagons for use on the Mexican desert pass by, automobile truck hospital corps, food and supply and amunition trains miles long plough through the desert sand while American aeroplanes spy out the country and drop bombs on the fleeing Villistas beneath.

The work of the wireless corps is depicted; then follow scenes showing the famous Tenth negro cavalry on the trail, just spoiling for a fight, and the American supply base at El Paso, where thousands of tons of supplies and munitions for the expeditionary force are stored.

JOKER.

A WIFE FOR A RANSOM (May 13).—The cast: Zeke (William Franey); Lil (Lillian Peacock); the Squire (Milburn Moranti); his wife (Gale Henry); Chief of Police (Charles Conklin). Written and produced by Allen Curtis.

Zeke, while only a farmer, has aspirations, and has been courting the Squire's daughter for some time. She reciprocates his affections. The Squire has better arrangements planned for his daughter, and orders Zeke to stay away from the girl. In spite of parental objections, Zeke and the girl are together often. One day while they are out driving the Squire overtakes them. He jerks Lil from the buggy and takes her home, and threatens to fill Zeke full of holes if he should show up on the place.

Lil is taken home and placed in a locked room. The Squire's wife tells her that she must stay in the room until she forgets Zeke. The Squire and his wife, thinking that they have safely disposed of their daughter for the time being, take a joy ride in their automobile.

Zeke tells his troubles to a minister and he agrees to perform the ceremony. Zeke and the minister set out for the house and arrive during the absence of the Squire and his wife. By utilizing the minister as a step ladder Zeke rescues his lady love, and the preacher makes them man and wife. Hardly has he finished when the Squire and his wife return and the Squire determines that wife or no wife, Lil shall not join Zeke. In spite of protests, Lil is dragged off and again placed in a barred and locked room. Zeke is kicked off the place.

He calls at the police station and tells his troubles to the sympathetic sergeant and two detectives. They promise to assist him in recovering his legal wife. In order to prevent Zeke from hanging around the Squire patrols his grounds with a loaded shotgun, but he allows his wife to wander about the grounds at will. Zeke and two detectives slip up near the grounds and when the wife gets out of the Squire's sight they kidnap her and take her to an abandoned hut. They leave a note for the Squire telling him that when he releases Zeke's wife his own wife will be returned to him. The Squire swears that he will not give in, and his wife is imprisoned in the deserted old hut.

The strain proves very hard on the Squire and at the end of a week he comes to terms. He calls the police station and tries to get legal assistance but the sergeant tells him that he himself is liable to arrest for forcibly detaining Zeke's wife. This caps the climax and the Squire notifies Zeke that he is ready to give in. Zeke and his confederates leave a note telling the Squire where to find his wife.

Poor Mrs. Squire has had an awful time. The short rations and mental worry have caused her to become as thin as a rail, and she welcomes her husband with open arms. Zeke and his wife are happily united and leave for Zeke's home, where they are sure that the Squire will not bother them.

THE GREAT SMASH (Three parts—May 10).—The cast: John D. Rock, Sr. (Dick Smith); John D. Rock, Jr. (Ray Griffith); Little Nell (Alice Howell); Oscar, the Power House Tender (Bill Bevin).

John D. Rock, Jr., was having a very easy time of it. He led a worthless life, but father got wise to some of his pranks and decided that he would have to take matters in his own hands for the sake of the family. He sends young Johnnie out on the road to work in the section gang. Father was wise enough to select John Blake as a disciplinarian for his unruly son.

It was a sad day for Johnnie when he landed in the railroad camp, for he immediately began to trespass. There lived in the camp one little Nell, the pride of the camp, and the sweetheart of John Blake, the terrible foreman. Johnnie began to make advances to little Nell, who to all appearances, reciprocated his regard. Right there John Blake stepped in and after a few harsh remarks and a little rough treatment he thought the matter was settled, but Johnnie was one of the kind who believe in perseverance, and he kept right on, regardless of the threats of John Blake. This was not only bad for himself, but for little Nell as well.

John Blake, in his desperation, after being turned down cold, decided to murder the little girl. With the aid of his assistants he kidnapped her after dark and tied her to the railroad track and got into an engine determined to end it all. The millionaire's son was apprised of the fact and secured a racing car. There followed a race between the engine and the racer to see which would reach her first. Blake had to cross a drawbridge, which was the vantage point, and Johnnie got there first. When Blake arrived the bridge was up, but Blake did not heed it in his mad dash and up and over he went, and down to his destruction.

BISON.

A FIGHT FOR LOVE (Two parts—May 13).—The cast: Marisico Napoli (G. Raymond Nye); Gracia (Roberta Wilson); Chief Basista (L. De Rosa); Pola (Hector V. Sarno). Scenario and production of J. Jaccard.

Two more Camorra outrages take place and the lieutenant of the Italian squad is notified to act at once, or his station will be the target of the newspapers. He gets two detectives and together they fix a frame-up on Marisco Napoli, a right-hand man of the Camorra Chief, Basista, who, being a shrewd man, has so far been able to elude the police. They "plant" him by slipping a gun in his pocket, which offense carries a five-year term in New York City. He resists; they beat him up, take him to the station and put him through an eighteen-hour third degree to try and make him "squeal" on the rest. He stands firm, and is helped to do so by the appearance of Gracia, the Lieutenant's daughter.

The Camorra hold a meeting and plan the best how to get Marisco free. They decide to grab Gracia, which they proceed to do, and send the Lieutenant a note reading: "We got the girl. If Marisco don't go free she will suffer the consequences." Therefore the father's hands are tied in fear that the Camorra will fulfill their threat. Marisco is in the hospital (from the beating he has received) and reads of Gracia being missing. As she came to his aid in the third degree and brought him flowers in the hospital, Marisco decides to rescue her. He plans carefully and makes his escape.

Marisco goes to the Camorra Lodge, presents himself and demands the release of Gracia, but in the meantime the Chief, Basista, has fallen in love with Gracia and refuses to turn her loose. The two fight with stilettos, in accordance with the lodge rules. Marisco wins, goes after Gracia, and as he brings her out, the meeting has divided and a battle royal is fought. Gracia and Marisco get into the upper hall, and the fight swings with them onto a two-story building. A very thrilling fight takes place, the Marisco faction winning. Marisco returns Gracia to the Lieutenant, and of course is placed under arrest, the Lieutenant telling him that he will do everything in his power to get a pardon for him. Marisco curses him and his pardon, and says he will settle with him when he gets out, if the Camorra spares his life.

GOLD SEAL.

THE MARK OF A GENTLEMAN—(Two parts—May 9).—The cast: Jack Grandin (Herbert Rawlinson); Sylvia Bryant ("Brownie" Vernon); Jack's Mother (Helen Wright); Her daughter, Lady Besford (Ruby Cox); Lord Besford (T. D. Crittenden); Seward, Jack's friend (Jack Conolly); Sylvia's father (William Canfield). Written by F. McGrew Willis. Produced by William Worthington.

Jack Grandin, son of a wealthy widow, is fond of manly sports. With his friend, Seward, he boxes and wrestles. His sister has just married an English Lord, and she and her husband are living in the house before starting for Europe. Jack's mother attempts to get her son to imitate Lord Besford in his dress, but Jack thinks differently, and the Englishman is rather astonished.

Jack tells his mother that he is going out to make his own way. She tries to persuade him not to, but is unsuccessful. He finally obtains a position as athletic instructor at a summer resort. He calls upon the manager and tells him that his name is Jimmy Snare, a former prize fighter. He is hired and begins duties at the resort. One of the guests comes to Jack and wants to enroll in his class. Jack begins with a cross-country run, and while resting they indulge in a boxing bout. A young lady passing in an auto hurries to them, believing they are fighting, and attempts to separate them. She learns her mistake and hurriedly withdraws. Jack returns to the hotel and is introduced to Henry Bryant, one of the guests. A moment later the girl of the road comes up and Jack learns she is Bryant's daughter, Sylvia. He receives a formal introduction to her and later they become friendly.

One day Sylvia invites Jack to a party to be given at the hotel. Fearing he will meet some of his acquaintances he tells her he knows nothing of society ways. The season closes and Jack is discharged. Bryant, having taken a liking to Jack, tells him he will give him the position of overseer on his estate. Jack accepts.

Some time passes. Jack's mother is greatly worried over him. Jack and Sylvia are in love. Jack proposes. She accepts and her father consents. A party is arranged at which the engagement will be announced. Jack tries to conceal the fact that he is familiar with ballroom etiquette. The ball passes off in a blaze of gaiety, but with Jack exhausted from his assumed manners.

The day of the wedding arrives. As a surprise Jack has planned to return home, secure his belongings and money enough for the wedding trip, and then break the news of his identity to Sylvia and her father. This is the day that his mother, not yet having heard from him, starts to New York to take the boat with her daughter and her husband for Europe. The servants are dismissed and a caretaker is hired.

Jack starts in an auto to the house, but a train crashes into the auto and it is wrecked. Jack is not seriously injured, however, but his clothes are torn, and what little money he has is lost. It is nearing time for the wedding, and he hurries on home. When he tries to enter the house he is warned away. He pleads that he is the son, but to no avail. He tries to force his way in. The caretaker calls a policeman and the latter orders him off the place.

Sylvia is now dressed for the wedding, but they are unable to locate Jack. Jack has gone to Seward's house, but the latter is out of town. It is now past time for the wedding, and Jack hurries back to the Bryant home. He tells them that he has been in a train wreck; and Bryant, the father, helps him to attire. The wedding takes place; and after the ceremony Bryant calls Jack to one side and asks him how he is fixed financially. Jack shows his embarrassment and Bryant supplies him with money and tells him not to worry.

He and Sylvia take the train. At the hotel in New York as they enter the lobby, Jack sees Lord Besford. Never has the Englishman looked so good to him. He introduces him to Sylvia as his brother-in-law, taking quite a lot of pride in the fact that there is nobility in the family. Then the sister and Jack's mother come on, and Sylvia finds to her astonishment that instead of marrying beneath her position in life she has won a husband from her own set.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

GRAFT (Episode No. 20, "The Final Conquest"—Two parts—April 24).—The cast: Robert Harding (Richard Stanton); Stanford Stone (Glen White); Dorothy Maxwell (Jane Novak); Henry Pitner (Hayward Mack); Captain Hicks (Mr. McDaniels).

Mayor Harding has set in motion the machinery of the Police Department to capture Stone and break up the criminal gangs with which the latter has surrounded himself. Stone has found a haven with the Gas House Gang and succeeds in eluding and defying the police, partly because Captain Hicks of the plainclothes department of police is in league with the crooks of the underworld.

Stone is rapidly nearing a breakdown. His fury at his inability to "get" Harding amounts almost to insanity. Drink exaggerates his mental condition, until he is in a frame of mind to take any chance if it will lead to a final accounting with the man he hates. Harding sends for the head of the Gas Trust, determined to correct the evils of this monopoly. When Bitner is before him he points out that the practice of pumping air into the pipes, the use of irregular meters and the use of mixed gas at high rates must cease.

Bitner tells Harding he has been misinformed regarding these things and invites him to come to the works that night and personally investigate. Harding agrees to do so. Hicks, the plainclothes man, is present and reports the fact of Harding's expected visit to the gas works to Stone and the "gang." Stone, in his drunken joy, shouts to the gang: "I've offered $10,000 to anyone who would 'get' this man, but I'm going to do the job myself." He leaves for the gas works.

The gang, however, have no intention of letting the chance of bagging that much money slip. They learn of Harding's visit from Hicks, after agreeing to give him a third of the reward. Stone, in a mad moment, has sent a note to Dorothy Maxwell stating that Harding was due to "pass on" that night.

Dorothy follows the man who delivers it and sees him enter the headquarters of the Gas House Gang. Thinking Harding is concealed there she informs the police and the place is raided. The gang have left, however, and nothing is found but Hicks and the old care taker. The latter tells the police that the gang have gone to the gas house. Dorothy sets out for the plant followed by the police.

In the meantime Stone has called on Bitner and convinced him that Harding is a menace to his business. He makes him agree to call his firemen from the boiler room and send Harding alone to inspect the place. Stone promises him that no trace of the body will ever be found. Harding arrives earlier than he expected and so just avoids the gang, who arrive a few minutes later. Harding is shown over the plant and finally descends into the boiler room, where Stone is waiting in concealment for him. As he reaches the bottom step Stone strikes him from behind, rendering him unconscious, then springs to the firebox, throwing open the huge door and exposing Harding to the terrific heat and glare of the furnace.

At the same time a number of things happen. Dorothy has seen Harding go down the stairs to the boiler room and rushes past the astonished Bitner and follows him. The policemen following catch sight of the gang who have rounded a corner on the hunt for Harding. Both contending factions thereupon open fire without a moment's delay. Bitner, between them, is pierced by a bullet and rolls down the stairs. Dorothy has dragged Harding a few feet from the stairs as Stone, blinded by the glare of the furnace, backs to the body of Bitner, picks it up and throws it into the fiery inferno, closing the door and laughing with insane glee at the thought that at last he is rid of Harding. As he turns he faces Harding, who has recovered. In his present mental state Stone fancies he is facing an accusing spirit from the other world and with a cry of horror he rushes up the stairs and falls a victim of the battle being waged between the police and the gang.

After much hard and persistent work the police are successful in running down the remaining members of the nefarious gang of hoodlums and all are rounded up and arrested. Hicks is given a long term in the state penitentiary for his treacherous connection with the gang of crooks. Dorothy, who has ably helped Harding through his struggle with the grafters, has grown very dear to him, and it is fair to suppose that she will be his "final conquest."

PEG O' THE RING (Episode 1—"The Leopard's Mark"—Two Parts—May 1).—The cast: Peg o' the Ring (Ruth Stonehouse); Flip (Peter Gerald); Pierre Durand (Chas. Munn); Big Bill Barnen (G. Raymond Nye); Polo (Eddie Polo); La Belle (Grace Cunard); Dr. Lund (Marc Fenton); Mrs. Dr. Lund (Jean Hathaway).

"Peg o' the Ring" opens with a prologue depicting the arrival of a circus in a small town, the detraining, selection of the location, erection of the tent and the preparation of all of the paraphernalia for the exhibition of the show. As the hour of the performance approaches, we are introduced to Peg, known as Peg o' the Ring, an aerial performer; Flip, her guardian and supposed father; Pierre Durand, an athlete, her lover; Big Bill Barnen, who runs the show; and Polo, an athlete and tumbler, preparing for their work in the ring.

As Peg and Durand go to their dressing rooms Big Bill Banen meets Flip and tells him that he would like to see him before the day is out. In his office in one of the circus wagons Barnen tells Polo, his henchman, that for certain reason he would like to have Flip out of the way. Polo is agreeable. When Flip comes in Barnen sends everyone else out of the office and brings the conversation around to Peg. He is the only one in the circus who suspects that she is not Flip's daughter. After telling Flip that he is getting too old for the circus stunts, he suggests that he might keep him if he will tell him who Peg really is. Flip refuses and comes very near being throttled by Barnen.

Flip leaves the wagon after telling the manager that he holds his whole future in the palm of his hand. Barnen resolves to get Flip out of the way, and tells Polo to pull a horse whip when Flip is in the ring that night doing his big jump. Polo obeys his orders implicitly and Flip is fatally injured in his jump. Realizing that his hours are numbered he calls Pierre to him and starts to tell him who Peg really is. All unknown to them Big Bill Barnen is listening to them.

"Years ago," says Flip, "we were in winter quarters. La Belle, the wild animal queen, had been feeling depressed for some time. I was nothing to her but a friend, but she was all the world to me. I was the only one in the circus who knew that she was secretly married to Dr. Lund, owner, but for reasons of his own the doctor had decided that the marriage must be kept a secret. It was this fact which made La Belle so downhearted. I tried in every way to cheer her up, but I knew in my heart that there was another woman in the doctor's life. I loved her too well to tell her, but I never had the courage to tell her of my love. I had watched over her like a child, and I cautioned her frequently against taking such chances in the cage with her wild animals. And that very night—it was the opening performance of the season—the big cats jumped on her, and before the trainers could get into the cage she had been dangerously hurt. How dangerously, none of us knew at the time. They took her into my tent, and she lay in my arms weeping. The first episode ends at this point with the question, "Who is Peg?"

RED FEATHER.

THE HUNTRESS OF MEN (Five parts—May 8).—The cast: The Huntress (Mary Fuller); Fleming Harcourt (Jos. W. Girard); Ned Ashley (Sydney Bracey). Written by Catherine Carr. Produced by Lucius Henderson.

Fleming Harcourt hears tales at his club of a wonderful woman who has created a sensation in New York by her beauty and the unique lavishness of her entertainments. She has been nicknamed "The Huntress" by the men who have become captive to her beauty. Harcourt meets "The Huntress," but conceals the wonderful impression the woman has made upon him. "The Huntress," realizing that a new type of man has entered her life, exerts all her wiles to waken his love, but, while really enchanted, Harcourt remains cold and critical.

"The Huntress" finds her interest in Harcourt growing, and when she finds that he does not return it she writes him to come to her. Harcourt takes his own time to answer her summons. When alone with him, "The Huntress" exerts all her physical attractiveness to win from him an expression of love. Harcourt fights the battle of self-control, but, for a second, kisses her. Then he proposes marriage. She rebels, but without success.

In an almost hypnotic state she finds herself married to Harcourt. An apartment is arranged in the same house for Harcourt. Despite her marriage, "The Huntress" resumes her gorgeous entertainments, men crowding into her presence with their proffered love. The Huntress" begins to perceive that the old life is all an empty play without the dominant character of Harcourt, who avoids appearing in her presence.

Harcourt has absolute faith in the purity of his wife, but considers his theory only in the first stages of development. It dawns upon "The Huntress" that Harcourt apparently is satisfied with the conditions she has imposed. She makes little advances of affection, which are ignored. Harcourt, desperately in love with "The Huntress," finds it almost impossible to stay upon his side of the house. She decides to impress Harcourt with her power over men, and arranges a wonderful dinner, inviting him to dine with her. Harcourt declines, pleading a previous dinner engagement with the Countess Petronia. For the first time jealousy begins to creep into "The Huntress'" heart. She tries to convince herself that she does not care, and invites a number of men to be her guests. In reality Harcourt has remained in realizing that the success of his theory is at its crisis.

The dinner is a huge success, but the devotion of the men bore her. The vision of Harcourt with the Countess pursues her, while in reality Harcourt is in his rooms, feverishly counting the hours until her guests will depart. He leaves the house by a side entrance to fight it out with himself in a long walk. "The Huntress," torn with jealousy, is dominated by her love for Harcourt. She goes to his rooms with the determination of telling him that she will not allow his attention to any other woman, only to find that he is out.

Overcome with jealousy, she searches his apartment to find some trace of the Countess, and discovers a long, white glove in the pocket of Harcourt's dressing gown. In reality she herself had dropped the glove upon one of her hurried secret trips to his rooms. She jumps to the conclusion that it belongs to the Countess. She is about to leave the apartment when Harcourt returns and finds her there. She furiously confronts him with the glove. Harcourt admits that it belongs to the woman he loves. Harcourt insists that she is not a real woman, being dependent upon her artificial surroundings. She asks to be put to the test. He tells her that he must live in the mining camp, and demands to know if she is willing to accompany him.

This means the casting aside of all that she has hitherto considered worth living for, the hunting and capture of the male, but under the influence of Harcourt's tenderness she consents to go with him—no matter where, convinced at last that, by the side of the one man, love is really worth while.

THEIR ANNIVERSARY (April 30).—The cast: Mr. Osborne (Ben Wilson); Mrs. Osborne (Dorothy Phillips); Insurance Agent (Charles Ogle). Written by Samuel Greiner. Produced by Ben Wilson.

Mr. and Mrs. Osborne, a young married couple, have reached the first anniversary of their wedding. Mrs. Osborne wonders if hubby will remember it. The scene shifts to Mr. Osborne's office. His mother calls him up and says, "Don't you know, son, that this is the day of the anniversary of your wedding?" Osborne is apparently surprised and picks up the calendar to verify his mother's statement. He then wonders if his wife recalls the memorable event.

Presently we see Osborne at a jeweler's store, where he picks out a beautiful lavaliere, and, paying the stipulated price, puts it in his pocket. On his arrival home, he comes to the conclusion that he will wait until his wife mentions the anniversary. Mrs. Osborne has the same idea and conceals the diamond-studded cufflinks she has purchased for hubby.

At dinner, the situation gets embarrassing as no mention is made of the anniversary by either of them. They both get out of sorts, and Osborne returns to the office in a very bad humor. Each is convinced that the other is growing indifferent. A persistent insurance agent calls on Osborne and is thrown out of the office. Osborne cools off after awhile, and telephones to wifey that he wishes her to come downtown and take dinner with him, but she reminds him that they have accepted an invitation to attend a party that evening. So he reluctantly consents to accompany her.

On his arrival home, they both proceed to dress for the party. Osborne loses his collar-button, and finds a button missing on the vest of his dress suit. He accuses his wife of neglecting him shamefully.

This leads to a quarrel and finally Osborne declines to accompany his wife to the party, telling her that he is going to the club, while she drives off all by herself in a great huff. After both have proceeded on their respective ways for a while, their better nature asserts itself. Osborne accuses himself of being too hard on the poor thing, as he had forgotten the anniversary himself, while wifey, in thinking it over, comes to the conclusion that hubby must have forgotten the event in the rush of business.

Both return home—he to put the lavaliere on her dresser and she to put her present on his chiffonier. In endeavoring to carry out this plan of campaign they bump against each other in the hall. Then Osborne's face brightens up with an understanding of the situation. He shows wifey the lavaliere; she exhibits the cuff-links and there is a tender reconciliation as the picture fades out.

VIRGINIA—(May 9).—The cast: Virginia Clerson (Cleo Madison); Laura Clerson (Margaret Whistler); Frank Clerson (William Mong); Frederick Parker (Ed Hearn); John Clerson (Ray Hanford). Scenario by Harvey Gates. Produced by Cleo Madison.

Virginia Clerson, eighteen, hated what little she knew of the world, and thought that every man was against her. Her father was a drunkard and a dope fiend and her mother ill and overworked.

Virginia was the youngest of four children. Her two brothers were typical slum characters; one, while prepossessing in appearance, had no morals or principles. Her sister, Laura, being frequently beaten by her father, in turn would beat the younger sister. Laura one day leaves with a slum character.

Virginia determines to leave her home, stealing a small sum of money from her brother's pocket, she departs. She secures work in a department store, of which Frederick Parker is the manager. Knowing they are always in need of girls, Frederick tells the girl to see the forelady. Virginia makes a place of her own among the girls, and is soon respected.

Three years pass. She has learned to be neat in dress, and she improves in health and appearance. Parker admires her, and when the forelady quits, the latter pleads with Parker to give the position to Virginia. He agrees and she is placed in charge of the department. Virginia makes good.

One night as she is working late the scrubwomen come in to clean up. Among them is one who seems familiar. Fearing it is her sister, Virginia hastily leaves. The next night she recognizes the woman as her sister, Laura. Virginia speaks to her and is recognized. Laura, while only thirty years old, has the appearance of a broken woman of sixty. She has consumption and is slowly fading away. Virginia takes her in charge.

Frank, the brother, sees them and follows them to Virginia's room. He suggests that the three live together, but Virginia opposes the idea. He threatens her. Frank determines to punish Virginia, and calls upon Parker next day with a made up story about Virginia. Parker believes him and calls Virginia in to explain. She refuses to explain and is about to leave, when they are interrupted by the entrance of Laura, who denounces her brother and tells the true family history. Virginia tries to stop her, but Laura is determined.

Parker realizes the baseness of the brother, and getting the two women out of the office proceeds to give him a good thrashing. Frank escapes. Laura, exhausted with her efforts, is about at the end of her life. Parker confronts Virginia and tells her that in spite of her past he is willing to take her as his partner, and the two start their life anew.

UNLUCKY LUKE (Two parts—April 28).—The cast: Luke Drummond (Frank Borzage); Seth Powers (Jack Richardson); Lucy Manners (Anna Little); Ezra Smead (John Gough). Directed by Frank Borzage.

Luke Drummond, popularly known as "Unlucky Luke," and Seth Powers, his friend and chum, have a mock quarrel over a new school teacher as to who saw her first. They roll in the dirt to the disguest of the lady herself, who witnesses the bout, though she does not know the cause.

Lucy, the new teacher, passes on, presents her papers to Ezra Smead, the School Supervisor, and in due time takes up her teaching. Luke and Seth, in common with many other citizens, are unsettled by the charm and grace of the new teacher. The two young men vie with each other as to which shall escort her home from school, leading to humorous situations.

Luke is the ranch blacksmith. He trains and "Gentles" a horse, and shoes him carefully with the intention of presenting him to Lucy as a gift. She refuses for reasons of delicacy. The social season at Gopher Flats is inaugurated with a dance. Seth plays a practical joke on Luke, turning the laugh on him. Ezra Smead, the School Supervisor, also is enamored of Lucy. He calls at the school and proposes. Luke interrupts the scene and declares that if Smead does not vamoose at once he will tell all about his wife and their children. Though this is all a bluff, Smead takes the first train out.

Seth is refused in due time by Lucy. Also Luke. They shake dice to see which will go away, and Unlucky Luke is forced to go. Lucy learns he is going, mounts Seth's horse, follows to the top of a hill near town. There is a pretty scene and Luke takes off his hat and scratches the "Un" out of his name.

WITH A LIFE AT STAKE (Two parts—May 5).—The cast: Blinky (Art Accord); Selby Maynard, a rancher (Alfred Ferguson); Margaret, his daughter (Nita Davis); Jim Pitman (Larry Peyton); Sheriff (Guy Lundy); Bess, telephone operator (Queenie Rosson).

When Blinky, with the rest of the boys of the Lazy L., burst into town after two months on the roundup, and only to learn that prohibition has swept that part of the country, their indignation knows no bounds. Lining up at a soda fountain, they endeavor to quench their thirst.

Margaret, daughter of Selby Maynard, a rancher, is the day operator at the telephone office. Jim Pittman, better known as "The Killer," has long been her suitor, but she has repeatedly rejected his offers of marriage. On this day Jim comes to the telephone office and threateningly proposes to her again. Alarmed, Margaret manages to put in a call to the confectionery store, where the proprietor overhears the conversation at the telephone office, and realizes Margaret's danger. He informs Blinky and the boys, who rush to the rescue. Jim is ousted, and Blinky remains at the office on guard.

As the months go by Blinky gets into the habit of telephoning to Margaret on every possible occasion, with the boys generally listening to his conversation from ambush. Jim endeavors to persuade Maynard to force Margaret to marry him, and after giving him a severe beating, Maynard drags him from his ranch to the road.

A little later Jim's ungovernable temper gets him into serious difficulty. A shot that he sends after a fleeing Chinaman strikes a small girl in the arm. An indignation meeting is the result and it is resolved to hand Jim Pitman a lesson. Jim hears of this, and his yellow streak asserts itself. He is captured by a deputy sheriff and led off to jail. But fearing the vengeance of the mob, he pleads to be taken to the county jail for safe keeping. To this the deputy finally agrees, and handcuffing one of Jim's wrists to his, the deputy leads him toward the station. But en route, Jim manages to strike the deputy, knocking him unconscious. He is unable, however, to find the keys of the handcuffs, and is forced to drag the senseless deputy after him.

A few hours later, chatting with her father over the phone, Margaret becomes alarmed when she hears a shot, and is then unable to get into conversation with her father. The other operator happening in, Margaret persuades her to take her place at the switchboard while she rides out to see what has happened. Jim, who has started out on a wild career of revenge, and with the deputy still dragging after him, sees Margaret riding home, and a shot that he sends her way strikes home, and she falls from her horse at a railroad crossing.

Coming in from fence riding, Blinky calls up, and from the operator learns of the happenings. He fears that Jim may be waiting for Margaret, and with the rest of the boys, sets out for her home with a fast passenger train bearing down on her. Margaret is rescued in the nick of time by Blinky, he jumping from his horse and dragging her from the tracks as the train whizzes by. Her wounds are found to be not serious, and her father, who appears on the scene, has only a broken arm as the result of a mad man's vengeance. Jim, having finally freed himself from the deputy, stumbles into a forgotten wolf trap, and with horror, realizes what his fate will be unless he is found.

BEAUTY.

BUGS AND BUGLES (April 26).—The cast: Ogee Cobb, Bellhop, etc. (John Sheehan); General Hoakum Jazbo (John Steppling); Susan, the General's niece (Carol Halloway); Dustin Dulge (Alexander McClure); Mrs. Dulge (Meta Drinkwitz); the Grocer Boy (Dick Rosson). Directed by Archer McMackin.

Ogee Gobb is bellhop and general roustabout in a country hotel conducted by General Hoakum Jazbo, a retired soldier who has gone into the hotel business for excitement. Gobb is in love with Susan, the General's neice. In the course of time the hostelry is actually honored by two guests, Dustin Duldge and his wife. Duldge appreciates Susan's charms, which gets him in bad with his wife and stirs up Gobb.

Gobb is of a romantic nature and inclined. Susan is not particularly responsive to his affections and he drowns his disappointment in a highly-colored novel, which he steals into the room adjoining the Dudges to read. He is so inspired that he forgets his surroundings and begins to impersonate the arduous lover. Mrs. Duldge, who has smiled on Gobb, hears his impassioned outpourings, and climbing on a chair peers through a transom. Susan, passing, also hears her erstwhile lover apparently importuning another fair one. She arrives at Duldge's with a pitcher of ice water just as Duldge comes in, and they listen to the amorous appeal from the other room. Duldge goes for his wife and Susan retreats to weep.

Duldge decides to teach Gobb a lesson and leaves a note signed "D" to lure the unsuspecting Gobb to his fate. Susan has chosen suicide when she finds the note and jealousy gets the better of self-pity. By separate ways Susan and Duldge reach the trysting place. Gobb finds the note which he takes to be from Duldge to Susan, and getting Mrs. Duldge he goes to avenge himself. Duldge and Susan have discovered each other. Susan tells him her suspicions and he is trying to comfort her when Gobb and Mrs. Duldge arrive and think they are making love. Mrs. Duldge drags Duldge away and Susan and Gobb make up.

TWO BEDS AND NO SLEEP (April 30).—The cast: Hunkadory (Orral Humphrey); his friend (William Tedmarsh); the Major (Rea Berger); Landlord (Hugh Bennett); Lady Lonesome (Lucille Ward); Maid (Joe Taylor). Directed by Humphrey Berger.

Hunkadory, a snuff salesman, is on his way to do business in a neighboring town, when Major Plazzaz and Lady Lonesome board the train, eloping because their children object to their marriage. Hunkadory wins Lady Lonesome's favor, likewise the Major's animosity, by petting her kitten, which is traveling in the Major's pocket.

Hunkadory indulges in a sniff of snuff which the wind blows through the car, and the sneezing crowd project Hunkadory out onto the steps. The train is stalled by a washout. Hunkadory finds an inn where they all follow him. The only room available for the Major and Miss Lonesome has two beds, and for lack of a license the Major cannot share it with the lady, and sleeps on the billiard table.

Hunkadory, by mistake, has been delegated to the same room as Lady Lonesome, and when he arrives he finds her pets on one bed, dumps them and occupies it. She discovers Hunkadory and screams. Hunkadory tries to escape but the lady faints on him and the Major challenges him to a duel which never comes off because Hunkadory spills the Major as he is getting ready to shoot and runs for it.

BILLY VAN DEUSEN'S ANCESTRY (May 3).—The cast: Billy Van Deusen (John Steppling); Irma, the mysterious (Carol Halloway); Dom, the strong-arm guy (John Sheehan); Merlin, a sorcerer (Robert Klein).

Billy Van Deusen asleep, the goddess of dreams transports him back to the days of his ancestors. Billy is informed that he must retake the castle, but Dom, Irma's right-hand man, taking many brave knights, sallies forth. Van Deusen and his knights are ambushed by Dom. Billy is forced to flee. Dom gives chase and drives Billy to the doors of the castle. He is being prodded to death with lances, when Irma is apprised of his position. Irma releases him and gives him a royal welcome.

Dom is handed the cold shoulder; plans a seige and capture of the castle. Entrance is gained. Irma is in the midst of festivities given in honor of Billy, when the party enters. Billy is held as the star prisoner. Dom informs Irma that if Billy is immediately burned at the stake he will allow the castle to continue on its former plane. But, hero-like, Billy insists that he be the sacrifice. They lead him to the death chamber. Irma commits suicide on her knight's sword. The flames leap for their prey. Then he awakes in front of his own fireplace, his slipper afire and his brain in a turmoil.

JERRY'S PERFECT DAY (May 12).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Archibald (George George); Husband (Joseph von Meter); His Wife (Claire Alexander); Jerry's Dream Wife (Rosebud Hill); Nurse Girl (Janet Sully); Tough Girl (Louise Horner); Police Lieutenant (Jefferson Osborne). Directed by Milton Fahrney.

Jerry, who is taking life easy in the park, is attracted by a scene between a mother and her baby. Jerry watches the happy woman fondling her child, and as he reflects over his past follies he pictures the day when he, too, will have a wife and a little child to love. Weary at heart, he goes to another bench and sits beside a sleeping tramp, where he, too, is soon fast asleep.

He dreams that he is married and that he is the proud father of a family. As he caresses his baby and wife he awakens to find himself kissing the dusty tramp and a fight starts. The police hear the rumpus and as they start after Jerry, he runs away and takes refuge in a tool house near some construction work. The foreman of the work sees Jerry go into the house and quickly follows him. He ejects Jerry and warns him to keep away from the place.

The foreman puts dynamite in the little storehouse for safe keeping until the following day, and as he walks away he drops the key of the shack, an incident which Jerry observes from his hiding place. Jerry gains possession of the key and enters the house, ignorant of the fact that it contains explosives. Seeing the police coming, Jerry proceeds to walk away with the house.

ing, loaded with picnickers, consisting of policemen and their families and sweethearts. Jerry tries to get out of the way with the shack he is carrying, but unable to do so there is a collision, the explosives are set off and Jerry is sent flying through space. When he lands he is captured and handcuffed to the wheel of the truck.

The merry picnickers go in swimming, but one of the women takes pity on Jerry and releases him. He meets four tramps—old friends—and they have a joyous reunion. Jerry and his friends spy the policemen's uniforms which were discarded for bathing suits when they went into the water, and no time is lost in appropriating them.

The tramps and Jerry leave their discarded clothing behind and when the cops discover what has happened they rush from the water only to see Jerry and his cronies speeding away in the auto truck. The cops don the tramps' clothing and give chase only to run into the hands of the local sheriff, who mistakes them for tramps he is looking for.

Jerry and party see the incident, understand the situation and hurry to the sheriff's aid and help him to take the enraged police to the lockup. The cops protest in vain and while they argue with the sheriff and his men, Jerry and his party motor off to a secluded spot, open the lunch baskets and enjoy their repast while the picture fades out.

AMERICAN.

PIERRE BRISSAC, THE BRAZEN (Two parts—May 1).—The cast: John Brand (Edward Coxen); Mrs. Brand (Lizette Thorne); Pierre Brissac (George Field); Le Petit Jean (John Gough); Mrs. Brand, Sr. (Marie Vantassell).

Pierre Brissac is a burglar by occupation and Le Petit Jean is his accomplished confrere. At the moment the story opens they are engaged in the "innocent" occupation of selecting a house to rob. They pit upon the residence of John Brand, who that morning had parted in anger with his wife, Helene, vowing to live at the club until she learned to control her temper.

Taking him at his word, Helene also determines to desert the family home and go to her mother. She packs up all her jewelry as it might remind her of an unpleasant past, and leaves it for hubby on the top of the bureau with a note telling him of her departure. In due time the burglars arrive at the front door, turn up the door mat, find the key, ramsack the house and, having packed up all the valuables, sit down to a nice cold dinner. When they are ready they depart with their loot.

In the meantime, Brand fails to enjoy the club as anticipated, returns to the house, misses his keys, sits on the front steps and is jailed as a burglar. In the morning Mrs. Brand repents, returns, telephone the police that the house has been robbed, is advised that the burglar is in jail, and promptly going there finds her unlucky husband. Sadder and wiser they are reunited and live happy forever after.

MUTUAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

THE SECRET OF THE SUBMARINE (American—Episode No. 1—May 8).—The cast: Cleo Burke (Juanita Hansen); Lieut. Jarvis Hope, U. S. N. (Thomas Chatterton); Olga Ivanoff (Hylda Hollis); Gerald Morton (Lamar Johnstone); Hook Barnacle (George Clancy); Satsuma (William Tedmarsh); Calvin Montgomery (Joseph Beaudry); Sextus (Harry Edmondson); Mahlin (George Webb); Dr. Burke (Hugh Bennett). Scenario by C. C. Hoadley and William Parker. Directed by George Sargent.

Dr. Ralph Burke, a scientist and inventor, perfects an apparatus enabling submarine craft to remain under water indefinitely without relying wholly upon compressed air stored in the boat. The discovery is perfected at the opening of the story and has been offered to the United States government.

Lieut. Jarvis Hope, U. S. N., is despatched to witness a practical demonstration of the invention. Arriving in the city where Dr. Burke lives, Lieut. Hope meets an old acquaintance, Hook Barnacle, whose life he once saved. Hook had his right hand bitten off by a shark, and an iron hook being substituted gained for him the odd sobriquet.

Hook escorts the lieutenant to the Burke home and relates to Cleo, the doctor's "daughter," how his life had been saved by the young naval officer. Cleo and Hope become mutually interested. Hook is much given to talking and it is not long before the entire village knows the reason for Lieut. Hope's visit. Among those who learn the news are Sextus, a Russian, and Satsuma, a Jap, working under the orders of one Mahlin.

The following day is set for the demonstration. Satsuma watching his chance has secreted himself aboard the submarine. Olga Ivanoff, head of the Russian bureau in this country, receives a visit from Sextus, who is commanded by her to obtain the secret of the submarine. Meantime Calvin Montgomery, a wealthy lobbyist, upon advices from influential friends at Washington, sends his nephew, Gerald Morton, an unprincipled rounder, to obtain the secret. Gerald is suspicious of his uncle's interest in Cleo Burke, but fails to learn anything definite before he leaves to see the inventor.

On board the submarine the apparatus is being manipulated satisfactorily and Lieut. Hope is much impressed. The party repairs to the salon for lunch, affording opportunity for Satsuma to crawl stealthily from his hiding place. The Jap is examining the mechanism of the invention when he is surprised by Dr. Burke, who gives the alarm. Sailors rush in to overpower the Jap but he is desperate. Shots are fired, one of which disables the Burke apparatus. Satsuma throws over the lever opening the conning tower trap, leaps up the ladder, gains the top and dives off into the sea as the boat quickly sinking is almost lost to view. The water pours down through the open trap. The air machine is broken and with the boat uncontrollable, the inventor and his party battle for life in the watery darkness.

THE SECRET OF THE SUBMARINE (Episode No. 2—Two parts—May 15).—The boat is filling with water. Cleo, remembering that Hope had shown her the lever controlling the trap door in the conning tower, rushes to it and throwing it over, closes the door and shuts off the rush of water. Burke turns his attention to his invention and just as the party is about to succumb to suffocation he manages to get the machine working and the supply of air is renewed.

The boat is rising and the party regains its spirits. In the meantime, Satsuma, the Jap, has reached the shore. Morton, the emissary of Montgomery, has arrived in the city to purchase the submarine secret. Burke tells him the test has been successful and that the United States government is negotiating to buy it. He also tells Morton he will not deal with him. Cleo passing the window gives Morton an idea. He asks Burke: "Is the submarine secret the only one you possess?"

Burke is visibly affecter by the question and promises to see Morton later. Satsuma, meantime, has reported to Mahlin, and Sextus receives orders from Olga Ivanhoff to obtain the secret at all cost. Thus that night Satsuma and Sextus each gain entrance to the Burke home in search of the secret. In the dim light the two men meet and grapple, each thinking his opponent is a member of the household. The fight is terrinc and both are hurt, but manage to escape. The midnight battle puzzles the Burkes, for no attempt had been made to rob the house. It is deemed best not to call in the police.

The next morning Hope is apprised of the fight, and Burke tells Cleo of the receipt of an anonymous letter containing a veiled threat on his life if he does not meet the writer and sell him the submarine secret.

In the meantime Hope reports favorably upon the discovery to the government and is informed a check will be sent him to make the first payment. Burke in the darkness of that night is known to visit his library, where at a late hour he is depositing small slips of paper in various volumes. He goes to his den and writes, engaged apparently upon a task of vital import.

The next morning Cleo calls her father to breakfast, but he does not respond. She goes to his room. His bed has not been slept in. She is alarmed and hurries to his workshop and then to his den, on the floor of which she discovers his dead body.

star, Emily Alden. Friendship ripens into love. After marriage, Emily feels her loss of independence and the restraint Neal places upon her in the spending of money. While shopping she encounters her old manager, Sanford, who urges her to return to the stage in a revival of one of her old hits. She jumps at the chance to again earn money of her own, but is forced to give up the idea because of the anger of her husband at her contemplated return to the stage.

Arnold Howard, a stock broker, married to the artist's sister, Wanda, gratifies her every whim. Wanda, who has many idle hours, spends them in the company of Douglass Stevens, a society man, whose chief interest is in the opposite sex. Wall street has made a plaything of the fortune of Wanda's husband. His ruin near, Howard goes to Neal and asks him for a loan. Neal with misgivings gives him what money he has saved up and $5,000 belonging to an art association which he is holding in trust. The market continues to go against Howard. Finally, after an exciting day, he returns to his office and commits suicide. Wanda comes to live with Neal and Emily. She still keeps up her friendship with Douglass Stevens. Neal in an effort to replace the association fund, overworks, and a long illness results. With her husband hovering near death, Emily tries to sell his pictures, but they fail to sell. Berated by Emily for not striving to aid her brother to straighten out his financial worries, Wanda's hatred is aroused and she vows vengeance against her sister-in-law.

Without her husband's knowledge Emily returns to the stage, hoping to raise the needed $5,000. She nurses Neal by day and appears at the theater at night. Her husband, as he begins to recover, grows suspicious of his wife's absences at night. Leaving his sick bed, he finds a note from Douglass Stevens to Wanda making an assignation. The note is addressed "My Dearest" and the artist supposes it intended for his wife. Wanda helps the suspicion along. Unseen, the artist, when he creeps back into bed, secrets a revolver under the bedclothes. Then he awaits the return of Emily to kill her. When she appears he pulls the gun to fire but collapses from weakness as he tries to take aim. Emily, supposing her husband's act to be due to anger at her return to the stage, leaves him.

After weeks of illness, Neal recovers and resumes painting or tries to. He cannot paint, and decides to see Emily. Going to the apartments of Douglass Stevens, where he supposes he will find her, he surprises his sister with the society man. Wanda explains that she came to try and get Emily to return to Neal, but Douglass tired of his intrigue and anxious to get rid of her, tells the artist the truth. Neal hunts up his wife, asks her forgiveness and Emily kisses him as the scene fades out.

HER FATHER'S GOLD (Thanhouser—Five Parts—May 11).—The cast: Reporter (Harris Gordon); His Sweetheart (Barbara Gilroy); Crook (William Burt); Lady Crook (Louise Emerald Bates).

"Beware of the water devil." That was what the editor said to the star reporter as he sent him off to Florida to investigate the mysterious water denizen that was causing a panic among the residents on the shores of Crystal Lake. The reporter laughed; he was not a bit worried about the water devil; for his assignment was taking him to the spot where his sweetheart lived and where he suspected a great treasure in gold bullion that had been stolen from her father was buried.

Four crooks had stolen the gold from the mine of his sweetheart's father in Mexico and had carried it by boat to Florida, where one of them had double-crossed his pals, marooned them on an island in a lake, buried the gold and went North, expecting to join his wife and disappear with her, returning to Florida later for the gold; but the other crooks got away sooner than he expected, followed him North and besieged him in his own house. Cut off from all help, he wrote a note to his wife. He also drew a map telling where he had hidden the treasure, painted it over with blue watercolor and hung it on his wall just before the avengers broke in.

In the fight that followed he was blinded and mortally wounded and was taken to the hospital. The wife of one of the crooks followed him there, knowing that he was blind, and pretending to be his wife, tried to get the secret of the treasure, but failed. Later he died after saying to his wife, who came at last: "The blue picture—the blue picture."

Being out of money and unable to solve the mystery of the blue picture, the wife wrote to the mine owner, offering to divide the gold if he could help her locate it. The owner was away, and before his daughter could answer the letter the crooks managed to do away with the writer of it and carried off the blue picture, which they suspected contained the clue.

It is at the scene of the killing that the reporter meets the mine owner's daughter and falls in love with her. It is there, too, that the reporter finds a fragment of the blue picture and suspects its importance, chiefly from the efforts of the wife of the sole surviving crook to steal it from him.

He lets her steal it at last, and then follows her and finds the blue picture in the shack in Florida where she lives with her husband. This shack is on the banks of the lake where the water devil moves and has his being. Hesitating to carry off the picture, the reporter photographs it, only to find out later that blue (the picture is blue) is non-actinic and does not photograph. His sweetheart, who develops the film for him, comforts him for his failure. They throw aside the film as useless—they had hoped the pictured scene would give them the location of the gold. The film falls into the hands of the woman who now has the picture, and she finds out that the writing and the plan giving the secret has photographed through the blue and can be read by the aid of a magnifying glass. But before she can take the secret to her husband and with him find and get away with the gold, the daughter of the rightful owner of the gold comes upon her, takes the film from her, locks her up, and gets to the reporter with the glad tidings that at last she knows where the stolen gold is buried.

Unluckily, the imprisoned woman's husband is with the reporter when the girl brings the news, and he offers to take the pair to the island where the gold is buried, in his boat, and help them to dig it up. All this he does, and then he calmly tells them that the gold is his and they are going to die and be buried in the hole from which the gold was taken. Just at this moment, when the ruffian, standing in the gold-ladened boat, raises his rifle and is about to shoot, from the water behind the boat rises the water devil, of whom much had been told, but of whose real existence few people had been convinced. It carries off the would-be murderer, and the girl, happy in having restored to her father his lost gold, finds still greater happiness in the life-long love of the young reporter, whose bride she consents to be.

insists that her husband have a title, so her father brings her to the office of the matrimonial agent, and puts an order in for a Count.

Bleary and Weary, a couple of tramps, awake one morning and as they are hungry and broke, they hold up the first ones they see. This happens to be a Count Bonehead and his valet. They take their clothes when they find out that the Count is also broke. Later, they see the sign of the matrimonial agent. Entering, they are informed that a Count is in demand, so they are brought to the home of Madge. There they are almost discovered as impostors, through the odd things that they do. However, all arrangements are made for the wedding to take place the morning following. Being broke, they are forced to lodge in a stable that night. In the morning, as payment for the lodging, they are forced to clean a horse, and are doing this while the guests and minister await them at the home of Madge.

The real Count and valet awake from sleeping on the ground all night, and start up the street. They arrive at the stable at the moment of the leaving of the tramps. There is a battle from which the Count and valet come out second best. The tramps hurry to the home of Madge. The ceremony is almost over when the Count and valet arrive at the house. The tramps are exposed. Madge wants a title anyhow, and as the real Count wants her money they are married. The tramps on the outside are eating a long deferred meal.

BUNGLING BILL'S DREAM (May 7).—The cast: Bungling Bill (Paddy McQuire); King Neptune (Lauritano); his daughter (Rena Rogers); her lover (Arthur Moon). Directed by Jack Dillon. Scenario by R. A. Dillon.

Bungling Bill dreams that he is chased by the police for a recent burglary and making good his escape he falls to sleep on the beach, where he dreams and later wakes to find some nymphs of the sea dancing around him. King Neptune, Ruler of the Sea, has a beautiful daughter, and when Bill sees her he attempts to flirt with her, but meets retribution at the hands of her lover, who has been expelled from the tribe because of his attention to Neptune's Daughter.

Pirates later attack the island, and with plans they go to the hiding place of Neptune's gold, and are about to leave with it, when the Sweetheart of Neptune's Daughter asserts his right to marry her by driving the pirates off single-handed. This wins him the favor of Neptune and they go down in the sea for a wedding among the fish, but before going Neptune discovers the perfidy of Bill, when, while on a short visit, he placed Bill on his throne.

Bill used this position to purloin some gold, and when he is later found with it, he is forced to escape from the island in the Pirates' boat. Awaking in his dingy room he finds it all a dream and is very happy as his many trials and tribulations were entailed with the hardest knocks he has yet encountered in his bungling career.

THANHOUSER.

THE SPIRIT OF '61 (Three Parts—May 4).—The cast: Grocer (J. H. Gilmour); His Granddaughter (Grace De Carlton); Mail Carrier (George Marlo); Head of Gang (Samuel Niblack); Owner of Mine (Charles Turner).

The men of Rhyolite mine struck, not for more wages, but against the ill treatment accorded them by an arrogant superintendent. They learned that their places were to be filled by strikebreakers, and reluctantly but firmly they took up the gage of battle against the incoming strikebreakers. The old grocer tried pacific words; they were unheeded; then he sent a message to the owner of the mine—a man with whom he had fought side by side at Casper's Ferry—and begged him for the sake of the old days, to keep the strikebreakers away from the camp and come himself instead and save the situation.

At this juncture the lawless element of the camp seized a car of explosives belonging to the mine, and this car they designed to run down the grade onto the main line and wreck the train bearing the strikebreakers when it arrived at the station. Their plans were well laid, and, but for the accident of a riderless horse attracting the notice of the old grocer, would undoubtedly have succeeded. When nearly time for the train to arrive, the old grocer determined to go alone to the station and do his best on the side of law and order. He took from his old war chest an old-fashioned pistol. Then he donned the coat of his beloved uniform. Then he kissed his granddaughter and silenced her importunity, and started out for the scene of the coming battle.

Just outside the door of his store the old grocer saw the riderless horse of the carrier of the mail—the youthful wooer of his granddaughter. Imagining, and rightly, that some harm had come to the young man the grocer mounted the animal and did some rapid fire investigating. He discovered the youth had been injured by the plotters—and thus he learned for the first time of the plot. Horrified he dashed to the siding where the dynamite car was lying, and got there just in time to prevent its being sent rolling down into the train just coming in on the main line.

While the old grocer held the gang from their purpose, the train came unharmed into the station. To the surprise of the assembled miners no strikebreakers alighted from it. Only one man disembarked—the owner of the mine. The owner was greeted by his men, a few words of explanation were exchanged.

Then to the station came the grocer, panting from his strenuous occupation of the past few minutes. The big man of mining interests advanced and respectfully saluted the humble grocer. The miners stared open mouthed, but the astonishment was allayed when the mine owner explained that the despised grocer was the man responsible for the saving of the day. The men were also informed that the objectionable super was their superintendent no longer, and that his place was now offered to the man who had saved the town—the grocer of Rhyolite. Then romance had its inning. The youthful lover, battered, yet still in the lists, renewed his suit of the old man's granddaughter, and the grocer whimsically ordered the girl to accept, in the hope that they would establish a home where he could go and find a haven in the days to come when he had "grown old."

WHEN SHE PLAYED BROADWAY (Two Parts—May 9).—The cast: The girl (Gladys Hulette); ranch owner (Howard M. Mitchell); backer of the show (Daniel Leighton); stage manager (Ernest Howard); the Mexican (Hector Dion).

They met out in the West. The man was a ranch owner, and the girl, when he first saw her, was a waitress in the only hotel in a large nearby town. She had been with a theatrical company, but it failed, leaving her stranded and she was glad to accept a position at any menial occupation until affairs took a turn for the better.

They became acquainted in the hotel dining room. The ranchman was seated at her table, and next to him was an offensive young drummer. The latter believed the girl was overcome by his fascinations. He finally announced that he was going to take her to a show that evening. The girl showed that his attentions were offensive, but she was not in a position to defend herself. The ranchman, however, came to her assistance, and compelled the drummer to actually eat the theater tickets which he displayed to the girl.

Acquaintance soon ripened into love, and in due time the man proposed. The girl loved him—she admitted that—but she was still bound by the fascinations of the stage and wanted another chance. The man vainly pleaded with her, and whatever chances he might have had was overcome by the arrival of a telegram offering her an engagement with a company en tour, which had almost an absolute certainty of going into the New York City district within a short time. She accepted, and the man said that inside of a year he would go East and claim her.

The company finally reached Broadway, but the girl soon grew to hate the life of the stage. The backer of the organization fell madly in love with her and forced his attentions upon her. She eluded him for a time, but finally one evening when he made his way into her dressing room, she ordered him out, and he told her with a sneer: "If that's the way you are going to act, you can take your two weeks' notice now." So she knew that her career with that particular organization was almost at an end.

The girl went on that evening in the most unhappy frame of mind, but her troubles were not over. The man who had annoyed her made several visits to a nearby saloon and returned to the stage in an ugly frame of mind. When she came off the stage he was standing in the entrance, and refused to make way for her when she tried to pass him. He reached over and brutally slapped her in the face.

Although she did not know it at the time, the man from the West was in the house. He arrived in the city that very day, reached her boarding house too late to see her, and determined to witness the play. It was a very successful attraction, and he was forced to take a box seat, and from it he could see what was going on in the wings. He was a witness of the brutality to which the girl was subjected and leaped upon the stage, caught the man by the collar and announced to the surprised audience: "This cur has just struck a lady. He is now going to apologize to her on his knees."

The drunken bully was cowed, and did as he requested. By the time the officers of the law arrived the incident was over, the apology being completed, and the man who made it having been kicked off the stage. The ranchman was about to make his exit with the girl when a yell from the property man attracted his attention and he saw three big policemen rushing into the entrance right behind the property man. The latter was alert, however, and yelled to the girl to "get on the trap." She understood, dragged her preserver there, the property man pushed the lever and the young couple vanished under the stage just as the policemen hurried upon it. The trap was slammed shut in their faces. It was some time before the property man was able to open it for them, and he managed to arrange it so that they were on their knees upon the trap, when it suddenly plunged them into the cellar below. They got close behind the fugitives and saw them enter a limousine and drive away. The policemen, accompanied by the stage man, followed in another car. A number of blocks away the policemen overhauled the limousine and found it empty. As it happened the young couple had swung out of the car as it turned the corner and hidden in a doorway.

After they were off, the young man glanced at the door and discovered that the house was the home of a minister. He produced a marriage license from his pocket, told the girl he believed they got off at just the right place. She agreed with him and the two entered the house and were married.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 33, Charleston, S. C. (April 26).—Charleston, largest of cities in South Carolina, and next to Atlanta Ga., the most important city in the South, with its wonderful harbor, great docks, from which are exported large quantities of cotton, rice, phosphates and general merchandise, is shown in this picture. Interesting points visited in this interesting scenic are Fort Sumter, where the first gun of the Civil War was fired, the Naval Station. Military Academy, and a trip to St. Michael's Church, originally built in 1752-61. Harry Palmer's popular komic kartoons complete in the reel.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 34 (May 3).—Yosemite Valley, with its beautiful scenery, its wonderful waterfalls, its magnificent natural grandeur and its unequalled animal preserves, is the subject of this release of the "See America First" series. The National Park and the various landmarks are shown to the spectator, and the wild animals, that once held undisputed sway, are shown in their native haunts.

"Estelle and Her Movie Hero," an animated cartoon, from the pen of Harry Palmer, forms the latter half of the reel.

REEL LIFE (No. 1—May 7).—This release is comprised of entertaining features. Included in the reel are new and exclusive pictures of daring Belgian cavalrymen performing wonderful feats of horsemanship; butterfly life, showing the metamorphosis of the worm into a beautiful butterfly, and an alligator farm in operation, the picture showing the progress of the 'gator from birth to the time it becomes the covering of a suitcase.

FALSTAFF.

THE KIDDIE'S KAPTAIN KIDD (May 8).—The cast: Tired Business Man (Riltv Chamberlin); His son (Walter Hiers); Stenographer (Louise Emerald Bates).

The "tired business man" believed that the time had come for him to take a rest. His only near relative was his son, and he determined to turn over all his property to the young man, and, as he expressed it, "be a pensioner upon your bounty."

The father moved to a little fishing village, and much to his surprise he was soon destitute, for the son refused to send him any money. From this fate, however, he was saved by the resourcefulness of his bright young stenographer, who liked the father and loathed the son.

The young woman went to the old man's home and promised him she would establish his credit on a firm foundation. She did as she said, much to the surprise of the man, who could not understand why every one began to treat him nicely, and why he could buy anything he wanted on credit.

The fact was that the girl had spread the rumor that he had found the treasure of Captain Kidd, being innocently aided by two children, whom she found reading a story of the infamous pirate. These youngsters told every one in the village that they had seen the old man dig up "Oh, so much gold!" and no one suspected the truth—that the gold was clams, gathered by the poor, friendless, old man.

The news reached the son, and anxious to get the gold, he believed he would regain the confidence of his father by returning the business. He did so just as the old man left "the "treasure" in a vault of the local bank. Later, at the suggestion of the girl, he gave the key to the vault to his son, and the heartless youth went to claim the gold that was now his.

When he reached the bank he found the officials glad to see him, for they imagined that "something was dead" in his vault. They opened it, and discovered that their suspicions were justified—something was dead. In fact, several bushels of claims were dead, for they comprised the treasure planted by the girl to "kid" the youth who had selfishly planned to let his father starve.

FREDDIE'S FRIGID FINISH (May 13).—The cast: Freddie (Jay C. Yorke); His Sweetheart (Frances Keyes); Daisy (Elsie Jordan); The Snow Man (Charlie Emerson).

Freddie's love affair was most exciting; his sweetheart was jealous, and her father had a hasty temper, and a habit of "hinting" that Freddie was in the way, by kicking him out of the house whenever he found him there. In time Freddie got used to the old man, and even tried to excuse him by saying that he was "good hearted, although excitable." But fresh trouble arose when his sweetheart's cousin came to pay the family a visit. Freddie was politely attentive to the new arrival and his sweetheart misconstrued it. There was a quarrel, ending in the girl wishing she was dead, while Freddie went away half inclined to be a soldier.

That night the sweetheart had a wonderful dream. She thought she read the advertisement of a hpynotist of renown, who guaranteed to supply life partners for a fee. She made an appointment and while waiting for him to call, she and her cousin constructed a snow man in the back yard. Then the professor appeared and turned the snow man into a live man, but right under her eyes the wicked cousin stole him away. Later she met her Freddie, and they were happy until the professor unexpectedly appeared. He demanded the payment of his fee, and when refused he turned Freddie into a snow man, just as his sweetheart embraced him. And then—she awoke.

Fortunately she realized that dreams go by contraries, and as the dream Freddie had a frigid finish, the live one naturally met with a warm and cordial reception when he called to apologize to the girl he loved.

THE OTHER MAN (Keystone—Two Parts—April 16).—The cast: Roscoe Arbuckle, Irene Wallace, Horace J. Haine, Lillian Shaffner, Al St. John, Minta Durfee, William Jefferson and Joe Bordeau.

Roscoe writes of his love and announces that he will call on Irene with the ring and ask her parents' consent to their marriage. Father and mother are willing, but decide to give Roscoe a scare before accepting him for a son-in-law. Father assumes a gruff attitude but melts at the right time and Roscoe departs in high glee to prepare for a masked ball at which the engagement is to be announced. Irene jokes him about his size but he warns her that he will fool her by the mystery of his disguise.

William Collier in The No-Good Guy

FOR the week of May 7th the TRIANGLE-Ince Picture will be William Collier in "The No-Good Guy." This play, a five-reel comedy-drama, is the first of its kind in which this famous Broadway star has ever appeared, and the result is a full hour and a half of comedy so clever that your patrons will find themselves slapping each other on the shoulder in mutual admiration of the amusing situations.

"That's the funniest picture I ever saw," is the way they will describe this latest TRIANGLE PLAY.

William Collier a Broadway Star

For years William Collier has been famous on Broadway for his droll manner, his clean comedy, and his faculty for drawing a laugh from an entire house without cracking a smile himself. All of this ability is intensified and magnified on the screen.

Here he is not limited by the width or depth of a wooden stage—by three or four acts each of a single scene. There are hundreds of different scenes in "The No-Good Guy" and the action is quickly carried all over the city, indoors and out—from a thrilling barroom fight in one section to a mad automobile ride through a plate glass window in another.

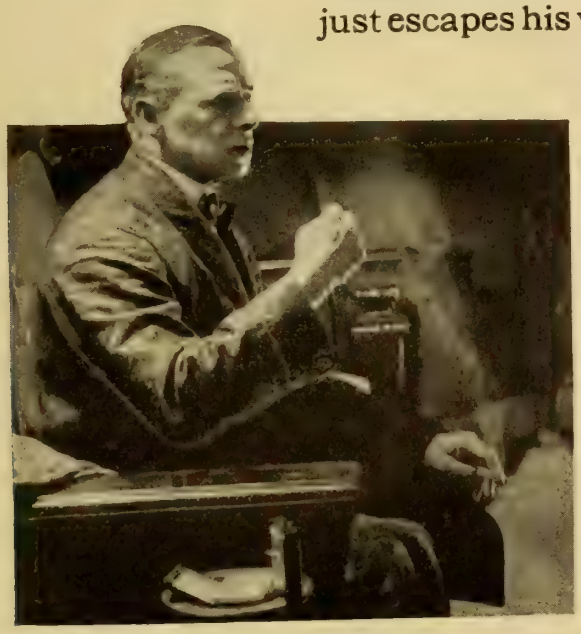
All who have seen Collier know how comical he really can be and need not be told that he will produce more laughter than has been heard for many a day.

TRIANGLE

TRIANGLE PLAYS

William Collier Was Drunk

That means he was funnier than ever---that your patrons will find it impossible to stop laughing for a moment. Just imagine the comical picture of Collier trying without success to climb into bed as it rolls and reels and just escapes his wavering clutches--wine and liquor glasses moving just out of reach as he endeavors to clutch them to quench his never ending thirst.



Seldom indeed has there been a piece of comedy-drama so truly amusing, so highly diverting and so intensely interesting.

Douglas Fairbanks in "The Good-Bad Man"

Then the TRIANGLE-Fine Arts Picture for the same week will be Douglas Fairbanks in "The Good-Bad Man," which presents a combination of talent which is seldom equalled. Douglas Fairbanks with his enthusiasm, his personality and individuality, his swift-moving action plays the lead, while dainty, demure Bessie Love plays the principal feminine part. It's a combination rarely seen—a combination sure to be appreciated by exhibitors and the public alike.

On the way home in his automobile Roscoe drives over a cliff and is taken to a hospital. There he is, out of his mind, as the guests begin to assemble at the ball. At about this time, however, a well-fed tramp is put to work in the kitchen by the cook, who is short of help and has a large party to feed. Irene wanders into the kitchen and immediately singles out the tramp as her Roscoe. The stranger permits himself to be led to the buffet and later does a dance for the guests. One of the professional dancers is a crook, whose companion robs as she entertains. But he bungles a job and is caught. Before he bounds away from his pursuers after slipping the necklace to his confederate.

At this point the real Roscoe arrives, clad in a hospital night shirt. He has awakened to find himself surrounded by beautiful nurses but has fled at the suggestion of an operation. He leads the chasé after the woman while the tramp is buffeted about during the pursuit of the man through the grounds. Weary from his exertions, the tramp sits down near a gutter spout just as Roscoe breaks into the room above. To avoid being caught with the goods, the woman crook drops the necklace down the spout. The tramp picks it up and gets the reward. As the returned Roscoe is being warmly welcomed by Irene, his double and Joe, the tramp's pal, split fifty-fifty on the reward and hunt for the nearest restaurant.

CIVILIZATION'S CHILD (Kay Bee—Five Parts—April 23).—The cast: William H. Thompson, Anna Lehr, Jack Standing, Dorothy Dalton, Clyde Benson, J. P. Lockney and J. Barney Sherry.

From her life of freedom in the mountains little Berna is summoned by her uncle, Peter Saramoff, to live with him in Kiev, Russia, and absorb some of the civilization which he thinks her age requires her to have. Her first taste of civilization is a Cossack massacre, in which her uncle and aunt are killed. Berna flees with other refugees to America and a distant relative, who runs a prosperous sweat shop under political protection of Boss McManus. She is at her machine when the boss visits the shop, notices her beauty and orders that she be sent to him.

This is the beginning of a new phase of civilization. Berna is soon earning her living on the streets. One evening she is in a resort to which a young Russian violinist has come to play. She is entranced by his music and goes to him. She helps him to study and improve his art, they are married and a baby is born. The violinist now plays in fashionable restaurants and in one of them the daughter of Boss McManus hears him. She invites him to her home and confesses her love for him before she knows he is married. Even then she persists and asks her father's help. The boss is now a judge, and, as he never denied his daughter anything, he agrees to fix it. Berna is "framed up" and sued for divorce.

The case comes up before Judge McManus, and when Berna faces the man who caused her downfall she makes such a scene that she is sent to prison. When she comes out her husband has obtained a divorce and custody of their child. Blind with rage, Berna seeks revenge. She seeks out McManus in his home, at the point of a revolver forces him to listen to her denunciation and then kills him.

SUNSHINE DAD (Fine Arts—Five Parts—April 23).—The cast: De Wolf Hopper, Fay Tincher, Chester Withey, Max Davidson, Raymond Wells, Eugene Pallette and Jewel Carmen.

The theft of a sacred diamond band from a Hindoo shrine starts the action. Count Kotschkoff, who has stolen the band, soon finds that the Mystic Seer and the Mystic Doer are hot on his trail. To thwart them he asks the Widow Marrimore to keep the jewels for him. She wears the band as a garter and at a dance it drops off, to be picked up by Alonz Evergreen, a middle-aged actor, who still aspires to be the juvenile. He does no work and lives on the daily touches he is able to obtain from his hard-working son.

Evergreen, who believes himself in love with the widow, reads an advertisement for the return of the jewels. He aims to increase his favor with the widow by sending back the band. He has wrapped it up in an affectionate note when his son's fiancee enters the office on her way home from a shopping tour. When she departs she takes all the bundles in sight. Alonzo discovers his loss and goes in mad pursuit. In her home the young woman has decided that her beloved is untrue, and has sent back the diamond band and her engagement ring. A distracted lover soon reaches the house to find his father engaged in a frantic attempt to verify his suspicion that the young woman is wearing a costly garter.

The gems regained, Evergreen races to the hotel where the widow lives. The Mystic Seer and the Mystic Doer are on his track, but he eludes them and delivers the band. When the Seer and Doer break in and explain their errand the widow goes to the hiding place, but the jewels are gone. The Count has recovered them. The widow is taken to the shrine and tied to a stake and threatened with death. The stake is near a cage in which a lion is confined. Slowly the gate is lifted and the lion is about to dart out when Alonzo arrives and releases his adored one. There is a thrilling chase and Leo, the lion, finally stalks the widow to a bath room. There Alonzo rescues her under the nose of the beast, the count is captured and the band recovered.

THE SNOW CURE (Keystone—Two Parts—April 23).—The cast: Ford Sterling, Fritz Schade, Marie Manley, Alice Davenport and James Donnelly.

Fritz is a henpecked husband, whose apartment is across the hall from that occupied by Ford, who has flirtatious tendencies. In fact, Ford has seen Marie in the hall and is so enamored that one day when Fritz has gone to work he throws a bouquet over the transom to Marie. But when he tries to crawl through a window he slips and hangs on the edge of the coping until Fritz returns, gets a net and catches him as he falls.

The innocent husband, not suspecting the true state of affairs, invites Ford to his apartment to have a drink. When the new acquaintance tries to pass a note under the table to Marie the eyes of Fritz are opened as he reads. Such an uproar follows that all hands are thrown out. To escape publicity Fritz and Marie seek an isolated mountain resort. Unfortunately Ford occupies a cabin in the same resort. He goes rabbit hunting, sees what he thinks is real game and shoots. His target is a rabbit skin cap worn by Fritz, who feigns death.

Ford now places himself under the care of a quack who has a marvelous cure for cripples. He turns loose a hungry bear to pursue his patients through the mountains. The bruin chases Ford, who is clad in a bathing suit, and forces him to take refuge in the cabin where Fritz and Marie are staying. When husband returns the shooting begins. Bloodshed is prevented by the timely arrival of the quack, whose explanation settles everything.

THE IRON CLAW, NO. 10 "THE LIVING DEAD" (Pathe—Two Parts—May 1).—David Manley, Enoch Golden's secretary, pretends that he has been killed by the minute poisoned arrows with which, in the previous episode, he was wounded by a lieutenant of Jules Legar, the Iron Claw. Legar, foe of Golden and all that is his, goes to the Golden mausoleum to solve the mystery. Manley and the police trap him, but he blows up the mausoleum. He and Manley, badly bruised, make their separate escape. Legar encounters Margery, Golden's daughter, in her stalled auto, but the Laughing Mask, terror of evil-doers, saves her life. The Mask pursues Legar and they meet on the upper girders of a nearby steel plant. The Laughing Mask falls and Legar escapes. The next episode is entitled "The Saving of Dan O'Mara."

TROUBLE ENOUGH! (Mittenthal—May 1).—Heinie and Louie awake in their improvised scups, and Louie, acting on the principle "first up best fed," makes a raid on the morning's milk. Needless to say he meets with considerable opposition from Heinie, and the resultant "spilled milk" is something that less-hardened scoundrels might cry over. But Heinie and Louie have a little account to settle with the world which, according to them, is in their debt for a "lifing," and go out to make an adjustment.

Flossie Coughdrop, also out, is attacked by some roughs whom our heroes disperse. The boys are taken to Flossie's home where they are introduced to Floss' friend, and the four pair off in the usual sentimental way. Their sentiment is interrupted, however, by the college boy friends of the girls who are worsted by Heinie and Louie with the aid of a stuffed porcupine. That night, aided and abetted by other college boys, the two rah! rah! Johnnies kidnap the luckless swains, wrap them in the Ostermoor and drag them from the end of an automobile

SIBERIA, THE VAST UNKNOWN, NO. 6 (Pathe—May 1).—The Tunguses, a rugged Mongolian people, natives of Siberia's interior, are first shown. They are an intelligent, cleanly people in their habits and in many respects the best of the Siberian native tribes. One of their social customs is of smoking a "family pipe," which, as in the case of the American Indians, is passed from one to another. Many of the Siberian tribes have been converted to Christianity. Here is shown a scene of a religious service performed by a Russian priest. Another scene shows great herds of reindeers, upon which animals the Tunguses are almost entirely dependent for food, clothing and household implements.

HOW SMALL SEA CREATURES BREED (Pathe—On the same reel as the foregoing).—One of the subjects of the other half of this film is the crab, about a million of whose eggs are found under the stomach of the mother. Then comes the sea worm, known as the phyllodoce, which swims by means of its vibratory cilia or "hairs." The adult phyllodoce, here shown, lives on the sands, and moves by means of the "feet" on each ring of its body, like a caterpillar. Then comes our friend, the oyster, shown in embryo form, but, nevertheless, encased in its shell.

SHERLOCK HOLMES (Seven Parts—May 15).—The cast: Sherlock Holmes (William Gillette); Alice Faulkner (Marjorie Kay); Professor Moriarty, Emperor of Crooks (Ernest Maupain); Dr. Watson (Edward Fielding); Benjamin Forman (Stewart Robbins); Sir Edward Leighton (Hugh Thompson); Baron von Stalburg (Ludwig Kriess); James Larrabee (Mario Majeroni); Sidney Prince (William Postance); Craigin (Chester Beery); Tim leary (Frank Hamilton); "Lightfoot" McTague (Fred Malatesta); Parsons (Norrie); Madge Larrabee (Grace Reals); Therese, a maid (Miss Ball); "Billy" (Burford Hampden); A "Suffraget" (Marion Skinner). Directed by Arthur Bertelet.

Sherlock Holmes, while out for a stroll with Dr. Watson, meets a beautiful woman. They are mutually attracted, but pass without recognition. Later Holmes is engaged by a noble family to recover papers involving the family in a scandal, and which are in the hands of a woman, whose sister was ruined by one of the members of the noble family. She is holding them in order to get revenge.

Holmes discovers that the woman who holds these papers is the one that he had passed in the street, and to whom he was so singularly attracted. He tricks her out of the papers, but returns them to her, telling her that he believes that she will eventually give them to him of her own accord. He points out to her how much better it is to let the matter rest than to connect her own name with scandal in order to get revenge, not only on the man who caused her sister's unhappiness, but on the innocent members of his family.

Holmes then goes to Watson's house, where he sends a note for the woman who holds the papers to meet him there. His cab driver, who is waiting outside, is the leader of the band of crooks. Holmes has penetrated his disguise, although the crook does not know this. Holmes brings him into the house under a pretext, and there slips handcuffs on him.

He has also sent for the nobleman to come to Watson's house. He has Dr. Watson place the woman in a rear room so that she can overhear his conversation. He then turns over a package of blank papers to the nobleman, pretending he thinks they are the right ones. The nobleman berates him for having been duped Sherlock admits it, and cries that he is ruined. The woman then rushes into the room and through her love for Sherlock gives up the real papers. The nobleman leaves satisfied and as Watson shows him to the door, Holmes slips his arms about the woman, and tells her of his love.

THE GILDED SPIDER (Five Parts—May 8).—The cast: Leonita and Elisa (Louise Lovely); Giovanni (Lon Chaney); Rosa (Lule Warrenton); Cyrus Kirkham (Gilmore Hammond); Mrs. Kirkham (Marjorie Ellison); Burton Armitage (Hayward Mack); Paul Winston (Jay Belosca). Scenario by Ida May Park. Produced by Joseph De Grasse.

While cruising on his yacht on the Mediterranean Cyrus Kirkham, a dissolute American millionaire, sees a dancing girl whom he covets, kidnaps, and takes on board his yacht. To escape his unwelcome attentions, the girl jumps overboard and is drowned.

Her husband determines to be avenged and with his baby daughter and his mother comes to America. Giovanni is a molder of miniature, cheap statuettes, and as he passes through the streets selling his wares, he keeps constant lookout for Kirkham. He finally locates him at his home.

Kirkham has married a society woman who devotes her time to charity work and has founded a mission house in the Italian quarter. Here

Don't Let the Airdomes
Paralyze Your Business

There Need Be No Off Season at Your Theatre

Airdomes in the photoplay business came into being because there appeared to be a strong demand for moving pictures during the summer months—but an equally strong demand for the pure fresh air which the average theatre fails to supply when the thermometer starts to climb. Airdomes are a makeshift at best, as midsummer mosquitoes and rough, hard benches are apt to temper the pleasure of the audience.

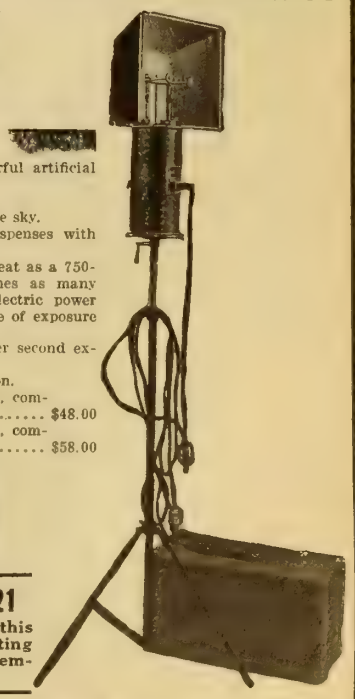
NORTHERN LIGHT

10,000 and 14,000 Candle Power White Flame Self Adjusting Portable Arc for Home or Studio Use



Pronounced by Experts the most wonderful artificial photographic light yet produced.
Better than direct Sunlight.
Almost duplicates June Sunlight plus blue sky.
Blends with daylight and positively dispenses with makeup of any sort.
Its photographic value is 160 times as great as a 750-watt tungsten lamp—consequently 20 times as many tungsten lamps and 6 times as much electric power would be required to obtain the same time of exposure as required by one Northern Light.
Produced fully timed negatives on 16 per second exposures even with close up subjects.
The photographic sensation of the season.

frequently comes Giovanni's mother and daughter, Elisa. There is among Kirkham's dissolute companions Burton Armitage, who has befriended Paul Winston, a struggling young artist. Winston has found upon the streets an Italian girl who has posed for him. When the picture was finished he lost all trace of her. While calling upon Mrs. Kirkham at the mission house he finds his lost model in Giovanni's daughter and prevails upon her to resume sittings for him. Mrs. Kirkham gives to Elisa's grandmother her own card as assuritage that she will be responsible for the care of Elisa. This card Rosa, Elisa's grandmother, takes home to Giovanni, who, upon seeing it, determines the form upon which his vengeance shall take. He hired a gang of thugs to kidnap Mrs. Kirkham while he goes to Kirkham to demand ransom. The plan is foiled by the arrival of Winston at the mission house just at the time Mrs. Kirkham is being kidnapped. He follows and calls the police. They capture the gang and liberate Mrs. Kirkham.

Meanwhile Elisa has been enticed by trickery to Kirkham's house, where a party given by Kirkham to his dissolute companions is going on. Giovanni arrives at the Kirkham home during the progress of this party. When Kirkham beholds Giovanni, the shock of fright so effects his heart that he drops dead.

Giovanni now wildly aroused for further vengeance, dashes upstairs to where the party is being held on the gaily lighted roof. Here Giovanni beholds his daughter dancing, and the vivid recollections of her mother's tragic death quite unbalances his mind, and before he can be prevented, Giovanni jumps from the roof and is killed. These two sudden deaths clear the way for a happy ending to the story.

WORLD-EQUITABLE.

THE FEAST OF LIFE (Five parts—Paragon —May 1).—The cast: Aurora Fernandez (Clara Kimball Young); Senora Fernandez (Mrs. E. M. Kimball); Father Venture (E. M. Kimball); Don Armada (Paul Capellani); Celida (Doris Kenyon); Pedro (Robert Frazer). Scenario by Farnces Marion. Directed by Albert Capellani.

Aurora Fernandez, a poor Cuban girl, is persuaded against her will to become betrothed to Don Armada, a wealthy Cuban. She loves Pedro, a young fisherman, who lives with his uncle, Father Venture, and his sister, Celida, who has been secretly stealing to Don Armada's villa, but is cast off by him on his engagement to Aurora.

Longing for a sight of Pedro, disguised as a dancing girl, Aurora goes to an inn where Pedro comes with other fishermen for a night's revelry. He does not recognize her as his "Lady of the Lily" as he calls her, but falls a victim to the charms of the dancing girl. Celida, dying of a broken heart, confesses to Pedro and Father Venture, and Pedro, to avenge Celida, summons all the fishermen in the village and leads them against Armada in whose villa the wedding feast is being held. The guests fly in terror and Armada is wounded. Aurora alone remains undaunted, and Pedro, finding her, recognizes not only his love of the tavern, but Aurora, and that she is the wife of Armada.

Notwithstanding her pleadings not to kill her husband, he is about to strike when he sees that Don Armada is blind. This awakens his pity and he leaves the house. Don Armada has an operation performed on his eyes which proves successful, but the physicians warn him that any shock may result in blindness for life. Aurora, in the meantime, has been carrying on clandestine meetings with Pedro and Armada, hoping to find out who Aurora's lover is, tells her that the operation has been a failure. He intercepts a note from Pedro and, locking Aurora in her room, stabs Pedro. He then returns to Aurora and she discovers that he has tricked her. He tells her what he has done, but the shock kills him. Aurora escapes and finds Pedro still alive. She takes him home where she watches over him, and the crisis over, the lovers are reunited.

METRO PICTURES CORP

THE COME BACK (Five Parts—April 24).—The cast: Burt Ridgeway (Harold Lockwood); Patta Heberton (May Allison); Randall Ridgway, Burt's father (George Henry); Biggs, secretary to board of directors (Howard Truesdell); Mac Heberton, Patta's uncle (Lester Cuneo); Owl Woltert, a shyster lawyer (Bert Starkey); "Bully Bill," the camp foreman (Mitchell Lewis); Donna Estelle (Clara Selwynne. Written and irected by Fred J. Balshofer.

Randall Ridgeway, a lumber king, learns that one of his contracting companies in northern Maine is carrying on crooked transactions. His son, Burt, overhears his father discussing the matter and asks if he might go and investigate. His father refuses, thinking his son too young and not strong enough physically to deal with the woodsmen. Mac Heberton, who controls the camp in Maine, hears of Ridgeway's suspicions. He compels his bookkeeper to arrange a double set of books, under penalty of exposing him for a murder he saw him commit.

Burt Ridgeway falls in with a fast crowd and meets a professional dancer named Lotus de Valois. Under the spell of the girl, and the direction of her unscrpulous chaperon, Burt becomes involved financially. He goes to his father for more money. His father, fearful that his son is not improving his time, puts him to a test. He gives him $25,000 with the understanding that every time he adds another thousand to the amount he will present him with an additional $5,000.

With more funds at his disposal Burt strikes a faster pace. Lotus sees a lavaliere, valued at $14,500, which she induces Burt to buy for her. The elder Ridgeway becomes discouraged when he does not see any business activity on the part of his son. Hoping to interest and assist him he takes a three days' option of some real estate where there is a chance to make a big coup. The boy confesses that he cannot cover the option, as he has but $5,000 left in the bank.

That night Burt returns home intoxicated. He has words with his father, who has lost faith in him for the first time. In a rage his father orders him from home, telling him he is not "worth his salt." Burt leaves and makes straight for the lumber camp in Maine, where he hopes to rejuvenate himself. Arrived there, after many severe trials, he meets Patta Heberton, a pretty girl of the woods, and the ward of Mac Heberton. They become interested in each other, at their first meeting, and are engaged in pleasant conversation, when "Bully Bill," a camp foreman, observes them. "Bully Bill" is all his sobriquet implies, and he is madly in love with Patta. He challenges the stranger's right to talk to the girl, which results in a fight.

The dissipated young man from the city is like a child in the woodman's hands, and he is knocked cold with two sharp blows. Burt takes his beating with chagrin, but decides to remain, and obtains a position as checker. He plans to regain his strength and prowess if proper training will do it. He leaves off cigarettes and whiskey, and exercises in the open at every opportunity. On a holiday, soon afterward, when the woodsmen are gathered for a day of sports, Burt has another encounter with 'Bully Bill." He dispatches the bully with ease. For this Burt wins the admiration of the crowd and the lasting friendship of "Bully Bill,"

The following day Burt is passing the office of Mac Heberton, when a draft of wind carries a check out of the window, and at his feet. Picking it up he finds it is from a rival concern. Burt hurries inside, and backing the spineless bookkeeper up in a corner, he threatens to kill him if he does not tell him the whole truth. For the first time in the camp he discloses his identiy. The bookkeeper weakens and confesses that Heberton has been cheating his father out of thousands of dollars. Heberton comes in the door unseen, as the bookkeeper makes this statement, and with uplifted axe is about to strike Burt, when "Bully Bill" rushes in and stays his hand.

In a subseqent investigation Burt finds a will left by Patta's grandfather, in which she is named sole beneficiary of his estate on her eighteenth birthday. Heberton has kept her in ignorance of this situation, and has taken over the estate himself. Burt's father is overjoyed beyond expression when his son comes back, a new man, with the story of the arrest of Heberton and a vivid description of the girl in the woods, who is to join him soon in New York, as his life's partner.

SUN PHOTOPLAY.

A WOMAN WILLS (Five Parts—April State Rights).—The cast: Marion Duval (Elsie LeClaire); Lieutenant Menard (John Maguard); a foreign spy (Joseph Morris); the adventuress (Suzanne Armelle).

At the outbreak of the great war in Europe, Marion Duval, a mischievious schoolgirl, is infected with the patriotic fervor that swept over the European State in which she lives. She runs away from school, disguises herself in boy's clothing, and joins the Boy Scouts. In this disguise she shares with a dashing cavalry lieutenant several thrilling adventures.

In later years she makes a determined effort to renew her acquaintance with this hero of her dreams, who is still unaware of her sex. When she finally meets him once more, she finds him, now a member of his government's secret service, enmeshed in the toils of an adventuress. Taking a hand in the game, she is able to save the lieutenant from disgrace, but only after a series of stirring episodes culminating in a scene when she and the adventuress, locked together in a room, engage in a struggle for the possession of plans of importance. Naturally, her heroism is rewarded with the heart of the handsome lieutenant.

Screen Facts

S. L. Rothapfel—genius of exhibitors—chose a Minusa Gold Fibre Screen for America's Finest Photoplay Theatre—the Rialto, New York City.

Minusa Gold Fibre Screens have been installed by Mr. Rothapfel during the past year in six of his other theatres—the Knickerbocker, Academy of Music and 44th Street Theatres in New York City—the New Fenway and Boston Theatres in Boston—and the Colonial Theatre in Chicago.

The finest and best patronized theatres throughout the U. S. A. are now equipped with Minusa Gold Fibre Screens.

Ninety per cent of the biggest supply houses in the country handle Minusa Gold Fibre Screens exclusively.

When exhibitors like Mr. Rothapfel insist upon the Minusa—when Minusas are used in the finest photoplay houses everywhere—when the biggest Supply Houses handle Minusa Gold Fibre Screens exclusively—surely there must be a reason.

Get in touch with our nearest office today—send for our literature and decide the screen question for yourself.

THE FIRST IMPRESSION

When the door of your New Theater is opened you make your first impression for public approval at the box office.

Is it equipped up-to-the-minute with the latest Automaticket seller?

It drops one, two, three, four and five tickets into your patron's hand at a flash by merely pressing a button—then remember—it registers the sale of a ticket, gives accurate account and prevents the slightest error. Don't fail to see it at the shows.

Experience!!

Is easily the biggest word in the English language. It is the answer to success or failure—efficiency or incompetence!

EXPERIENCE

according to Webster, is to "know or prove by trial," and that's exactly what we have been doing in the handling of projection apparatus FOR MORE THAN TWENTY YEARS!

EXPERIENCE

has neither LENGTH, BREADTH nor DEPTH yet it can be seen—and seen quickly, too, in your purchases of projection apparatus!

Don't regard projection equipment as a mere collection of gears, cast iron, glass and sheet metal. Insist upon service—reliability—dependability—three essentials to be found only in the stable, substantial character of the house that executes your order.

Representative exhibitors of the better class everywhere confine their purchases to us—and the older, wiser and more experienced they are the more certain are we to please them.

J-M Asbestos Wood Semi-Portable Booth

When you buy a booth —make sure it's the original J-M Asbestos

—Wood or Cloth

The most important function of a moving picture booth is to minimize and localize fire risk. All other properties are secondary to positive fire protection—a protection that only nature's own fire-retardant material—J-M Asbestos—affords.

You can have this protection in the form of J-M Permanent, Semi-portable and Portable Booths.

The Permanent and Semi-portable Booths are strongly made of J-M Transite Asbestos Wood and angle iron, easily put up and quickly taken down. They are regularly supplied for permanent installation in theatres and large halls, schools and churches—highly fire resistant and insulated against electricity. Complete ventilating systems are supplied with these booths when so desired.

The Portable Booths are made of J-M Asbestos Cloth tented over an iron frame and resting on an asbestos mat. Can be set up in 20 minutes.

Made by the makers of the Original Asbestos Curtains.

The hot nights that are coming will drive people away from the movies—

Away from YOUR theatre unless you give them Good Air as well as Good Films.

You can be assured of "capacity houses" all summer if you install

"GLOBE" VENTILATORS

They draw off the close, hot, stuffy air. They operate without drafts—are absolutely noiseless—no moving parts to get out of order and they are rain proof.

Cost little to install—nothing to operate, and work effectively in all kinds of weather. The "GLOBE" is STANDARD and has been in use for over 35 years on all classes of buildings where perfect ventilation is required.

Print this in Big Type on your Bill Boards to draw the crowds this summer:

This Theatre cool and comfortable—constantly ventilated by "GLOBE" VENTILATORS

Send this coupon and find out how little it will cost to have perfect ventilation in your theatre.

New Money For Every Theatre

Even in the smallest towns, scores of motion picture theatres are making $600 yearly and over from this self-running BUTTER-KIST Pop Corn machine that stands anywhere and draws folks from all directions. Big houses making up to $3000 NET profits per year and more. We'll send you plenty of signed sales records from men on your own side of the wicket to prove it beyond a doubt.

Pay From Your Profits

One hour after this machine arrives you can start it coining money. Delivered on part payment. Balance soon paid out from Butter-Kist earnings.

Capacity 70c. to $4.00 per hour. You make 3½c. NET profit from every bag.

On the sale of only 80 bags a day you make $1000 NET per year. Theatre in Coffeyville, Kan., writes: "Average $3 NET per day."

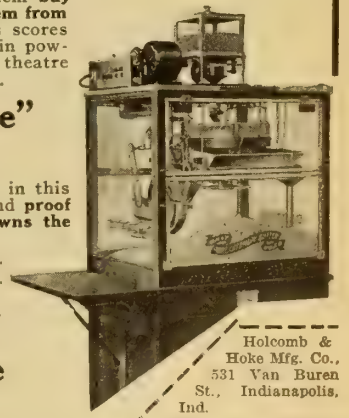
BUTTER-KIST
Pop Corn Machine

now a regular feature of theatres, stores, etc., all over America. Pops, removes the unpopped kernels, and butters evenly—with pure creamery butter. Then super-heats each fluffy white morsel to an appetizing crisp!

This process gives crackling Butter-Kist its tempting toasty flavor. Folks tell it blindfolded from all other pop corn made.

Increases Attendance

Motion of machine makes people stop and look—coaxing fragrance makes them buy—exclusive toasty flavor brings them from blocks around for more! Attracts scores who read Butter-Kist advertising in powerful magazines. Ties up your theatre with a well-known national success.



"Little Gold Mine" Book FREE!

Send the coupon today and read in this famous book the actual letters, and proof of profits from theatre men in towns the size of yours.

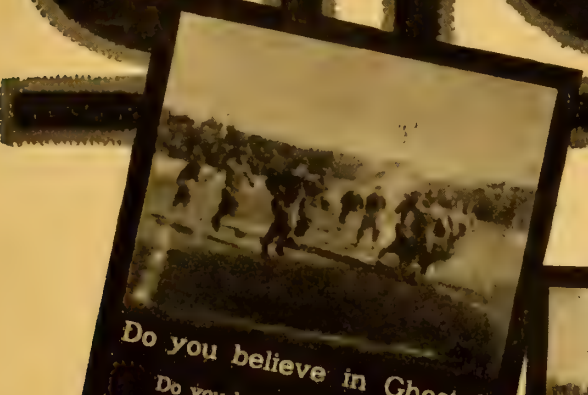
Only a Short Time Left

GHOSTS



Do you believe in Ghosts?

Do you know what a moving picture ghost is? Here is an example of a real ghost. Do your pictures look like this?

O yes, it can be focused better than that, but it won't stay focused. The arc is never still, from one moment to another. There isn't any set focal point.

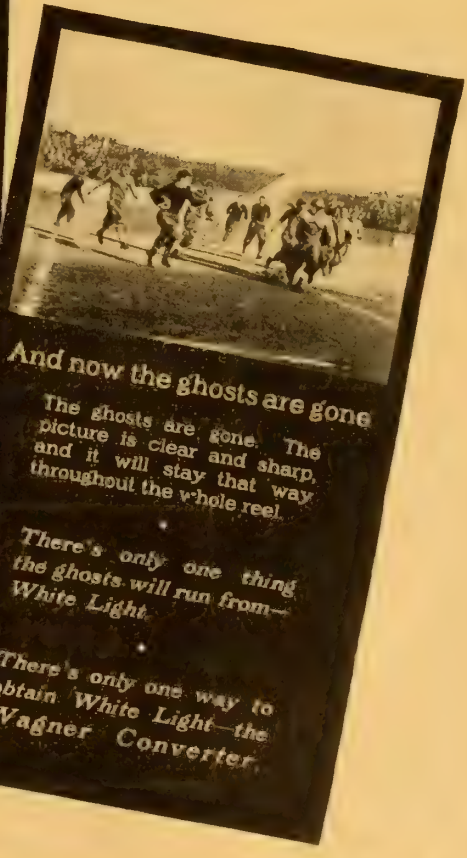
That's what alternating current does with a moving picture arc. Let's try to focus it, anyway.

Picture looks a little better

Now the picture looks a little better, but there's still something radically wrong.

Some nice, clear spots and some hazy ones, and all the focusing in the world won't correct this.

Besides, the hazy spots won't stay still. They travel around, blur the picture, injure the eyes, and distract the audience. Look at the next page and see what a picture should look like.



And now the ghosts are gone

The ghosts are gone. The picture is clear and sharp, and it will stay that way throughout the whole reel.

There's only one thing the ghosts will run from—White Light.

There's only one way to obtain White Light—the Wagner Converter.

Do You Believe In Ghosts?

Do you know what moving picture ghosts are, and how we can get rid of them?

Let us send you a booklet just off the press entitled "Ghosts."

If you are a theater owner, manager, or operator, and you have not investigated the

Wagner WHITE LIGHT Converter

you are doing yourself and your patrons an injustice. Don't fail to ask for Bulletin 10923 also. It's of interest to every moving picture man.

The lily springs up from the murky tarn, pure as chastened silver.

The Little Shepherd rose from the muck of the foul tenements as untainted as the lily of the mire.

As the lily radiated beauty and sweetness on the tainted swamp air, She spread love and sunshine amid the dank drafts reeking from the dens of vice.

It is the story of a girl's brave fight from the depths of poverty and vice to the heights of purity and success.

PEG O' THE

AGAIN

—the Universal comes to the front with another Serial smash that has awakened thousands of Exhibitors in every State in the Union.

AND WHY NOT? With a longer record for Successful Serial production, it follows as night follows day that the Universal with its colossal resources, its unlimited facilities, its Stars, producing brains and talent can and DOES produce WHAT THE PEOPLE WANT in Serial Photo-Play entertainment.

Indisputable proof of this fact evidenced by the huge number of—

Bookings Pouring In!

With such tremendous Serial successes as the "TREY O' HEARTS"—"MASTER KEY"—"LUCILLE LOVE"—"BLACK BOX"—"BROKEN COIN"—and "GRAFT," which have been and which are now being shown in all parts of the World, Exhibitors know by experience that when the Universal does it—"It's Huge, and when the Universal says it—It's true." In the "Adventures of Peg o' the Ring"—we offer a Serial new in conception, new in idea—new in swift action—new in thrills—and supreme as a straight 15 weeks' Box Office Attraction.
